It is needful to lay a thing down if we want to escape becoming its victim. If we work seven days a week, our work will become our tyrant and it will crowd out God. And thus work may destroy worship. The interests of the body may starve those of the soul. We must lay our work down and command it to wait until we have attended to something greater.

And when we have worshiped aright, we shall take up our work as a new thing. Our duty will look at us with a new face when we come to it from the presence of God. Work will have a new "feel" about it when we touch it with hands that have been lifted up in prayer and adoration.

THURSDAY, August 21. Exodus 16: 17-35. "That they may see the bread wherewith I have fed you in the wilderness." They were to keep a little of the manna in order that the remembrance of God's providence might not be lost. Generation was to hand on to generation the witness of God's grace and love. The blessings bestowed upon the fathers were to be the inspiration of their children. Every age must have its own memories of God's mercy, and must exhibit them to the wondering eyes of those who are just beginning their course.

Do we show others the bread with which we have been fed in the wilderness? Do we gather our children about us and tell them what wonderful providences were given to us in dark and trying days? There is no witness like the recital of our experiences. A mere argument might have no more weight than a feather. Merely doctrinal teaching might go in at one ear and out of the other. But an experience is vital and arresting. Produce a bit of the manna that was given in the wilderness, and the spectator becomes a communicant. The story of God's personal dealings with us is the surest way to bring the indifferent to the throne of grace.

FRIDAY, August 22. Psalm 78: 15-25. "They believed not in God . . . though he had—" Let every one finish that sentence out of his own experience. How much grace can our unbelief withstand? The Lord had made the rock like unto a spring of water, and yet these people believed not! What has he done for thee and me? Let us retrace the pilgrimage of our own years. Let us recall the blessings by the way—the streams in the desert, the pillar of fire that led us in the night. And yet what is the quality of our faith? It is often weak and reluctant, riddled with timidities, or moth-eaten with worldly ease. It is not mighty and daring, riding forth every morning like a chilvalrous knight to inevitable conquest. It creeps along, like Mr. Halting, and Miss Muchafraid and Mr. Littlefaith.

"He marveled at their unbelief." The Lord Jesus wondered that men and women, seeing what they had seen, did not immediately spring to the life and service of faith. Perhaps we do not give time for faith to be born! Perhaps we do not see because we do not look. Perhaps we are blind to his mercies and are therefore dead to the faith. And therefore perhaps our first prayer should be, "Lord, that I might receive my sight," and then the prayer, "Lord, increase my faith."

SATURDAY, August 23. John 6: 26-35. "The bread of God is he which cometh down from heaven, and giveth life unto the world." Our life's bread is a Person. We may have much to do with Christianity and nothing to do with Christ. Only yesterday I was in a great and wonderful bakery, but I never ate nor touched a morsel of bread. I touched the machinery, I was absorbingly interested in the processes, but I ate no bread! And I may be deeply interested in the means of grace, I may be familiar with all the "ins and outs" of ecclesiastical machinery, and I may never handle nor taste "the bread of God." Our religion is dead and burdensome until it becomes a personal relation, and we have vital communion with Christ.

"Thou, O Christ, art all I want." We find everything in him. Everything else is preliminary, preparatory, subordinate, and to be in the long run dropped and forgotten. A ritual is only a way to "the bread," and by no means essential, and very often undesirable. The heart can find the Lord with a look, with a cry, and needs no obtrusion of ritual or priest. But how pathetic—to be contented to potter about among the ritual and never to find the Bread! To be in the house and never to see the Host! "Ye . . . search the scriptures . . . and ye will not come to Me."

MESSAGES FROM PRESENT DAY POETS

A CHILD'S SORROW

A LITTLE child at heaven's gate,
Released from want and stain and care,
Hath climbed the angel-trodden stair.

He lifts his feeble baby-hands,
He shows his bare and bleeding feet,
With tears upon his eyelids sweet.

O little child, thy Shepherd stands
And calls thee in, to lie and rest
Upon the shelter of his breast:

Thy Shepherd, once himself a child,
Will take his lamb within his arms
And soothe it after earth's alarms.

He who was wearied, faint, athirst,
Despised, rejected, crucified,
For little children lived and died.

But they, the sinning and accurst,
Who trampled and dishonored thee—
What shall their retribution be?

"I know ye not," the Lord shall say,
When vainly entrance they implore;
"I know ye not"—and close the door.

"When I in want and weakness lay
Ye fed me not nor tended me,
But left me to my misery."

"How could we scorn thee, Lord," they cry,
"Who never even saw thy face,
Nor met with thee in any place?"

But he, the Master, shall reply,
"Ye met and saw me every day—
I walked beside you on your way.

Ye scorned a child—that child was I!
Ye let him suffer ruthlessly—
And what ye did was done to Me."

ARTHUR L. SALMON.

SAINT PAUL

"As dying, and behold we live!"
II. Cor. 6: 9

AM I, who walked with flashing sword,
Subduing hearts to Jewish law,
Who taught Christ's men to dread my name,
Am I the one whose might they saw?

A Power has bowed me to the dust,
Has broken down my wicked pride,
Revealed my spirit as it was—
When I beheld, my glory died.

No human power could tame my soul;
A sudden light gleamed far above;
That light came down to fill my life—
My soul was conquered so by Love.

Crowned by man's fear I proudly walked Through glory to eternal night;
The Hand that humbled leads me now
Through darkness to eternal light.

In His great might I glory now,
With His great army upward move,
Who wins the world with tenderness,
And only conquers hearts with love.

Thy willing prisoner am I,
By thee set free from bondage sore;
Lord, I am crucified with thee;
Behold, I live forevermore!

LENA CLARKE.

CONTINUED STRIFE IN THE BALKANS

THE long-wished-for peace in the Balkans is still delayed. Despatches toward the end of July bore the startling information that Sofia, the Bulgarian capital, had been completely surrounded by Servian troops and its railroad service altogether cut off, but the report was unconfirmed. The peace conference, meeting at Bucharest, agreed on July 30 to a five days' armistice, and the report on that date was that the outlook for peace was brighter. Some apprehension was felt at the operations of a Russian fleet near the Bosporus.

On July 29 the Ambassadorial Conference at London settled the status of the new State of Albania, which was created under the terms of the recent Treaty of London. A prince will be nominated within six months to reign over the new country. In the meantime the administration will be organized by a Commission of Control, composed of one representative of each power, aided by a gendarmerie commanded by Swedish officers.

Up to the last days of July the Greeks were still attacking Bulgaria. A terrific battle was fought on Sunday, July 27, lasting through the entire day. The Bulgarians had been defeated at Kresna Pass, but turned upon the Greek force which was pursuing them northwest of Djuma. The Bulgarians, aided by reinforcements, made a desperate attempt to recapture the position they had lost. Three times, at the point of the bayonet, the Bulgarian army forced the Greeks from the position they had taken. There were heavy losses on both sides. The Greeks reported that up to nightfall of the 29th neither side had gained a decisive advantage, but the Bulgarians retired after abandoning and setting fire to the town of Djuma, of which the Greeks took possession. A correspondent in the company of the Greek army predicted that "except for rear-guard actions the Bulgars can make no further stand this side of Dubnitza, twenty-two miles south of Sofia, and that now not a single Bulgarian soldier remains in Macedonia, except as a prisoner." The ports of Lagos, Maronia and Makri on the coast of Thr[illegible] have been occupied by the Greek fleet and the town of Oumurjina captured [illegible] the Greeks. The Athens correspondent of the London Daily Telegraph sta[illegible] that the Greeks must bring all their supplies from Demnirhissar by w[illegible] traffic over a single mountain road with a bad surface, and predicted that if t[illegible] Bulgarians were given a respite th[illegible] might reform their beaten forces a[illegible] with the six fresh divisions of troo[illegible] around Sofia start the war again wi[illegible] the chances in their favor.

THE BALKAN BATTLEGROUND

The map reproduced on this pa[illegible] gives a vivid explanation of the pre[illegible] ent strife among the recent allie[illegible] The map shows the areas taken [illegible] Bulgaria, Servia and Greece und[illegible] the terms of the recent treaty [illegible] peace, also the area ceded to Turke[illegible] and to Roumania. Mr. Lucien Wo[illegible] in an interesting article appearing [illegible] the London Graphic, points out th[illegible] Bulgaria in the present strife is doi[illegible] no more than to contend for the stipu[illegible] lations of the original treaty of all[illegible] ance entered into before the Turkis[illegible] war. Macedonia was to be ma[illegible] autonomous, and the excuse that Ser[illegible] via's co-operation at Adrianople wa[illegible] sufficient to change the terms of th[illegible] alliance is held to be invalid becaus[illegible] such a contingency was specifically provided for by the military conven[illegible] tions attached to the treaty of alli[illegible] ance. Moreover, Bulgaria had helpe[illegible] the Serbs previously in a similar way in Macedonia. As this issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD goes to press, the following cablegram is received from Mr. Atanasoff, one of the leading bankers of Sofia, and a member of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD relief committee:

"Thousands of Macedonian refugees and wounded soldiers arriving daily, including refugees, clergy, women and children. Distress great. Immediate succor needed. Suffering greater than in recent Balkan War. Most harvest will be lost. Needs will continue months after demobilization. I visited to-day five thousand homeless refugees at Samokov with General Miles."

HIS OLD ENEMY

BY J. J. BELL

A Story in Two Parts, of Which This Is Part Two

"WULLIE," said Mr. Redhorn on entering his house, "I owe ye an apology, for it appears that yer report was only too true." With a sigh he sank into his chair. Willie stared at him over his tumbler of lemonade. "Are ye no' pleased, Maister Ridhorn?" The question was charged with amazement.

"Pleased! What for would I be pleased?"

"The man's burst!"—impatiently.

"Laddie," said Mr. Redhorn, heavily, "the spectacle o' a human bein' feenancially burst is mair excruciatin' to ma feelin's than onything in Shakespeare or East Lynne."

"But—but ye hate the man."

"Even hatred has its leemits. Ye wouldna hit a man when he was doon, would ye, Wullie?"

"Wha said I would? But I wouldna be sorry for him, if I hated him, an' if he had played me dirty tricks."

"An' if ye wouldna hit him, what would ye dae?"

"Let him lie."

Mr. Redhorn sighed and stroked his long nose, as was his habit when at a loss. "Onybody could dae that," he said at last.

Willie regarded his master inquiringly. "What would you dae?"

"Dear knows . . . But it maun be an awfu' thing to ha'e to pay in every mortal way excep' in cash. Ye're ower young to understan' what I mean, Wullie."

"I understan' fine what ye're drivin' at. Ye mean that Danks'll ha'e to gi'e up his shop an' everything. Serves him richt!"

"Come, come, laddie. What has Danks ever done to you?"

"He's tried to mak' mischief atween you an' me. He's—"

"That's true enough. But, ye see, he was annoyed at me for takin' you on as apprentice instead o' his nephew. I daresay he's forgotten a' about that by noo."

"He's tried to mak' a cod o' you heaps o' times, Maister Ridhorn."

"I've nye been able to defend mysel'! Wi'oot undue immodesty, I think I've nye managed to confound him sooner or later. Ye can consceder us quits, Danks an' me."

"I believe ye're stickin' up for the man!" cried Willie. "I didna think ye was sae saft."

"Aw!" murmured the painter, and fell to stroking his nose again.

"I believe," the boy pursued with sudden conviction, "ye would try to gi'e Danks a leg up, if ye wasna afraid."

"Afraid! Afraid o' what?" demanded Mr. Redhorn.

"I didna mean for to be impiddent," said Willie abashed.

"Afraid o' what? Proceed, Wullie!"

The boy hesitated, looking uneasy. "Afraid o' what the folk would say," he mumbled.

Mr. Redhorn drew a long breath, expelled it, and said: "By Jupiter, ye've hit the nail on the heid!" Putting his hand over his eyes, he lay back in his chair.

The long silence that followed was broken by Willie.

"Maister Ridhorn, I—I didna mean to vex ye."

"Ye didna vex me. . . . But what would you say if I was to try to gi'e Danks a leg up, as ye expressed it?" Lowering his hand, the painter looked at his apprentice.

The latter shook his head and shut his mouth as much as to signify that he was not going to commit himself this time.

"Would ye say I was daft?"

"N-no' exac'ly."

"Would ye say I was saft?"

"Something like that."

"I suppose that's what a' the folk would say?"

Willie nodded reluctantly.

"Oh," groaned the painter, "what a terrifyin' thing is public opeenion, an' yet it's no' once a week that it's worth a farden."

Mr. Redhorn lapsed into silence.

"Wullie," he bitterly declared a moment later, "I'm a poltroon!"

"What's that?"

"A poltroon is a species o' cooard."

"Oh, I thought it was a kin' o' beast—a sort o' monkey. But what for are ye callin' yersel' names, Maister Ridhorn?"

"Because I hu'e na the moral courage to gi'e Danks a leg up."

"I suppose ye would never get yer money back."

"That's no' precisely the pint," said the painter, a trifle shortly.

"Is't no'?"

"I dinna mean to suggest that I'm keen on lossin' money—quite the obverse—but I would rayther loss money nor ha'e folk think I had lost it. Ye see?"

Willie prevented a yawn with a timely gulp of lemonade. "I dinna see the sense in that," he remarked, wiping his lips on his sleeve. "But ye could easy loss money wi'oot folk kennin' onything aboot it."

Mr. Redhorn shook his head. "There's nae secret safe frae the Almighty an' the public of Fairport. Suner or later they would find oot that I had gi'ed Danks a leg up."

"But ye're no' really gaun to gi'e him a leg up!"

The painter blushed, rose slowly and walked absentmindedly over to the mantelpiece. He faced his apprentice with deliberation.

"Wullie," he said, "if you was standin' on the pier thonder, an' yer worst enemy fell into the water, would ye no' throw him a rope? . . . Of course ye would! If necessary, ye would even plunge in to the rescue. Ye would risk yer life—"

"Would I?"

"We'll say ye would, for the sake of argument." Mr. Redhorn's tone was a little impatient. "An' then, when ye had saved yer worst enemy frae pheesical extinction, the public would cry 'hurray!' an' call ye a noble character. . . . But supposin' yer worst enemy was strugglin' in the ocean o' feenancial deeficulties, an' ye threw him yer purse—"

"I never had a purse." There was no stopping the yawn this time. "An' what if it missed him?"

"Oh, me!" cried the painter, "d'ye no' ken a metaphor when ye hear it?" He glanced at the clock. "Tits! It's time ye was awa' home to yer bed. Yer mither'll be wonderin' what's keepin' ye. Awa' wi' ye!"

"I didna mean to offend ye," said the boy, rising and laying the empty tumbler on the table.

"Ye didna offend me. . . . But ye're ower young to appreciate ma present painful posecetion, an' so—"

"I didna' ken yer dyspeepsia was bad—"

LOSE OF THE ZÜRICH CONVENTION

REV. CAREY BONNER

ZURICH TOWN HALL WHERE THE SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION MET

DR. KAJINOSUKE IBUKA

HE World's Sunday School Convention grew in interest and power through the eight days to the glorious end. The enrolment of delegates from fifty countries was 2,596, of ch 1,371 came from the United States. There had n a fear that delegates might be drawn often n the meetings by the sight-seeing attractions beautiful Switzerland, but Zürich's great "Ton-le" of three thousand capacity was well filled ly, morning and evening, and an overflow meet- was added for most of the morning sessions. ually in the afternoon there were separate meet-s in four or more churches for primary, interme-te and senior class workers and for special ses.

Two hundred and fifty persons spoke, mostly spe-lists in Sunday school and missionary work. eir addresses were usually in English, which s ably interpreted into German by Rev. Profes- H. L. Luring of Frankfurt-on-the-Main. The mony of nations, denominations and races was er for a moment marred, although there were the audience delegates from all the nations at r in the Balkans, whose troubles were the sub-t of frequent prayer. The audience cheered st heartily every appeal by address or resolution arbitration in place of war.

Good News from Africa

The most distinctive feature of this convention s the report of five missionary commissions. e have already spoken of the arousing reports of mmissions on Continental Europe, on India, and Eastern Asia. The report on South Africa by . F. B. Meyer and Mr. Arthur Black showed that the one and one-fourth million whites and eight d three-fourth million negroes in that field only a ry small fraction are in Sunday schools.

The report of the Commission on Mohammedan nds, presented by Bishop J. C. Hartzell and Dr. M. Zwemer, showed how recent events in Morocco, ipoli and the Balkans and the new African rail-ads are opening Mohammedan lands everywhere the free proclamation of the Gospel, where a w years ago no Moslem would change his faith, r could the Gospel be preached without risk of e. Even in Turkey, religious toleration has me in theory with the recent change of govern-ent. On the other hand, it was shown that Mo-mmedanism itself is an aggressive missionary ligion and is increasing the number of its adher-ts both in Africa and India.

The commission on Latin America, prepared by r. Robert E. Speer of New York, and read by ev. H. S. Harris, gave a timely call, with the open-g of the Panama Canal at hand, for increased issionary efforts in Central and South America, here, it was said, the Roman Catholic Church is the same condition as it was in the Middle Ages Europe. Special efforts were urged to arouse e forty thousand German Lutheran immigrants Brazil to become a spiritual leaven for the na-ve people, and Sunday schools were urged. The nvention raised $120,000 to promote better Sun-y school methods all over the world, especially Christian lands.

Larger emphasis was put on social ethics—larger an in any previous World's Sunday School Con-ntion. A whole session of the main conference Sunday afternoon and a sectional meeting on Monday afternoon were devoted to "Temperance and Good Citizenship," and a beautiful address on "Teaching Temperance to Little Children" was given in another main session by Mrs. Mary Foster Bryner.

One of the chief addresses was by Sir George Croyden Marks, M.P., president of the London Sunday School Union, on "Sunday Schools as a National Necessity." He showed that the state was bound to compel education of children not alone for the child's sake, but in self-defense against the perils of ignorance. Miss Marie C. Brehm of the American Presbyterian Temperance Committee made an instructive address on "Temperance and Christian Citizenship." The resolutions endorsed total abstinence, Sabbath observance, and the purity crusade, and called for Sunday closing and liquor exclusion at the Panama Exposition in San Francisco. The resolutions also urged efforts to increase Bible reading in homes and public schools and increased attendance of children at church. This was an endorsement, in substance, of a plan drawn by the teachers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Million Bible Class on the Cassandra, and endorsed also by Rev. William A. Brown, superintendent of the Missionary Department of the International Sunday School Association, and Mrs. Mary Foster Bryner, elementary superintendent of the same, also later by Dr. J. A. Worden, Presbyterian Sunday school secretary.

There is not space to tell of the many practical methods of Sunday school work suggested in the sectional meetings: the elementary, conducted by Mrs. Mary Foster Bryner and Mr. George H. Archibald; the intermediate division, by many leaders, and the adult division, ably led by Mr. W. C. Pearce, superintendent of adult class work of the International Sunday School Association. We may give these practical hints in our "Superintendents' Round Table," in the weeks to come. One of the mountain peaks of the convention was the address of Bishop J. H. Vincent, the father of modern Sunday school methods, including the international uniform lessons and the Chautauqua training courses for teachers. His address expressed his matured convictions, especially on two points: first, that the modern Sunday school class finds its precedent and model, not in the "ragged school" of Robert Raikes, of a century ago, but in the conversations of Jesus, with his training class of twelve and with other small groups; second, that the Sunday school must not be allowed to take the place of home worship, and especially not of church attendance.

For the Younger Pupils

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Lesson editors, in addition to minor participation in various conferences, gave half a dozen addresses, including one on the origin of organized primary Sunday school work by Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts, founder of the International Primary Union, who also spoke through an interpreter on Sunday to more than 2,000 Swiss children. Dr. Crafts spoke in the temperance conference on needed temperance organization for Sunday schools and churches, and in the main convention on "The New Chivalry of Men's Work for Boys." He showed that boys' classes in Sunday schools are decreasing in the United States, and that juvenile criminality is increasing two and a-half times as fast as the population. All this, he urged, is a call to the strong men in the churches to join the increasing men's classes to hold the boys in Sunday school. It was urged that trustees, elders, deacons, stewards, and other church officers should be made to feel that they do not "magnify their office" by merely passing the collection plate and meeting once a month to decide what to do with the money, but that their supreme duty and privilege is to stop a leak more perilous than one in Holland's dykes—the leak of boys from Sunday schools.

Reports from Many Lands

This came at certain times each day, six or eight countries being reported by missionary or Sunday school leaders, each speaker being allowed only five minutes. Among the most interesting of these short addresses were the following: Herr John Victor said that for centuries Hungary has been the dyke against Mohammedanism. It is the aim of the Sunday schools of Hungary to so train scholars that they may become missionaries. There is a legend in Hungary that when a great plague existed, the king shot an arrow, and that when the arrow fell and pierced the ground a plant sprung up, which was efficacious in healing those sick with the plague. "Pray that Christianity may shoot arrows that will cause Sunday schools to spring up, and so save Hungary from Islam and unbelief." Russia was reported by Pastor T. Kurzit. He said that Sunday schools were introduced by Zinzendorf in Russia more than a century ago. It is claimed for the Lettish people, numbering 3,000,000, that their particular part of Russia is the cradle of Sunday schools. There are at present fifty Sunday schools in Siberia. The government has recently laid its iron hand on the Sunday school movement, closing Sunday schools in some parts and interdicting the training of Sunday school teachers. Even the Lettish Sunday schools are now suffering persecution. Of Albania, Rev. C. Telford Erickson said: "It is now nineteen hundred years since the cry was uttered: 'Come over into Macedonia and help us.' And now that cry is being repeated. The people say: We want to amputate these false religions from our body politic. We want a Protestant government, a Protestant province and Protestant schools." Prayer was asked that within twenty years Albania might become a Protestant nation.

Of Central America Rev. James Hayfer, twenty years representing the American Bible Society, said: "There are at present in Central America two hundred Sunday schools, 1,000 teachers and 10,000 Sunday school scholars." A little son of Mr. Hayfer, dressed in the costume of an Indian child, was placed before the audience as representing 100,000 Indian children, who as yet had no Sunday schools provided for them. A commission was asked for to visit Central America. Uruguay was reported as being the smallest of all the South American republics. There is freedom of worship and disestablishment of church and state. But there is a strong leaning toward agnosticism, which should be counteracted by helping the Sunday schools. There are at present only 1,039 enrolled Sunday school scholars.

Iceland was reported by Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts for the first time in any World's Sunday School Convention. On June 24, A.D. 1000, Iceland had

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

PRESIDENT OTTO KOENIG | MANAGING EDITOR GEO. H. SANDISON | SECRETARY THEODORE WATERS

Helping the Farmer

OVER $100,000,000 of United States Treasury money will be used in facilitating the movement and marketing of the crops this year. This announcement by the Secretary of the Treasury, it is explained, is not due to any immediate emergency. Our crops this summer are extraordinarily large. This treasury money will be deposited in certain qualified national banks, West and South, at two per cent., where it can be most advantageously employed, to be returned to the public treasury when the crops have been moved. The treasurer's suggestion is that 15 per cent. of such loans be returned in December and the balance in practically equal instalments in January, February and March. Government bonds, approved State and municipal bonds and prime commercial paper will be accepted as security. This new departure should prove a substantial relief to thousands of agriculturists, who at crop-moving time have been accustomed to dealing with a class of money-lenders who took advantage of their urgent need to bleed them outrageously. There should be no occasion for the farmers suffering from a financial stringency at harvest time this year, as they have done frequently in the past.

A Memorable Convention

FOR many reasons the great International Sunday School Convention just closed at Zürich must be ranked as one of the most remarkable gatherings in the religious history of the world. That a spontaneous movement, wholly apart from official influence in any country, should have brought together 2,600 men and women from seventy different countries in the interest of the promotion of Christianity was of itself a wonderful event. In distinguished personnel and high intellectuality it was no doubt equal to any gathering of a religious character previously held. But its chief claim to recognition as an assemblage of world-wide significance lay in the fact that it directly represented the greatest Christian army ever known—an army of 28,700,000 young people from 300,000 Sunday schools, all marching under the banner of the Cross! This multitudinous host will, in the course of a few years, be added to the general body of the active adult Christian church, to be in turn succeeded by a still greater army in the Sunday schools of the future. China, leaving her idols and coming over to the Christian faith; Japan, eager to embrace Christianity and rejoiced to be the hostess of the next great convention in 1916; these, with other convincing indications of the success attending the preaching of the Gospel in heathen lands, give assurance that the immediate future will be rich in spiritual development. Nor are the European countries behind, and North America, which was represented by something like half the entire body of delegates, has the distinctive place of a leader in all this wonderful development. And the great secret of it all is the attractive power of the old Gospel, which continues to draw unto it the hearts of the world, wherever it is faithfully presented.

Mistaking the Signs

VICE-PRESIDENT MARSHALL is acquiring a reputation for sententiousness. Addressing a gathering of many thousands at Mooseheart, Ill., on the occasion of laying the cornerstone of an industrial school for orphan children and a home for the aged, he spoke of one "unhappy corollary" that has developed from the superior educational advantages of our time. "A great army of persons," he said, "whose labors would make for the industrial advancement of the nation, have imagined themselves to be fitted for nobler pursuits, and thus the progress they would have made in the work for which they are fitted is lost. Too many who see the sign 'P. C.' in the heavens think it means 'Preach Christ' when it really means 'Plough Corn.'" However true this may be of some—as it doubtless is—it would be ungracious to apply it generally. Ambition, rightly directed, is the quality of a noble mind, and if to be born humble were to mean to stay humble and aspire no higher, our nation would be the poorer by scores and hundreds of men who have risen from the lowest ranks to the highest honors, because they heard the call and took hold courageously, nothing doubting. We honor the man who aims high. Even if he should never reach the top of the mountain, he will be the better man and the better citizen for having made the effort. As to the preachers, whom the Vice-President apparently had specially in mind, while some may have spoiled a good farmer in the making of an indifferent pastor, it is safe to venture the assertion that of those who enter the spiritual field with a sincere purpose, there is none who will be wholly without his sheaves at the harvesting. Nor should it be forgotten that our Lord and Master himself chose for the most part simple Galilean fishermen to be "fishers of men," instead of going to the learned Scribes and Pharisees for finely trained helpers. Still, we do not believe that Mr. Marshall meant any serious reflection on a class but merely indulged a passing whim of humor, such as is liable to lay hold of any public speaker of vivid vocabulary and fond of alliterative illustration.

The Pity of It

THOUSANDS of newspaper readers were interested in the fight to save the life of young Leightbourn Middleton of New York, for whose sake father, brother, wife, cousin, and friend sacrificed their blood in the hope of defeating death. The repeated sacrifices were, however, made in vain and on the afternoon of July 31 the young man died. His death occurred at St. Luke's Hospital, where the operations of blood transfusion were performed. A new method of transfusion was employed, the physicians abandoning the former method of uniting the arteries of the donor and the patient and employing arterial syringes instead.

The sacrifices of blood to save Mr. Middleton were made with eager willingness on the part of those to whom his life was dear. His young wife said: "I shall go on the table as often as they will allow me." His mother urged the physicians to permit her to make a similar sacrifice, but they refused.

It is impossible for Christians to review this sad incident without remembering that other sacrifice of blood—made to save the world. We grieve that these recent sacrifices were made in vain. Have we considered the inexpressible pity of every soul for which the blood of Christ was shed in vain? We think of the heartbreak of these friends who gave their blood without avail. Do we remember the grief of the Saviour over every soul that refuses to accept the sacrifice he made? Sad as was this young man's death, it would have been much sadder if he had been ungrateful. Are we spurning the gift of life purchased for us by Christ's blood?

THOUSANDS OF COUPONS

HAVE you taken advantage of our new reduced Coupon Offer for the month of August? Thousands have done so, especially since our offer to give a Red Letter New Testament with our compliments to all friends who send in Six or More Coupons. Many who sent in one or more coupons in answer to the July offer have taken advantage of the August offer to send in more coupons and thus obtain the new Testament free, for of course we give credit on this account to all who sent in one or more coupons during July.

It looks now as though this year's Coupon Offer would be the means of adding more members to the Christian Herald Family Circle than ever belonged before. All seem to be anxious to take advantage of this opportunity to induce friends to become regular members of the Family, by sending them THE CHRISTIAN HERALD during the remainder of this year. We are glad to see that so many are actuated by this spirit. The premiums and the extra rewards are liberal indeed, but the desire to bring thousands of workers into the Family seems to be paramount with our people.

The subscription list of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is greater to-day than ever before in its history, that is to say, more people are reading THE CHRISTIAN HERALD every week, and are feeling its influence, than in any year since the paper was founded. We hope to be able to double this influence before Christian Herald Day, October 24, 1913, when the publication will be thirty-five years old. We can do this surely if every present member will influence the sending in of only one coupon with the name of a new subscriber written thereon. We can multiply THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S influence manyfold if every member will pledge him or herself to send in six coupons.

Will you not do your share? Surely, you must know of several friends who would be better off for reading THE CHRISTIAN HERALD weekly. As we have stated before, it is a form of home missionary work that you cannot afford to overlook. In due time the friends whom you influence to join the Family temporarily, will feel in their hearts the stirring messages which THE CHRISTIAN HERALD voices each week, and before long we shall have gotten their co-operation as permanent members. If you need more coupons we shall be glad to send them to you.

ONE of the good old rules of sea-going travel is that which forbids the passengers to speak to "the man at the wheel." That the chauffeur at his wheel, responsible for the lives of those in his car, is just as fully entitled to seclusive protection as the steersman on a passenger vessel, is a thought that might easily occur to any one in view of the constantly increasing number of automobile accidents. It has remained for a London magistrate named Plowden to give official expression to the need of chauffeur protection. While trying the case of a driver accused of manslaughter, he learned from the evidence that the man had a woman passenger on the same seat. This, the magistrate declared, was a distraction with dangerous possibilities. "Some ladies," he said, "are nervous, some garrulous, some inquisitive, some distracting. In a thousand ways a driver may be taken off his guard and an accident may occur." If woman's presence on the front seat of a car is an element of danger even in a limited degree, it would seem to be worth serious consideration. To enforce such a rule generally would revolutionize present motoring methods.

NICARAGUAN OVERTURES

—THE LITTLE CENTRAL AMERICAN republic of Nicaragua is farsighted, from a business point of view. Its president, Adolfo Diaz, has signified the desire of his country for closer relations with the United States, in the form of a protectorate, guaranteeing Nicaraguan independence and affording it an opportunity of realizing some of the benefits to flow from the opening of the Panama Canal and the possible construction of the Nicaraguan route. Costa Rica, which was also offered a protectorate relationship, has rejected the offer as involving a sacrifice of its attribute of sovereignty.

BURIAL OF THE UNIDENTIFIED FIRE VICTIMS AT BINGHAMTON

The Thief Deceived

RE was an ingot of gold in the Belgian onial Palace at the Ghent Exhibition recently was enclosed in a case of glass. It was at $20,000. A thief to make sure of getting vith the gold without noise or detection took se as well as the gold it contained. The ntendent of the police at Ghent telegraphed the newspapers of London that while the ndicated that the gold was worth $20,000, it reality only an imitation worth perhaps ut valueless to the thief. There is a law of personal loss always to the dishonest one. The thief robs no one so much as himself. The gamblers and the burglars almost never have a penny for a rainy day. What they deal in are counterfeits. The prophet thus indicates the want of profit in treasure gained by fraud:

As the partridge sitteth on eggs, and hatcheth them not, so he that getteth riches, and not by right, shall leave them in the midst of his days, and at his end shall be a fool. (Jer. 17: 11.)

America Regains Tennis Cup

IN a game played at Wimbledon July 28, the Davis international lawn tennis trophy was won by Maurice E. McLoughlin of California from the British veteran, Charles P. Dixon. When the final stroke had been played, Dixon rushed forward and put his arms around the shoulders of his American competitor, who received a great ovation from the record crowd, despite the disappointment at the loss of the cup. The Davis cup, given by Dwight Davis, an American tennis champion of former years, has been an international trophy since 1900. It was successfully defended in this country until 1903, when the famous Dohertys won it and carried it to England, whence it was taken to Australia in 1907. There it remained till last year, when an English team recovered it. The return of the cup to America will be hailed with joy by all tennis players. It is likely to remain here many years, as McLaughlin has several years of skill and growth left. The games of life and the prizes given to the winner are types of the intense spiritual contests in which we have engaged, and the prizes that are awarded the victorious. The apostle thus refers to this contest and to the reward for the victor:

Know ye not that they which run in a race run all, but one receiveth the prize? So run that ye may obtain. (I Cor. 9: 24.)

Japan's Rules of Health

THE Japanese Government has issued rules of health, commending their observance by all subjects of Japan. 1. Spend as much time out of doors as possible. Bask much in the sun, and take plenty of exercise. Take care that your respiration is deep and regular. 2. As regards meals, eat meat only once a day, and let the diet be eggs, cereals, and vegetables, fruits and fresh cow's milk. Take the last-named as much as possible. Masticate your food carefully. 3. Take a hot bath every day and a steam bath once or twice a week if the heart is strong enough to bear it. 4. Early to bed and early to rise. 5. Sleep in a dark and quiet room with windows open. Let the minimum of sleeping hours be six or six and one-half hours. In case of women eight and one-half hours is advisable. 6. Take one day of absolute rest each week, in which you must refrain from even reading or writing. 7. Try to avoid any outbursts of passion and stirring mental stimulation. Do not tax your brain at the occurrence of inevitable incidents or of coming events. Do not say unpleasant things nor listen, if possible to avoid it, to disagreeable things. 8. Be married. Widows and widowers should be married with the least possible delay. 9. Be moderate in the consumption of even tea and coffee, not to say tobacco and alcoholic beverages. 10. Avoid places that are too warm, especially steam-heated and badly ventilated rooms. Most of these instructions of the Japanese Government could be adopted by the boards of health of England, Germany, France or the United States, to the physical and mental benefit of the people. These suggest the Scripture rules of health for the souls of all nations:

That thy way may be known upon the earth, thy saving health among all nations. (Ps. 67: 2.)

Big Fishes Caught

THE prediction of fishermen, when a fifty-five-pound striped bass was caught at Asbury Park, N. J., recently, that one larger would be caught before the end of the season was fulfilled when a man landed one at the Allenhurst beach weighing fifty-eight pounds eight ounces. This is said to be the largest striped bass ever taken by a surf angler on the Atlantic coast. The fish was 30¾ inches around and 50½ inches long. Its roe weighed ten pounds. Two days after, at the close of an exciting chase off the inlet at Atlantic City, the crew of a fishing smack, returning from a daily trip to the fishing banks, caught the largest horse mackerel ever taken on that part of the coast. They brought it to shore and put it on the scales where it marked 1,300 pounds. There is this mention made of a good catch of fish in olden times:

Simon Peter went up, and drew the net to land full of great fishes, a hundred and fifty and three; and for all there were so many, yet was not the net broken. (John 21: 11.)

Free Press in Russia

THERE is not absolute freedom of the press in Russia, but there is a much more rapid movement toward it than the outside world suspects. A Russian writer says: "Notwithstanding all the obstacles, penalties and persecutions; notwithstanding all the official storms, frosts, and congealing winds, the provincial press grows, strengthens, and develops like a gigantic tree, which obeys only the voice of life. The rapid and ever-growing current of progressive newspapers now floods not only the large cities and towns, but is penetrating into the villages and hamlets, and is soaking deeper and deeper into the life of the people. These flying sheets, which it is as impossible to catch and check as it is impossible to catch and count the leaves of the trees when a strong wind blows them off by the millions, can really be called the main political school of the people." This surprisingly rapid progress of the press toward real freedom, so long and powerfully suppressed in Russia, is one of the brightest hopes for the higher intelligence, the larger liberty, the stronger character and the deeper piety of the people of the empire. By the press and the tongue all truth, the truth as it is in Jesus, will spread to the ends of the earth. Peter, in his sermon, thus refers to the relation of publicity to the spread of the Gospel:

That word, I say, ye know, which was published throughout all Judea, and began from Galilee, after the baptism which John preached. (Acts 10: 37.)

A WEEK IN THE WORLD'S NEWS

The Mexican Situation Still Unsettled

UP TO August 1 no definite conclusion had been reached by our government relative to the adoption of a course of action in Mexican affairs. Ambassador Henry Lane Wilson, arriving from Mexico City, had an interview with the President and Secretary of State, the nature of which was not made public. It was understood, however, that his plan of pacification, which included the recognition of Huerta's government, was not considered. On July 30, the Ambassador had a long hearing before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, at which he was given an opportunity to present his views. He said he had made repeated efforts to secure Madero's personal safety and had received assurances from Huerta that the ex-President would be protected. He did not believe Huerta was personally cognizant of or responsible for Madero's death, which was probably the result of a plot for vengeance by the relatives of those who had been executed during the closing days of Madero's régime. The ambassador declared that recognition of the Huerta government would be advisable, as, in his opinion, no other government could restore order to the republic. The government, however, was bankrupt. Recognition would enable Huerta to procure necessary funds to control the situation. The Taft administration, shortly before its retirement, had under consideration propositions for recognition. The ambassador considered mediation unsuited to the case, and pacification through the use of American troops was not to be attempted except with the approval of the Mexican authorities. The House Foreign Relations Committee may also accord Ambassador Wilson a hearing. He evidently made a strong impression on Congress, although he failed to convince the President. Our State Department has demanded the immediate release of three Americans held prisoners by the Mexican federals in Chihuahua. The next development in the general situation will probably come in the form of a special message from the President to Congress.

Nations Decline Invitation to Panama Fair

AFTER nearly a year's consideration the British Government has decided not to participate in the Panama Exposition of 1915. This decision was communicated to our ambassador in London on July 30. No reason is given, but it is regarded as expressing the government's resentment of our attitude on the Panama Canal toll question, and probably also to mark its disapproval of the failure of the treaty of arbitration. The treaty, which failed of ratification through the action of the Senate, has now lapsed by limitation. It was learned on July 31 that Germany also had declined to participate in the exposition. Twenty-eight foreign governments have signified their intention to be represented at the exposition, England and Germany being the only Powers of importance that have declined.

End of China's New Rebellion

BY THE first of August the rebellion in China was believed to have come almost to an end. Nanking had returned to its allegiance to the government at Peking and the cities of Suchow and Chinkiang, together with other districts in Kiangsu Province, had also returned to the fold of President Yuan Shi Kai. It is believed that Dr. Sun Yat Sen, former provisional president of China, who has still multitudes of loyal friends both among natives and foreigners, will be pardoned for his part in the new rebellion. A price, however, has been put upon the head of General Hwang Hsing, the military commander of the revolutionary forces, and he is in flight. Hsiung Ling has been made premier of Yuan Shi Kai's government and a new cabinet will be chosen.

Castro Again a Revolutionist

CIPRIANO CASTRO, ex-president of Venezuela, is reported as having landed on Venezuelan soil on July 29. It has been rumored for some time past that the "little dictator" contemplated invading his old territory, and he is now said to have a revolutionary force concealed at some convenient point on the Colombian border, awaiting the opportunity for a rush across the line. Meanwhile, General Hernandez, another political exile, is said to be organizing a movement on his own account. He has issued a proclamation declaring that both Castro and Gomez (the present ruler) are "hated and distrusted" and that what Venezuela needs is a complete change.

Railroads Yield to Arbitration

FOR the present, at least, the danger of a railroad strike has been successfully averted. The railroad managers, who had formulated a series of grievances to be submitted to the Board of Mediation and Conciliation simultaneously with the demands of the conductors and trainmen, have withdrawn their list and the claims of the employees will now be the sole subject of consideration by the first arbitration board to be appointed under the Newlands Act. The course of the railroads in waiving their claims at the present time, in the interest of an amicable settlement, meets with general approval.

A Social Old Folks' Day

MRS. W. J. MASTERS, of Pen Argyl, Pa., writes to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD concerning a movement which she, in co-operation with other friends, is promoting with a view to the general observance of September 1 as "Old Folks' Day." She writes that she brought the project to the attention of President Wilson in Washington. Mrs. Masters' idea is to make the day one of social reunion and enjoyment. The movement is already in successful operation in Pen Argyl. She writes: "An illustration may make my motive clear in a few words. They are an heathen, because they are living in a Christian ere it is the custom to "say grace at meat." Let us em to turn about in this matter.

a and quails were the two kinds of food which God sufficient for the health and strength of people who urneying and also pasturing their flocks by the esus afterwards said to Martha, "One thing is " when she was preparing a meal for him. Mod- elers in Palestine, "the promised land," often won- he small amount of food which people there par- —a few olives, some dry bread, moistened in a nd occasionally fruit, such as oranges, figs and neat never! Compare with this the complicated which we place upon our tables—sometimes ten food at one meal. Let us stop and think that we ding a temple, each one of us, for our bodies are oles of the living God. What should we think of whom we saw building a house, who would collect hing and work it into his building? We would say ved to have his house fall down on his head, and it would. So will our bodies go to pieces if we do ly build them up by using good food, the simpler the food, the better. Let us learn what to eat that we may be strong. We can do this by making a study of the matter. We should take religious care of our bodies, in order that we may be strong to do the things God has put us into this world to do. Teachers and parents should turn their attention to the developments in this line of thought as shown in lantern slides by physicians and other wise teachers.

We like to think that when the Israelites went out in the early morning to gather the bread from heaven, they gathered not for themselves alone, but also portions for those who were sick, or feeble from age, or too young to do it. They found joy in helping each other. It was like a picnic every day—two picnics, one in the morning and the other in the evening. God looked down from above and rejoiced to see his people fed. We remember that when Jesus was in this world, he fed two great multitudes of people; in the first company there were five thousand men, beside women and children; that made at least ten or twelve thousand people. Jesus had to borrow food with which to feed them, and a boy was glad to let Jesus take all he had, only five loaves and two fishes, in the beginning not enough for a bite for each person there, but Jesus, with his power to feed the multitude, made it enough and to spare, twelve baskets of fragments being taken up after all had eaten and were filled. At another time Jesus fed four thousand men besides women and children, making, perhaps, eight thousand people in all. When he began the feeding, he had only seven loaves and a few little fishes, but Jesus had power to make it more than enough for all, so that seven baskets of fragments were taken up when the feast was ended. But more wonderful than those two occasions, more wonderful even than the feeding of the Israelites for forty years, is the feeding of the world, which God does by blessing tiny seeds and eggs and single grains. Every stalk of grain and every fruit tree shows that we have a miracle-working God.

We get just a little glimpse of the joy God has in feeding the world when we undertake to do something for the poor and hungry ourselves. A lady heard of a mother and two children, who were living in a garret. She ascended three flights of stairs to reach the place. Her knock at the door brought a wretched-looking woman in rags. She said she had come to make her a visit, but she was not invited in, the woman standing guard against the door with the door knob in her hand. The visitor entreated her to let her enter, which she did after much persuasion. There was actually nothing in the room save a wooden box, around which sat three naked children, and they were munching some crusts of bread. "But where do you sleep?" asked the visitor, and the woman led her into another room where there was nothing but a pile of straw. She pointed to it and said, "There!" The visitor hurried away and went to a store, where she selected two beds, comfortable mattresses, sheets, blankets, pillows, etc., and when she told the manager of the store whom they were for, and asked for a bill, he replied, "Madam, there is no bill." The visitor then went to a provision store and purchased a lot of food, and she also secured clothing. The next day she called again upon the poor woman and had the joy of seeing her and her children under their improved conditions. "It was almost the happiest hour of my life," the visitor remarked as she told of the incident. "Lady" and "loaf-giver" used to be synonymous because the lady in a castle was accustomed to go to her door at a certain time to give loaves of bread to the poor who would come to the castle gate. To help the poor is still the gentlest work a lady can do. She proves her right to the title by doing it. She cannot be a true lady if she is not a friend of the poor. Let her study wise ways of doing it, so that while she gives relief to the bodies of the poor she is uplifting them by leading them into ways of self-helpfulness.

Two poor little children called themselves "God's sparrows," because a kind visitor who had come to their miserable home had read to them those verses in the twelfth chapter of Luke that tell about how God feeds the sparrows, and not one falls to the ground dead without he knows it. To feed the world with Christ's love is greater than to feed the world with food, for with the love of Jesus our souls are fed, so that we may live forever.

OUR SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS' ROUND TABLE

UGHTFUL INQUIRY comes to the Round n a man in Jersey City as to the ap- of a "decision day" in Sunday He says: "I know that whether a uld have a 'Decision Day' is a matter , but what I am trying to learn is, is st way to get children to connect with ? Does it not have the tendency to children profess their faith in Christ y realize the great step they are tak- the purpose of illustration: Here is —the invitation is given to all who t Christ to come forward, and John, robably been thinking the matter over dy to take his stand, comes forward, with several others, and doubtless they rted. But, on the other hand, here is Vilson, who sees John and the others ward and at once he thinks he ought too, and without previous thought he profession. Now, I know the Holy Spirit is willing to help him, but not knowing much about how he can be helped he becomes careless and feels that he has joined the church and he is safe, and therefore can indulge in sin; so hurting the cause of Christ."

There are really three questions here, first, as to "Decision Day"; second, as to children being asked to make a religious decision publicly at an early age; and, third, as to children being taken hastily into the church. Now the chief objection to designating any particular Sunday as "Decision Day" is that it seems to mark other days as times for indecision, or postponement. Every Sunday should be looked forward to as "Decision Day" for those undecided, for it may be the last day when some soul will have opportunity to decide. No one, old or young, should come into church membership until the pastor has learned from a searching personal interview and by inquiry that this great step will be taken intelligently and whole-heartedly.

In the case of those under fifteen it was the rule of the writer to ask a series of carefully prepared questions and write down the answers for consideration, and to prove to others the child's understanding of the act. Nor was any one received under that age who had not had special preparation in a children's meeting specifically intended to train children for a Christian life. Surely, no child should be rushed into the church on the occasion of his first public expression of his purpose to be a Christian. "The valley of decision" for a child should usually be a quiet place at the home fireside or in a small meeting free from excitement. No harm, however, is likely to come from a public confession of a desire to be a Christian when it is understood that a period of preparation for church membership is to follow.

"Depart!"

"But—but—"

"Gang!"

Confused and crestfallen, Willie took up his cap and obeyed.

Mr. Redhorn threw himself into his easychair.

"I needna ha'e lost ma temper," he reflected, presently. "I shouldna ha'e expected him to grasp ma physicological [psychological] observations. I couldna ha'e grasped them masel' at his age. But oh criftens! what am I to dae? Public opeenion . . ."

A shy tapping at the door startled him. He rose, trembling and rather pale. Was it Danks come to him as a last desperate resource? He feared yet hoped it was.

But when he opened the door, behold Willie once more!

"Wh-what is it, laddie?" he stammered.

"I thought ye would maybe like to hear aboot Danks."

"What aboot him noo?"

"The lamp was burnin' in the shop, so I had a squint through the hole in the shutter. Danks was sittin' at the counter—"

"Still? . . . What was he daein'? Writin'?"

"Na; he was jist daein' naething."

"What was he lookin' like?"

"I couldna see his face. He had his arms on the counter, an' his face was doon on them. Maybe—he was sleeping."

"Maybe," said the painter with melancholy irony. "I dare say he's been sleepin' extra soun' recently! . . . Is that a' ye've got to tell me, laddie?"

"Ay; excep' . . . "

"Excep' what?"

"He—he looked queer—as if he had got—wee-er."

"Wee-er! Hoo do ye mean, Wullie?"

"Weel, I used to think he was a great big man, an' noo he looks as if he had—jist as if he had got—burst."

"Oh!" said the painter under his breath, "surely he hasn't— Laddie, did ye see him move?"

"Whiles he gi'ed a bit jerk."

"The Lord be thankit!" Mr. Redhorn took his puzzled apprentice by the arm. "Come inside for a meenute. I'll apologize to yer mither the morn."

While Willie stood blinking, his employer found writing materials and indited the following note:

"FAIRPORT, April 1.

"I can lend you £200, payable back when you can. J. REDHORN."

"Wullie," he said, softly thumping the flap o' the envelope, "ye behold me riskin' ma reputation as a sober man o' business. But for the moment I can honestly declare I dinna care that"—he smote the table—"for public opeenion!"

"Ye near upset the ink-pot."

"If I had it would ha'e made nae difference to ma statement." Mr. Redhorn arose and placed the letter in the boy's hand. "Carry that to Peter Danks. Chap at the door till he opens. See that he reads the enclosed communication at once. Then report to me."

"Are ye gi'ein' him a leg up, after a'?"

"March!" commanded the painter.

Left to himself he reseated himself at the table, his head between his hands. The supreme moment of exaltation had passed, yet he did not regret what he had done.

"Ye've been a long time, laddie."

"It was a long time afore he opened the door."

"Ye delivered the letter?"

"Ay; I think he thought it was an account for pentin'; so I tell't him it wasna."

"An' then?"

"He opened it."

Mr. Redhorn's countenance was working in a curious fashion. "What did he say?" came the question, shakily.

"Naething."

"Naething?"

"He jist made faces an' waved me oot o' the shop."

"Made—faces?"

"Ay," said the boy awkwardly.

"What sort o' faces?"

A short pause.

"Same as you're m-makin'."

"Eh?"

But Willie turned and fled, for he realized that he was in danger of making faces, too.

ANSWERED PRAYERS

HERE is a beautiful letter from another of the older members of our CHRISTIAN HERALD Family: "I have the greatest reason to praise our heavenly Father for his forbearance, love and kindness to me and a long life granted. I am now eighty years old, with no cloud to dim the vision of the beyond. All is serene and clear." W. H. M., Huntsville, Ala.

Here is still another. S. W. S. writes from Mannsville, N. Y.: "I am one of the many that are over eighty years old who are cheered by the entrance of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD at our doors. Mine comes by the hand of a kind neighbor. I am also one of your readers that believe our heavenly Father hears and answers our earnest prayer and gives his angels charge concerning us if we trust continually in his precious promises."

A Young Reader writes from Jacktown, Ky.: "I have been wanting to tell THE CHRISTIAN HERALD readers for some time how wonderfully our heavenly Father has blessed me in hearing and answering my prayers. I want to urge the young especially to go to him for guidance and help. I have some very dear friends on earth, but I sometimes wonder what life would really be if it were not for my blessed heavenly Friend, who is so patient and kind and ever ready to help those who trust in him."

E. M. S. of Mountville, S. C., sends testimony of definite help in a practical matter: "I wish to tell," she writes, "of help received in answer to a request. I asked God to open some way for my daughter to receive an education so she would be competent to teach. I had just given up all hope when a way was opened. She has now had three years at a good college, and I feel that it was a direct answer to my prayer. I wish to acknowledge God's goodness to me."

V. M. W. writes from Jersey City, N. J.: "I want to thank God for his goodness to me in answer to prayer for help in time of need, and still praying for more faith." Mrs. R. A. F. writes, from Amherst, Mass.: "I wish to bear grateful testimony to the loving kindness of our heavenly Father in my restoration to health after a long illness."

Acknowledgments of answers to prayer have also been received from:

CLOSE OF THE ZÜRICH CONVENTION

the worship of the true God, by an act of the Icelandic parliament. For several hundreds of years Lutheranism has been the prevailing religion of Iceland, and has provided the teaching of the catechism for the children, but the organized Sunday school movement for the study of the Bible has been unknown there. It is hoped that the organized Sunday school movement presented in Iceland by Mrs. Crafts in 1910 may greatly help Icelandic Sunday school work.

Wales was reported by Rev. H. Barrow Williams, who said that there is now a larger number of scholars in the Welsh Sunday schools than in the day schools, presumably because all members of the church, including adults, are members of the Sunday school.

British India, as to Sunday school work among the lepers, was reported by Mr. John Jackson, secretary of the Mission to Lepers. There are 250,000 lepers in British India, among whom are 4,000 Christian converts and 2,700 children in leper Sunday schools. One leper boy received the highest marks for his examination of any Sunday school scholar in India. Japan was reported by Rev. K. Ibuka, D.D., president of the Federation of the Japanese Churches, and Rev. H. Kozaki, president of the National Sunday School Association. These two gentlemen came all the way from Japan to Zürich to bring an invitation from the National Sunday School Association of Japan for the eighth World's Sunday School Convention to be held in Tokyo, Japan. The invitation had the endorsement of Count Okuma, the foremost statesman; Baron Shibusana, the most influential business man of Japan; Baron Sakatani, mayor of the city of Tokyo, and Mr. Nikatano, president of the Tokyo Chamber of Commerce. In presenting the invitation these Japanese gentlemen said: "A great demonstration of Christianity is needed in the Orient for the encouragement of Christians and to deny the current report that Christianity is dying in England and the United States." They also argued that such a convention in Tokyo would be a powerful factor for the peace of the world, "for," said they, "the East and West are face to face as never before, and great questions are to be settled, which can only be satisfactorily settled through the Spirit of God." Mr. Kozaki in closing his address said: "May God hasten the day when the Land of the Rising Sun will be the land of the Healing Sun of Righteousness." The two delegates said Japan would raise $35,000 for the entertainment of the convention. The invitation was enthusiastically received and unanimously accepted.

At the final session of the convention, the front of the platform was decorated with the flags of all nations, all of the bunting ornamented with gold and white silk braids and tassels. Felicitous remarks were made by the incoming president, Sir Robert Laidlaw, and by the new chairman of the executive committee, Mr. H. J. Heinz. The convention closed with a consecration service led by Dr. F. B. Meyer, in which the congregation arose and repeated each in his own tongue the following self-dedication: "My Saviour, I love thee and give thee my life. Put into my heart love for the children, and help me to help them. Lord Jesus, may I help to bring the world to thee."

After a few months he was well again, but as he did not have the opportunity to get away, he started to work here. Soon he became a leader among the worst, until about three years ago, when he was saved, and he has now dedicated himself to the work for Christ. He has already made several successful trips as colporteur, and three weeks ago he left our station with five big boxes of Scriptures, tracts and evangelical books. Last week my fellow-worker, Rev. J. Christiansen, left for the Andes, too, but to work in another State, and he brought with him four boxes of Bibles and good books.

Every week (we only receive mail once a week here) we receive letters from remote places, in which the writer tells us that through reading the Bible or Christian literature, he has been brought to Christ. In the mountain regions, where much of our work lies, there are difficult roads or paths over which the Bible colporteur or missionary must travel in order to reach the people with the Word of God. We are glad to be in the work for our Master, although our field is in tropical South America, where heathenism and superstition are prevailing; but with an open Bible and a living Christ we shall surely gain the victory. There is also great need of the Gospel in the republic of Colombia.

"MY COUNTRY, 'TIS OF THEE"

From the "New York Freeman's Journal," June 28, 1913

S is the time of year at graduating exercises are atholic schools and Catholic t will not be out of place to ıote of warning against the "America" by the pupils of ucational institutions. The ines so dear to the hearts of omaniacs should never be hin the walls of a Catholic a Catholic college. the history of the song the sh element would like to e to the exclusion of the ngled Banner." Sung to the tune of "God Save the King," it helps perpetuate the fiction that we are a nation of "Anglo-Saxons." The "Star-spangled Banner," in its original form, cannot be utilized to further the "hands-across-the-sea" policy. Therefore, the national anthem is under the ban of Anglomaniacs. From the viewpoint of a broad national spirit these are the reasons why a sectional song by a Yankee Protestant minister, who wrote it for a Yankee Protestant Sunday school picnic, is objectionable.

It is especially unsuitable for Catholic celebrations. Think of Catholic boys and girls singing:

Land where my fathers died,
Land of the Pilgrims' pride.

A few months ago the Freeman, commenting on the impropriety of having such stuff sung in Catholic schools, said: "We have heard of the doggerel lines of 'America,' written by a Protestant minister for a Protestant Sunday school picnic to the tune of 'God Save the King,' being sung at Catholic school exhibitions under the auspices of Catholic priests who, if they had lived in Massachusetts in the time of the 'Pilgrim Fathers,' would have met with short shrift from these gentry whom Catholic children in Catholic schools indirectly are taught to hold in reverence."

In the article from which we have quoted we expressed the hope that the next time "America" should be sung at one of these exhibitions, something should be done to call attention to the inappropriateness of doing honor to the memory of narrow-minded bigots of the Cromwellian breed. If any of our readers happen to be present on an occasion when this offense shall be repeated, we advise them to hiss and hiss vigorously, no matter if they disturb the harmony of the proceedings.

buried to the shoulders in the débris and so were the five boys. Two of the boys were rescued; the others perished. Tales like this are heard everywhere, with many narrow escapes.

Our pastor tells us that he was standing in a grocery talking with the proprietor. He describes the awful sound and then the tremendous shaking. He stepped across the threshold about three feet into the street. He was halted by the sudden falling flat at his feet of the complete front of the business block just opposite. Had he taken one step further, he would have been crushed. Seven other people are said to have perished there. While I was there, the corpse of a student was dug out from underneath the same pile of débris. This pastor rescued several people from death at great risk to his own life.

What is descriptive of Tirnovo is also true of Gorna Orehovitza and Lascovitz, large towns about twelve kilometers distant. All these poor people had was now hauled into a vast heap of débris. Fortunately I had a little fund from some friends in America and from some Quaker friends in England. It was not large, but how thankful I was that I could leave some bread and flour with these stricken families. Truly with wars, pestilence and earthquake Bulgaria is passing through the severest ordeal. Her people are drinking the cup of suffering to the dregs.

SUMMER CITY CHILDREN

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER, JR.

THE streets were narrow down there, along Mulberry Bend, narrow and crowded with the scraps of humanity that have come to our shores like pieces of floating driftwood. And when the sun streams down in merciless rays upon the dirty streets, and the narrow pavements, and the high dingy tenements, the place only becomes more crowded with the people of the city; the people who are searching for a breath of fresh air that they never seem to find.

Margaret E. Sangster, Jr.

And the children—they swarmed everywhere! In one basement a tiny girl sorted tobacco leaves, while every now and then a racking cough shook her thin body, while in the doorway of a tenement a small boy clasped a tiny swaddled baby in his weak young arms; and as his dull world-old eyes gazed in pleading at the gray comfortless sky, his untiring voice soothed his small charge in low, sweet Italian.

We entered a tenement—one of the most sordid ones—and began to climb stairs, stepping over the half-clothed babies that slept on the sagging boards. Up four flights we crept, with slow, rather nervous steps; for windows are not necessary on tenement stairways and babies are very easy to walk on; but at last we reached a door, a door that opened cautiously to our knock, and disclosed a voluble Italian woman, suave, placid, with the manner of a queen. Her voice greeted us in a pretty broken English.

"Good-morn', ladies—will you be-a seat? I mus' beg excuse for see, I have been-a sweep!" She paused, and as we murmured deprecatingly that of course "we excused," she explained to us that it was hard to keep the two rooms neat with a family of eight to cook and mend for. And as I thought of eight persons sleeping in the two boxlike apartments, I could not help the shudder that crept through me.

We went out on the street again, Mulberry Street. The push-cart venders crowded into the pavement with their loads of clams, vegetables, fruits, silk stockings and ice-cream. They were tired and hot and very cross, so the children kept out of their way as much as possible, only darting in toward the sidewalk and safety when a motor truck thundered past with its shrill note of warning.

At the next corner we crossed the trolley tracks and dived into another alley-like street. And then we knew by a sign-board that we were in Pell Street, the street of mystery, the center of Chinatown.

The street was empty except for three tiny children and one or two sleepy-eyed Chinamen (for Pell Street sleeps by day), but an uncanny feeling hung over the place, a feeling of silence and—death. The push carts were gone, and the windows of houses stared blankly out at the passers-by, while a faint perfume of incense tinged the air with the atmosphere of the Orient. It was very difficult to remember that Mulberry Street, with its noise and heat, and struggling humanity, was only a few hundred feet away.

The Chinese children were different too. They played solemnly with a small yellow kitten, silken black heads bowed over their treasure, eyes beady and bright, but lips sober and unsmiling. Even the smallest, a tiny boy in the old jacket and trousers of gay silk sucked his finger placidly and looked at me with hostile, unsmiling eyes. I was glad when we left Chinatown. The feeling was too weird and shivery to enjoy.

Allen Street joins Pell Street at a lofty corner flanked by saloons; and with a sigh of relief we turned into the new section, which was noisier and dirtier than any of the others. My shoe slipped on a banana peel, and I caught myself just in time to prevent falling on a tiny dirty boy, who sat dabbling his small feet in the refuse that filled the gutter. He glanced up at me with twinkling brown eyes that looked very large in his thin little face, and as I smiled down at him, his shrill little voice cried:

"You—a nice lady! I love-a you."

We left him lying on the pavement. He was surrounded by dirt of all kinds—ash barrels, garbage cans, and bits of newspaper. And yet, some day, he will be one of our citizens.

We reached the Ghetto at last; the Ghetto, with its noise and crowds, its men and women, its laughter and tears; and the center of its comedies and tragedies — Riverdale Avenue, where the people are even more crowded than at any other street. Women quarreled in corners, men shouted their wares, and little children lay in the roadway (the sidewalk was too full to accommodate them). Dill pickles were thrust into the same wagon with vichy water and ice cream; clothes hung on the push-carts collecting germs and dust, and the sun beat down more terribly than ever. No wonder the children lay exhausted on the dust of the public highway.

As we left the crowded streets and boarded a trolley car, I experienced a deep sense of relief. Why, the trolley car was comparatively clean, and it made a little breeze, and it had room to move! And then suddenly I saw a picture before me, the picture of a small brook surrounded by diminutive shouting boys, who were splashing joyously in the water. The background was a tall stately mountain, and over their heads the breeze was fluttering among the green covered branches. And they were happy; happy with the joy of youth, and life, and summertime.

And I wished, with my eyes shut tight, and my heart making a prayer, that every one of the thousands of little hopeless East Side children could be in my picture, happy and joyous, and healthy as God meant them to be.

There is a little girl who lives in the Italian section of Mulberry Bend. She hardly ever has any pleasure, for a large family of little tots keep her busy when she is not helping the mother with sweat-shop work that is always waiting to be done. And so one day when a city missionary saw a smile playing around her pale lips, she asked curiously:

"Cherubina, why are you happy?"

"Oh, miss," answered the little girl slowly, "there ain't no day with nothin' in it!"

one is hearing; we know it. And, again and again, through the years he has given us precisely what we asked for at the time it was needed.

Still more wonderful are the times he has blessed and helped us when we were not asking. A sudden word, spoken by his voice in our hearts; a sudden joy; a sudden clearing-up of a puzzling tangle; the sudden granting of a long-cherished desire; the sudden realization that we were in the right place and doing the right thing, that demonstrated unmistakably that he had been guiding us all the time, though we were not sure of it step by step. Experiences like these prove the reality of the Christian's God.

This should be a fruitful meeting for Christian Endeavor and the Young People's Union. Life should be different after it. We get into the way of drifting along, with our faith dim and our zeal cold. This lesson brings us up with a sharp turn. Is my life proving to others the truths of the Gospel? Have I a testimony that will overcome evil, and make Christ real to the world?

Former members of Christian Endeavor are asked to come with their testimonies and absent members are asked to send them for this meeting. If the testimonies that are to be spoken or written at this time could be gathered up into a set of volumes it would make an overwhelming proof of the solidity of our foundations. Be sure to sing at some point during the service:

"On Christ, the solid rock, I stand."

Books That Have Helped Me*

OF THE books you have read up to to-day, which have helped you most? That is an interesting question. You may find it somewhat hard to answer, because the books that leap first into your memory as those that made the greatest impression upon you may not seem to have been distinctly helpful. Maybe they were not. Some books make a great impression but not a helpful impression. Yet the chances are that the books that stirred you deeply were helpful after all. It may not have been a religious book, but it was a book that gave you a true and vivid picture of life, and no one can face a new truth and be the same afterwards. If he faces it frankly and bravely and humbly he will be the better for it.

The whole subject is much too large to be treated satisfactorily in a few crowded paragraphs. Christians must be extremely careful in their reading. Novel-reading used to be considered by many devout people as essentially sinful. But that was when the art of novel-writing was somewhat new in the history of the English language, though the feeling has been kept alive here and there almost up to the present. It is surely hard to see how there can be anything intrinsically wrong about story-telling or story-hearing. Our Master, Christ, was a famous teller of tales. His stories, that have been called parables, are among the masterpieces of all literature.

So the books that made the greatest impression were probably some favorite story books. Then there may have been some good books on religious subjects, a heart message from some earnest minister or evangelist or teacher or missionary. The book spoke to your heart in a new way, and you obeyed its challenge.

In preparing to lead this meeting, the leader should send word to the different members asking each one to prepare a list of titles that answer the question.

The evening will be an extremely interesting one. It should be a time not only of reminiscence but of looking forward. Try to form the best habits of reading. Read stories—but not too many of them. Develop a taste for poetry if you have not yet learned to care for it. Read history—make it interesting by letting your imagination have play. Read the books sounding the earnest call to new social ideals. Read missionary books, the tales of heroism and conquest of the brave men and women who are changing life all over the world by speaking the name of Jesus. Read the books of men like Robert E. Speer and John R. Mott and F. B. Meyer, who are calling the church to higher standards of Christian life and service. Since you are Methodists, read again the stirring books about Methodism's early glories—Wesley's Journal and Asbury's Journal and Stevens' History of Methodism. You have no idea how thrilling they are. They will make you long to have a real part in keeping our great church true to its early standards of faith and zeal and victory, and helping it forward to fresh victories and triumphs.

Above all, read the Bible. Master it. Feed on it. Let it enlighten and strengthen and glorify your life. How many minutes are you giving to it daily? Will the attention you are giving it stand the test of conscience and of reason?

HAYNES

America's First Car

Has the most wonderful improvement in automobile building

No more yanking of hand levers—no more burring and crashing of gears. Simply press a button, and electricity does the rest—shifts the gears instantly, with automatic surety and quiet. Since Elwood Haynes created America's first gasoline car two decades ago, the Haynes has been constantly the pioneer and pace-maker in developing the automobile and bringing it to its present state of perfection.

Other Haynes Firsts

The first gasoline-driven American-made car.
The first two-cylinder opposed motor car.
The first user of aluminum in crank case.
The first to use nickel steel in axles.
The first side door car.
The first to use throttling carburetor.
The first to use make and break spark.
The first to use the jump spark.
The first to use electric ignition.
The first to use a magneto.
The first to use the double independent system of ignition, through two sets of spark plugs.

All new Haynes models have Vulcan electric gear shift as standard equipment

The Electric Gear Shift completes the electrical equipment of the Haynes. The car is started by electricity, lighted by electricity and the gears are shifted by electricity. This wonderful invention puts and end to the pulling of gear levers. You sit erect, your hands never need to leave the steering wheel. Your eyes can always be fixed on the road ahead. Safety and confidence are gained, as well as absolute ease and convenience—to say nothing of the satisfaction and pride in possessing the very latest of automobile betterments.

Many other great features

Mechanical tire pump; pressure feed gasoline supply; complete dash board equipment; rain vision, ventilating wind shield; wide doors and roomy tonneau; deep cushions; Collins curtains adjustable from the seat; good-sized package space under both front and rear seats, and many other advantages.

Beautiful—Strong

The lines of the new Haynes models are long, sweeping, and very pleasing. Back of the beauty, the convenience and comfort of the Haynes, is a simplicity, sturdiness and reliability that is the finished result of twenty years of testing and proving.

Questions and Answers

Mrs. W. B. P., Greenlee, Va., referring to a recent paragraph in THE MAIL-BAG on the "Communion of Saints," writes: "With all who compose the church triumphant the church militant has communion in all her services, specifically, I should say, in the communion service where the spiritual bond is strengthened and perpetuated with those we know, here and beyond, and those who with us in the church are 'members one of another'—'very members incorporate in the mystical body of Christ, which is the blessed company of all faithful people.' In these words from the communion service, where the spiritual bond is strengthened found the explanation of the clause of the creed above quoted."

C. O. D., Texas. "Negro" means "black." The term is the general appellation of the Hamitic races. The capacity of the negro for spiritual and intellectual development is no longer questioned. A number of the regular denominations are assisting in spiritual and educational work among the negroes, helping to support schools and colleges, etc. The African M. E. Church is doing an excellent work throughout the country and some good work in the African mission field also.

E. B., Brenham, Texas. In Rev. 2: 4 we read of some one leaving the first love. To whom is the Lord speaking, and what is meant by first love?

These words were addressed to the Christian believers at Ephesus. The "first love" does not refer to any person or influence other than Christ, but simply means that the Ephesians had lost the intensity of their affection and zeal for Christ. The Ephesian church had had special opportunities and blessing. Under Paul's ministrations its members had received the gift of the Holy Spirit (Acts 19: 1-6); the apostle had resided with them for three years (Acts 20: 31); he had later written to them what is perhaps his most spiritually exalted epistle. Their experience of love for Christ had been warm and keen. In his message sent them through John the Master is reproving them for having allowed their love for him to grow weak and cold.

N. R., Pontiac, Mich. 1. The question of "the greatest minister" depends largely on the individual point of view. Each denomination would hold that the leading man in its own ranks was the greatest. 2. The evangelists you name are all interdenominational. 3. Mark 13. 31 explained recently in THE MAIL-BAG. Mark 15: 38 refers to the rending of the thick and gorgeously wrought curtain which hung between the "holy place" and the "holiest of all," shutting out all access to the innermost sanctuary, into which none might enter save the high priest, and he only once a year on the day of atonement. The miraculous rending was interpreted to mean that access to the Throne of Grace was now made manifest, and that the sacrifice on Calvary had been a final and sufficient blood-offering for the world's sins. Luke 21: 33, read in connection with the preceding verse, is interpreted to mean that those then living should see the new kingdom of Christ established in the hearts of men, and the foundations of it firmly laid.

A. J. D., Eastman, Ga. In Heb. 10: 26 the apostle describes the hesitancy of certain people (professing Christians) in reference to their confession of faith. Professor Bernhard Weiss commenting on this passage, says this lack of faith and hesitancy "to the consummation of redemption Paul regarded as a sinning against better knowledge and conscience. In the case of those who have received the knowledge of the truth of redemption. For sinners of this kind the Old Covenant already had no sacrifices, how much less did the New Covenant have such, in which there is only the one sacrifice of Christ, by which those who do not trust this sacrifice with the confidence of faith have no part at all."

H. L., Hurricane Station, W. Va. It is undoubtedly true that Job and Melchisedek had an intimate knowledge of Jehovah. But God appointed Abraham, who was a contemporary of Melchisedek and perhaps of Job, to be the founder of a nation to which he would specially reveal himself. We cannot be sure of any other cases of men who really came to know God except through the influence of the Jews and their successors, the Christian Church. It was hardly to be said that the Council of Nicea framed the code of theological laws, but it did embody in its great creed the words which especially emphatically the Christian doctrine of the deity of Jesus. In that book it is sometimes considered to be the basis and forerunner of all subsequent Christian theology. 3. There is no such document as the Arian creed. Arius was the leader of those who held unorthodox views about the deity of Christ in the early part of the fourth century; Athanasius was the leader of the orthodox forces at the Council of Nice. The Athanasian Creed is a long and extremely beautiful statement of the Christian faith, but is not believed to have been written by Athanasius himself. 4. The Epistle of Barnabas is one of the many pieces of apocryphal New Testament literature. It is not believed to have been written by Barnabas, although it bears his name.

M. R. G., Brooklyn, N. Y. After reading an article under the heading, "The Value of a Name," written by T. N. Page, in relation to leaving off the word "Protestant" in speaking of the Episcopal Church, I would say that I trust that through the efforts of your most valued paper—efforts in which at least one Protestant has rejoiced—the plan may be defeated. This is written by one whose antecedents were burned at the stake for doing just what some now want to abolish, that is: Protesting against the evils of the Roman Church. That was where we got the name, and as a church we ought not to want to progress beyond that title. Let us not be afraid to hold our own against any religious power, for Christ is the head of our church.

Mrs. C. C. T., Milwaukee, Wis. In Mark 2: 15 the passage "he was sitting at meat in his house," is held to refer to the house of Jesus' new disciple Matthew (see verse 14). Matthew (originally called Levi, the son of Alphæus) was a publican, which explains the statement in verse 15 that many publicans and sinners sat down with Jesus and his disciples at Matthew's table, persons of that description forming the ordinary associates of a publican. This view is confirmed by verse 16, in which the rabbis undertake to rebuke the Saviour for being found in such company.

Emily B., Paterson, N. J. The cause of the second revolution in China, according to the statements of patriotic Chinese, is that the present administration has no apparent purpose of working to realize the ideal of Dr. Sun Yat Sen and the other leaders who desired to establish a federal republic, like that of the United States. Instead, they are confronted with a government which has rendered the change nominal, a nominal one from the old despotic to the new rule with its policy of centralized power instead of vesting the power in the States themselves. At this distance it is difficult to understand the situation or to judge whether the charge that President Yuan's rule is despotic be well founded or otherwise.

O. M. P., Des Moines, Iowa. Since the Holy Spirit is a person, why do some passages of the New Testament use the neuter pronoun in referring to him?

In the New Testament references to the Holy Spirit the masculine form is used almost without exception. In John 14: 26 and 15: 26 the relative pronoun "which" is employed, a word that in present-day English is always neuter. At the time the Bible was translated, however, the form "which" was used of persons as well as things, for example: "Our Father which art in heaven" (Matt. 6: 9) and "these . . . which have received the Holy Ghost." (Acts 10: 47.) As a matter of fact it would not have been surprising if the neuter form had crept into the translation of some other passages, as the Greek word for spirit (pneuma) is neuter. This makes it all the more remarkable that throughout the Greek New Testament the pronouns referring to this neuter word are masculine. The fact of the Greek noun itself being neuter has no bearing whatever on the question of personality or sex, as is well understood by any one familiar, for instance, with German, in which the same thing is often true.

N. O. T., Westfield, N. J. Rev. 21 gives a vivid description of the "new heaven and new earth." It has been a fruitful subject of comment, some holding that the earth, having been cursed by sin, will be redeemed, regenerated, purified by fire, and transformed by the "second Adam" and made a fit dwelling-place for the righteous, where the law of love shall prevail and God shall be all in all. Thus the "new creation" is interpreted to mean the restoration of the physical universe as the final abode of glorified, deathless and sinless humanity. Others hold that the teaching is clear that the present earth is to be literally destroyed, and that the promise of a new heaven and a new earth will be fulfilled, as he hath said: "Behold I make all things new."

Inquirer, Germantown, Pa. The new English poet laureate, Dr. Robert Bridges, is about sixty-nine years of age. He was educated at Oxford, and after leaving the university studied medicine and for several years was attached to the staffs of two hospitals. He retired from practice in 1882 and has since devoted himself wholly to literature. He married. His best poetical work is in classical meters, a good example being his "Peace Ode" on the conclusion of the Boer War, which is unrhymed. A noted critic, Clement K. Shorter, credits him with having done "the most perfect lyrical work" of any of the present English poets. One of his short lyrics, which has been greatly commended, is given below:

When Death to either shall come—
I pray it be first to me—
Be happy as ever at home,
If so, as I wish, it be.

Possess thy heart, my own,
And sing to the child on thy knee,
Or read to thyself alone
The songs that I made for thee.

Contrast this in its simplicity with the concluding stanzas from the "Peace Ode":

Wherefore to-day one gift above every gift
Let us beseech that God will accord to her:
Always a right judgment in all things;
Ev'n to celestial excellencies;

And grant us in long peace to accumulate
Joy, and to stablish friendliness and commerce
And barter in markets for unpriced
Beauty, the pearl of unending empire.

Mr. Thomas M. Williams, Worcester, Mass., sends to THE MAIL-BAG a curious explanation of the reason why so many natives of Ireland are named Jeremiah and Daniel. He writes:

"The Irish bards, 2500 years ago, tell from records which are kept in Trinity College, Dublin, that a certain prophet named Jeremiah came from Egypt to the western islands about that time and settled in that country and brought with him Tephi, the daughter of the last king of the Jews, who had been taken captive to Babylon, Jeremiah being her grandfather. She was very beautiful, so the king to be crowned spoke to Jeremiah about marriage, but as the people of the country had become pagans, the prophet told the king that he must adopt the ten commandments as his rule of faith, which he did. The king who married the eastern princess was an Israelite of the tribe of Dan."

The suggestion that this ruler was himself a descendant of one of the "lost tribes" is a novel one.

L. M. S., Brooklyn, N. Y. The passage in Psalm 122: 3 is the language of admiration over a well-built, noble and symmetrical city, whose proportions are agreeable to the eye, and whose compactness and solidity give assurance of power and safety. It conveys no idea of congestion or overcrowding, but rather of a city of palaces and great architectual beauty, in which the whole Jewish race might take delight.

L. D. D., Alberta. 1. It is generally believed that the site upon which the excavators have been at work recently is that of Babylon. 2. Hope is one of the three great elements of Christian life and character (I Cor. 13: 13), the others being faith and love. Faith appropriates the fact of salvation; love animates the present, while hope takes hold of the future, all three together reflecting the kingdom of God, past, present and future. The hope of which Scripture speaks, however, is not a mere wish, but an assurance—a firm hope or trust and in this sense, an anchor. Its true meaning in the Gospel is the assured expectation of salvation and all the blessings that flow from it here and hereafter. 3. For passages on abstinence see Lev. 10: 9, Num. 6: 5, Jer. 35: 16-18 and others.

Miscellaneous

Subscriber, Minnesota. We occasionally come in contact with prayer chain letters. Some are seemingly harmless, while others appear to be an outcome of fanaticism and threaten loss and misfortune if neglected. We pay no attention to such communications.

Mrs. M. C. A., Fairbury, Ill. The fact that any one is troubled in conscience over sin is regarded as conclusive evidence that the Holy Spirit has not been withdrawn from such one. These visitations of remorse and sorrow over sin, commentators interpret as "strivings of the Spirit."

Mrs. Thos. Hancock, Corning, Calif., would be glad to receive from some reader of this paper a copy of the poem, the opening lines of which are:

"I am not what I was,
My heart is withered," etc.

W. M., Brampton, Mich. See the account of the humble birthplace of the Saviour in Luke 2: 7. The manger is believed to have been in one of the exterior buildings of a public khan or caravanserai. His entrance into the world in Bethlehem was an express fulfilment of the prediction in Micah 5: 2.

Reader, Middle River, Md. The number 144,000 in Rev. 7: 4 is a symbolical number. Twelve is the number of the tribes; 12 by 12 represents fixity and completeness; this taken a thousand-fold implies a world perfectly pervaded by the divine. Such is the explanation of some commentators on this point.

Blind—Sent 256 Coupons

RUTH O'REGAN, a girl who is totally blind and whose father is pastor of a church in Buffalo, N. Y., has sent in 256 coupons calling for that many new subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. True, her father and her friends helped her to a large extent, but she was the inspiration of the accomplishment and she now has the satisfaction of knowing that she has placed the influence of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in 256 homes where it was not felt before.

It is a fine instance of how the members of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Family are taking advantage of this opportunity to carry on this form of home missionary work. Thousands are at work inducing their friends to join, and as each one is usually responsible for more than one coupon, the membership list is increasing at the rate of over a thousand a day. Think of what a moral and spiritual force THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Family will become when all of the returns are in!

Dear friend, have you done your part? Have you asked your friends to take advantage of this wonderful opportunity? Have you sent coupons to friends at a distance, first writing your own name on each coupon? Please do so at once and if you need more coupons let us know and we will send them to you. The first of the month is drawing near, so do not delay.

If every one of our friends did half as well as blind Ruth O'Regan, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Family would become a mighty influence in the land. Send your coupons today.

Fifty or sixty were wait- him that Monday morning, and they poured s office rapidly as soon as the doors were by door-keeper Patrick McKenna. It was ong ago that it was a difficult matter for the per men to see the President personally, and an impossibility even then to get his opinion ent events. It was practically unknown for nt Cleveland to talk with any of the corre- nts. With President McKinley it was an easier matter, but it was not usual; and while both Presidents Roosevelt and Taft saw and talked with some of them occasionally, it remained for President Wilson to make the innovation of receiving them in a body at stated times, to discuss public affairs. There are more than two hundred special press correspondents at the national capital, and they represent about all the leading newspapers of the world. These meetings are quite informal and the utmost freedom prevails. The correspondents ask any questions they wish, and the President answers frankly. If it is something which he cannot at the time explain, he says so; but he often tells them—"between ourselves," as he terms it—matters which at the time cannot be published, but which he wishes the newspaper people to understand. Nor is his confidence ever violated. It is understood among them, too, that the President is never to be quoted directly without special permission. That Monday morning they gathered around the President's desk in the usual semicircle, and after greetings he told them in a word or two about the pleasures of his vacation—the bogie he had made at several holes while golfing, though he modestly disavowed any brilliant playing. He went on in the same light vein and cleared up "the mystery of the eye-glasses." He had broken the only pair he had with him while at Cornish, and telephoned to the White House to have a pair sent on to him, and at the same time telegraphed his Washington optician to mail him a pair. From this incident a story crept into the newspapers that the package supposed to contain his glasses contained important state papers, and all sorts of surmises were suggested. The President denied the whole thing, and laughingly said that the only "mystery" about it was that the glasses which were made and mailed to him by the optician reached their destination sooner than those sent by special delivery from the White House.

Then the men began questioning him about affairs in Mexico and Japan, he answering their questions frankly or "hedging" in the most delightful manner. While perfectly good-natured, he made his interlocutors understand that they were asking more than they should have asked.

While talking with the correspondents, President Wilson often stands leaning a little backward with his hands resting on the chair back of him. He listens attentively to every question, catches the meaning with instant perception, and his answers, while given with evident thought, are always quick and comprehensive. Frequently he brings his hands together as he listens, and he has a way of softly rubbing his left thumb with the first finger and thumb of his right hand; but as he answers he emphasizes a point with a quick lift of the hand, or pins down an argument by slowly striking the left palm with two fingers of his right hand.

THE EXECUTIVE CLERKS AT THEIR DESKS

THE WHITE HOUSE CLERICAL STAFF AT WORK

A DAY'S WORK WITH THE PRESIDEN[T]

Copyright, Pach Bros., N. Y.

PRESIDENT WILSON AND "THE "WHITE HOUSE BABY"

How the hours hummed the rest of that busy morning at the White House offices! The threatened great railway strike of the trainmen and conductors, which involved forty-five railroads and more than a hundred thousand employees, was to be considered that afternoon at three o'clock in the President's office. At one o'clock he went over to the White House to luncheon and shortly after two o'clock he went to the East Room to receive the new Ecuadorian minister, who called to present his credentials. It was nearly three before he returned to the executive offices.

Meantime the newspaper men were gathering in the main reception room of the office building. When the Secretary of Labor, Mr. Wilson, came trudging in with a fat portfolio of papers under his arm, a half-dozen cameras were leveled at him. He stood good-naturedly for the photographers, as did the visiting railroad magnates. After the party had passed into the President's office, came a long, hot afternoon of waiting while the conference was in session. Occasionally some newspaper man would tiptoe into the little hall leading to the President's office and try to catch a word, but the watchful doorkeeper would be seized with an attack of coughing, or find some errand which took him into the hall, and then of course the newspaper man would be hurried back to the main corridor. Finally, at almost six o'clock, the doors of the President's office were thrown open and the conferees came filing out.

From the inner office in a few moments came the word that the President would see the correspondents. Then there was a hurried rush to reach his office. President Wilson began immediately to tell his listeners of the conclusions which had been reached in the conference and to explain the positions which had been taken by the different factions. He talked freely and was often stopped by questions from his listeners, and these he answered with great clearness. Then, after the names of the board were given out, the President went over to the White House for his belated dinner.

During these hot summer days, while the President's family is away, the President and his private secretary almost every evening, at about seven o'clock, have their dinners together on the west terrace. It is a cozy little space, back of the bay trees where the mahogany table sits, and overlooks the stately south grounds of the mansion.

Just now, the President is living on something of the order of camping out in the White House, and will be for some weeks to come, on account of the summer renovations that are taking place there. Many of the rooms are to have new wall coverings, some of the furnishings of the house are to be renovated or replaced, and the big, roomy attic, which extends entirely across the top of the building, is to be remodeled into sleeping apartments. The historic bric-a-brac has been stored away, the furniture has been encased in its summer linens, and the portraits and other pictures have been covered or packed away until the alterations and renovations are completed and the White House family returns for the winter season.

But even the hot weather has made President Wilson change his routine of daily duties but little. He begins his day in his library, and usually has his stenographer meet him there immediately after breakfast. With surprising rapidity he goes through the great pile of morning mail, which is but a fraction of what is addressed to him every day. By ten o'clock he is at his desk in his office, where for three hours and more he meets the members of Congress and others with whom he has appointments. These appointments, made several days ahead, are divided, ordinarily, in from ten to fifteen minute talks with each appointee. When he first came to the White House his callers would sometimes save their clinching argument to present to him at the last of their talk, and they would frequently use up all their time before they got to it. They soon learned, however, that whatever point was not presented in the time allotted was not presented at all. As the man's time nears its winding-up moment, the President glances at the clock and makes a slight movement. "But, oh, Mr. President, just a few minutes longer; I want to tell you—" But the President holds out his hand with a gesture of finality. "I am sorry," he replies, "but this is Mr. So-and-So's time, and I must give it to him," and passes on to his next engagement.

Tuesdays and Fridays are Cabinet days, and the President does not see any one on those mornings unless imperative business makes it ne[cessary]. But there is and has been such a world of "[execu]tive business" ever since his inaugurati[on] even with all his system and punctuality [he] scarcely keep the days to the schedule he m[akes]. The other morning I made a little running [list] of the people who went in to see him within [an hour] or two. Five serious-looking United State[s Sena]tors came along and hurried into his off[ice]; during that same period several members [of the] House came also, two of them bringing a nu[mber of] their constituents who were visiting in the [city] felt that they must shake hands with the [great] Chief Executive. Then a high official fr[om the] State Department slipped in, and a half doze[n] paper men caught sight of him and flew af[ter him] to demand if there were anything new in th[e Mexi]can situation, or if it wasn't Mexico, coul[d it be] Japan? Before long a delegation of the [Anti-]Saloon League came in to protest against [the] appointment of a certain man on the Excise B[oard of] the District of Columbia, and they had not [left the] building when a national committeeman of [a West]ern State and some of his friends came in. [All] was in the forenoon, but that afternoon the [Presi]dent was to meet two small delegations of [women] in the East Room; after that he was to see [some] the ministers of the diplomatic corps; later [there] a conference with Secretary McAdoo, an[d in the] evening he was to have a consultation with [Secre]tary of War Garrison, who was leaving th[at] day on his trip to inspect the military posts [of the] country.

Pretty strenuous for hot weather! But [almost] every evening the President goes for an auto[mobile] ride, sometimes alone, but more often accom[panied] by his secretary, or by Dr. Grayson, the [White] House physician, or by Mr. Sloan, the older [of the] two private detectives who are always ne[ar the] President. Saturdays the President does not [go to] the executive offices at all. Sometimes in the [morn]ing of that day he goes out to one of the c[ountry] clubs to play golf, sometimes he goes hor[seback] riding, and often in the evenings he take[s long] walks; but the greater part of his Saturday [after]votes to his books, to writing, or to some mat[ter of] state which he has not found time to digest [during] the earlier days of the week.

Sundays are nearer days of rest in the [White] House offices than they have been there for [many] years. "We come nearer having our Sund[ays at] home under this administration than any [we have] ever known," said one of the oldest of the [White] House employees recently. That is true, be[cause] we have a President of the United States wh[o] lieves in the old commandment, "Remembe[r the] Sabbath day."

GIDEONS IN CONFERENCE

SEVERAL hundred busy traveling men broke into their trip schedules recently and gathered at Toronto for the first international convention of the "Gideons." They had an earnest and enthusiastic time, reviewing the work that had been accomplished, laying plans for the future, studying their Bibles, and praying together for continued and increased spiritual power.

A GROUP OF THE GIDEONS IN CONVENTION AT TORONTO, ONT., CANADA

There was much good humor in the meetings and addresses, and matters of business were despatched with a commercial man's promptness, but a deep spiritual note pervaded the convention. Dr. George E. Truett of Dallas, Texas, conducted a quiet hour each morning; evangelistic street meetings were held; and there was much prayer. On one occasion when one of the delegates asked for the prayers of the convention on behalf of the wife of one of their number, the men knelt down at once while several led in short earnest prayers for the sufferer.

The convention was opened on July 24, with an address by J. C. Simeon, president of the Canada Gideons. W. W. Smith, Canadian vice-president, stated that in the four years of its organization the society had placed twelve thousand Bibles in the hotels of Canada. Mr. George A. Warburton, of the Canadian Young Men's Christian Association, in addressing the convention, said, in referring to their splendid work of personal evangelism: "Any man who can sell goods can win souls for Christ." Mr. Warburton laid particular stress upon the need of teaching a masculine note in religion, declaring that it is necessary to proclaim a mundane Christ. "The commercial traveler," said he, "is the [most] practical [man] alive, and he [needs to] teach a prac[tical] religion; tha[t re]ligion is a r[eal] work, and [the] most difficult [thing] for a man, [is] that the rea[l] tion of thi[s] what the C[hris]tian traveler [is] trying to [take] home to thei[r] lows." Mr. W[ar]burton spoke [on] the special t[o] tations assa[ulting] traveling [men] and comme[nded] the organi[zation] strongly for [its] efforts at win[ning] men to Chris[t] personal w[ork].

A memorial service was held for Rev. L. C. Smith, D.D., late chaplain of [the] order in the United States. Dr. Truett, at one of his "quiet hour" t[alks] pointed out the splendid opportunity which traveling men have of serving [God] in their daily intercourse with business men.

Among the interesting features of the convention program was an add[ress] by Mr. Orin C. Baker of New York, general secretary of the Travelers' [Aid] Society. He told many stories of the work which the society is doing in h[elping] ing young girls and women on their arrival in the great city of New Yor[k] find their friends, where they have such, or in placing the strangers in [safe] surroundings and helping those who require it to obtain employment. [The] convention was greatly delighted with the splendid hospitality of the city [of] Toronto, which gave them royal welcome and entertainment. They were gi[ven] the freedom of the city, an address of welcome was made by Alderman Wic[kett], free transportation on the city trolley lines were given the delegates, lunch[eons] and excursions were provided. The sessions of the convention were held [in] the Metropolitan Church.

the man that has set England and America They talk about his surprising book, Black, which bids fair to give him a place ie masters of English style; they talk about spiritual message to the Christians of the d; they talk about his amazing declarations ome respects inner Africa is more civilized gland. What he will say about America is learned. He had been here only two days saw him. But there is little hope that we re better at his hands than did the mother

Perhaps most startling of all is his inter- n of the African mind and his insistence tead of being one of the most degraded of an races, the African comes near to being t finely and highly developed.

Crawford is first of all a linguist. He is a d, intense, almost inspired student of lan- He went to Africa with a basis of thirteen es, and upon this foundation he has built his miraculous knowledge of African tongues. ks' highly developed, flexible, beautiful lan- onvinces him of their high mental state. ie illustrates so charmingly in his book, the n is extremely poetic. He sees things in pic- and expresses his ideas in language that is ally poetic. "In Africa," he told me, "every s his own Wordsworth."

Mr. Crawford declares that the African mind is fitted to grasp the principles of Christianity with remarkable quickness, strength and accuracy. "Can they appreciate the doctrine of the Trinity?" I asked. He smiled: "Everything in their thought and observation exists in threes. They are Hegelians, and do not know it. Thesis, antithesis, synthesis—they find it everywhere. Hegel did not know he was a Trinitarian. The African takes to the doctrine as to something he has always known."

"The Atonement?" "Their language and their thought are full of it. They have many proverbs like this: 'No blood, no blossom.'" Then he made one of his amazing plunges into etymology, and brought forth a shining theological pearl. "You see, even in English, they are all the same word: 'Blood, bloom, blossom.'"

Not only can the African grasp Christian doctrine readily. He can express it forcefully and beautifully. "For instance, this, from the lips of one of our young converts recently: 'God allowed sin to unmask itself in the murder of his Son.'"

In matters of civilization, Mr. Crawford insists, the native Africans are on a high plane. "They have a woman suffrage organization," he declared, "extending the whole width of Africa. They hold conferences into which no man dare penetrate.—

"The instruction of children is remarkable. Much superstition is mingled with it, but the lessons themselves are sound. The children are taught the great facts of life. The African cannot comprehend our policy of keeping a child in ignorance about these things. Sex crimes are punished with death. Polygamy exists, but this women's organization is making a fight against that. We insist that all our men converts give up their plural wives."

Earlier in the conversation, giving his first impressions of New York, he said: "I have been looking at your Metropolitan tower—so high, so dominating. Then I looked at little Trinity. I could not help wondering—is that a fair indication of New York's spirit? The temple of money so great, the temple of God so small!" I urged that we had at least two great cathedrals and a great and busy church life, but there can be no doubt his first impression was too near the truth.

As we discussed the question whether the church were altogether on the right track, I asked him: "What is the track?"

"That is easy," he answered. "Christ told us what it is. He said: 'I am the track.'"

With all his scholarship, Mr. Crawford is one of the old-fashioned believers in the old-fashioned views of the Bible. His skill as a linguist is most valuable here. He said, for instance, during our conversation: "In the first chapter of John, Christ is called the Logos, the Word. Paul exhorts Timothy to preach the Word. I defy twenty thousand Greeks," by which he means Greek scholars, "to tell me whether Paul meant 'Preach Christ,' or 'Preach the Word.'" In Mr. Crawford's thinking the two are inseparable.

CHINA IN THE MELTING-POT

BY CLAYTON SEDGWICK COOPER

S I leave China after weeks of travel and investigation and interviews with her leading men, the retrospect is neither roseate nor reassuring. The clouds of uncertainty anger hover thickly upon the political horizon s old nation. Yuan Shi Kai, who by common it has been conceded to be the only man in possessing the ability or the political force to trongly his country, is implicated by the Kuo Tang party and the partisans of the southern ices with the assassination of the nationalist al leader, Sung Chaio Yen, while his accept- of the five-power loan, without the approval new parliament, has brought down upon his a storm of abuse and protest.

n interview with Dr. Sun Yat Sen, just as I China, I find him predicting with gloomy "war, civil war." "I have held back my s," said he, "as long as I can. This alliance president and his prime minister with assas- too much to endure! The southern provinces rtain to rise up in revolt, and there is much e ahead for us all."

ooks much as though China was following e in her method of establishing a republic; as Napoleon once said to Richard Cobden: ce makes her changes not by reformation, revolution."

ough all these changes the former Chinese al leaders are cautiously assuring themselves fety. In Hongkong I found that one of the nent Chinese who had assisted in drawing up w constitution had moved his family into the cts of the English protectorate for fear of his children kidnapped. Wu Ting Fang, his diplomatic years, is sitting tight in Shang- s he expressed it to me, "playing a watching, ting game." But one notices that he is ob- g these diplomatic tactics in his fine home in idst of European neighbors, under the protec- f the foreign settlements.

Powers—five of them, America having withdrawn—have nominally accepted the 25,000,000 pound loan agreement upon which the tardy Chinese parliament has not acted, but which has been signed by the president upon his own responsibility.

The real republic seems to be a different entity from that known in America. In fact, only a comparative few at the political top are interested in the least in government affairs beyond the payment of taxes and the preserving of peaceable conditions. The great deeps of the still and "brooding soul of China" are quite oblivious to this whirlwind of social and political change.

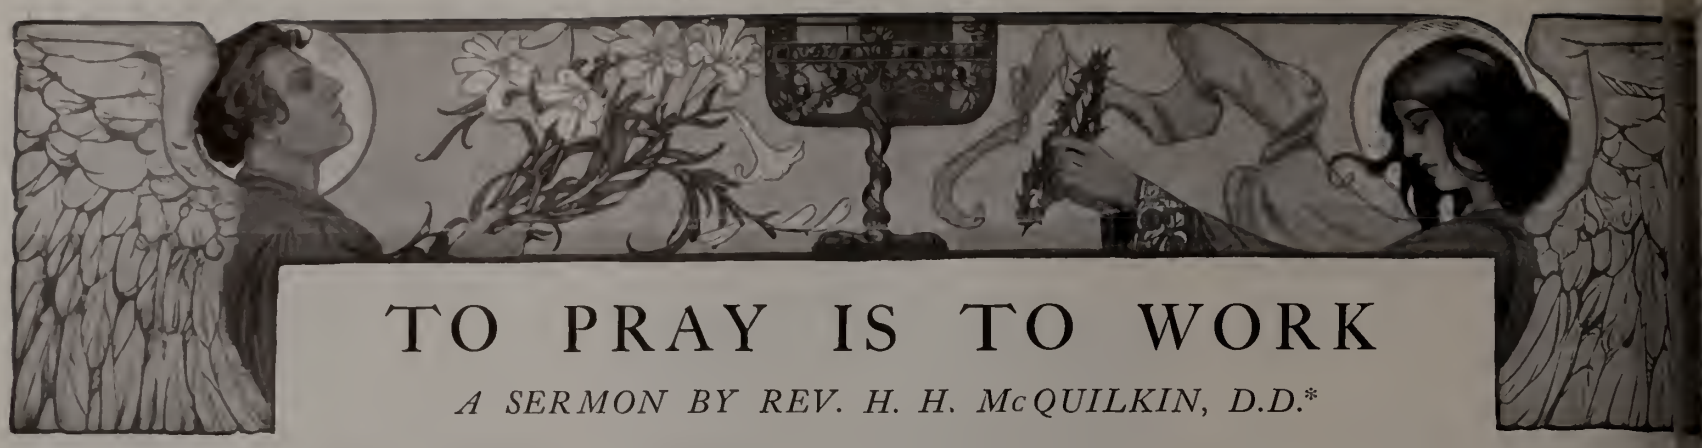
The foreign officials exhibit a tendency prevalent among the majority of the sober men of all races and classes here to stand by Yuan as the only possible strong leader capable of bringing order and progress out of the present chaos. The Northern army is with the president as it would not be with another Chinese, Yuan being the only member of this race who has had the honor of organizing and conducting a modern army. Some of the strong governors also are in his confidence and are loyal to him, and if the foreign loan falls into his hands there would seem to be little difficulty in his subduing the present unrest, though this unrest might easily spread to the formation of new confederacies in this vast nation.

One European consul expressed the attitude taken generally by foreign officials. "It is a practical matter, a Chinese matter; and we must look to the necessity for practical results and peace rather than inquire too intimately into conditions that are as yet only partly Western, indeed mostly Oriental, in character and in treatment."

To endeavor to prophesy concerning the future through all these baffling tendencies, even to attempt to depict the forces which are now working in these kaleidoscopic changes surging about the empty Dragon Throne, is truly difficult. I have asked scores of prominent Chinese the question, "Just what is happening at present in China?" In most cases they answer truthfully, "We do not know." One is at least convinced that it is not a new order so much as it is a no order. If it is a democracy, it is a democracy tempered with despotism. The true meaning of the word "republic" has hardly dawned upon the minds even of New China's political leadership. The whole nation is a melting pot of disjointed ideas and ideals, the old and the new, the Confucian and the Christian, the governors and the governed having been cast suddenly and promiscuously into a great seething cauldron of change and forces which are only partially understood by the participants themselves. Who can tell which or what will finally struggle to the surface and survive? It is certain that the great deeps of China's repressive conservatism, her huge inertia, have been broken up, to leave the giant nation struggling and wallowing in the wreckage of its own elements. But to call this half-formed, incoherent uproar of clashing interests a republic, or as one of the new leaders of China has expressed it, "the declaration of the will of the Chinese people," is to be blest with a higher degree of imagination than is vouchsafed to the common man.

Those who know the Chinese best believe that they will bring victory out of defeat in accordance with their immemorial habit of stumbling along through chaos to order, accomplishing often the seemingly impossible. It is always to be remembered that Chinese merchants do not want war, that the people are tired of revolution, that national patriotism does not run in the Chinese veins as it does in Japan, but that China craves, beyond all else, peace, and, with it, prosperity. If the present political leaders, sinking selfish and partisan interests, can convince the people that the new government will bring about these essential conditions for happiness the republic may be considered assured.

[Since the writing of Dr. Cooper's letter events have moved with surprising rapidity in China. The revolution predicted by Sun Yat Sen has been begun, and, according to the latest despatches, practically crushed by the troops of the Peking Government.]



TO PRAY IS TO WORK

*A SERMON BY REV. H. H. McQUILKIN, D.D.

TEXT: "And whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son." John 14: 13

THESE words of Jesus Christ are literally surcharged with divine power. They are dynamical declarations, fairly staggering under the tremendous pressure of heavenly forces with which he invests them. To read them is to deal with power, compelling, irresistible, immeasurable. Static energy is there, holding the soul of the believer, and the collective body of believers, steady in the midst of fluctuation and apostasy—"kept by the power of God, through faith unto salvation": kinetic energy leaps and flashes from the words, eager and able to move inert hearts, to break down walls of prejudice, and batter to pieces the opposition of Satan's kingdom—"Ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you; and ye shall be witnesses unto me." "I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation."

A few years ago I went through the American Locomotive Works. First, I was taken through the vast machine shops, where wheels were whirling and spindles were flying and smooth-running lathes were tossing long spiral columns of bright steel and brass into the air, and ponderous trip-hammers weighing tons and tons were gliding up and down with amazing nicety of calculation, pounding great masses of steel into the shape desired by the operator, and colossal cranes were picking up huge bulks of many tons' weight and carrying them about as noiselessly and as gently as a mother carries her baby to and from its little crib, and great shears were clipping car-axles with no apparent effort and no cramping of muscles. I stood fairly aghast at the overwhelming power that was at work everywhere. I felt like a veritable pigmy in the midst of giants at their tasks.

The Machine Shop of the Kingdom

Then I asked myself, "Where does all this power come from? For I knew it did not reside in the wheels and the spindles and the trip-hammers and the cranes and the shears. And for my answer I was led down the narrow stairway into the engine-room, where I felt as if I ought not to speak above a whisper, for there was the hush of a mysterious something in that room. I think it was the mystery of prodigious power. There were the great, silent-running engines, like giants shod with wool, their enormous fly-wheels revolving with planetary speed and noiselessness, and shooting resistless power off to the machine shops. Then I understood the secret of the energy that quickened all the vast network of machinery to do its work.

Our Lord's words while comforting his disciples reveal the machine shop of the kingdom. "Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do." I say that is the machine shop of the kingdom. It is "works, works, works"! You can hear the roar and rumble of the flying machinery of the church of Jesus Christ, turning out the finished products of salvation. What is that that Peter and the other apostles are working at over there? Oh, that is the conversion of the three thousand men and women on the Day of Pentecost. That was a greater piece of work than Christ ever did when he was on earth. And what is that task the church is engaged on over yonder? That is the transformation of Saul of Tarsus. It takes the trip-hammer and the mighty crane of direct arrest at the hands of the Crucified Son of God to effect the change, but what a valuable product it will be! Listen to the grinding and witness the struggles and dying agonies of the workmen of Christ over there where they are working with that huge mass. And you ask what enormous task that is that has been given to the servants of the King. That is nothing short of the conquest of the Roman Empire. It is a difficult and a dangerous job, but it must be done; and after all the persecutions and the cruel martyrdoms are over, the Cross of Christ will come down out of the sky and be emblazoned as the sign of the Conqueror. And then across yonder they are building the splendid Christian civilizations of England and Scotland and Holland and Germany and America. See that innumerable host of faithful toilers, coming onto the job and wearing out their lives at it and then lying down to die with a song of rejoicing on their lips as they open their eyes on the glories of heaven. There is Augustine, thirty-five years the bishop of Hippo; and there is Wyclif, the "morning star of the Reformation"; and Huss and Savonarola, and Luther and Calvin and Knox; there are Wesley and Whitefield, and David Livingstone and the great throng of missionary heroes and heroines. Behold them at work! They are turning out institutions, ideals, transformed lives, hearts full of faith and of hope and of love.

And after you have gone up and down among all the machinery of the Christian church of all the centuries, you will know what the Lord Jesus meant when he said, "Greater works than these shall he do."

The Power of the Kingdom

Then when you have finished your tour of inspection in the machine shop wherein the saints have wrought these mighty works, let the Son of God lead you down into the engine-room where all the power is generated for the work. He will take you down the little narrow stairway of the little word "AND." There are only three letters in it, but it is a most significant word in this place. Stop and ponder it. Why should Jesus say "and" here? It is not an adversative word, mind you; it is a continuative word, an accumulative word. It carries all the promise and prediction of the "greater works" straight down to the place where they take their rise. Step down the three steps of this little, big word "and." Where does it land you? In the engine-room of the kingdom. It is opened to us in the words, "that I will do."

Go back and connect up the statements of our Lord again. "The works that I do . . . and . . . that will I do." Nothing but agency, instrumentality, intervenes between those two arms, in which divine efficiency resides. You know Christ declared, "I am the Alpha and the Omega." That is true in the economy of power. All our doing is merely parenthetical in his doing. The eternal Son of God, equal with God, to whom all authority in heaven and earth has been given—he is the enginery of the kingdom. He expressed this very principle under the figure of the natural enginery of the Vine, pouring its vital power into the branches, adding, "Without me ye can do nothing."

But to come back to the figure of the machine shop and the engine-room. Where is the connecting factor that carries the power of the engines up to the machines? Watch the great fly-wheels whirling. Yes, and then look at that procession hurrying towards the wheel and then hastening away again. It is taking the kinetic energy of the engine and carrying it up to the machines above that stand and wait until the power comes.

The Belt of Prayer

It is just so in the kingdom. The church has machinery enough and to spare. We have societies and committees and conventions and conferences until we have well nigh organized the church into debility. The kinetic energy of Jesus Christ through the Holy Spirit is not one whit less than it ever has been. Nothing wanting in the machine shop; nothing wanting in the enginery! Why then do we not see Pentecost repeated before our eyes? Has the purpose of the Father changed? Does he not desire his church to carry the cross in triumph to the ends of the earth? What is the matter? I will tell you what is the matter. It is the "missing link." We have forgotten the belt in Christ's program.

He made provision for it, put it in its rightful place in the program as he pointed it out. It is the word "Ask." Yes, that is the belt. It takes the mighty doing of Christ and repeats it in my doing. "And whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do." The doing depends on the asking. I ask; he does. My supplication belts his power and applies it to the world's need. No belt, no work. The engine and the machinery must be correlated to make either one effective in the performance of useful work. Christ and the church! And praye connecting factor.

So prayer literally accomplishes things. highest, most effective work that any Christ do. The poet embodies the fact when h "More things are wrought by prayer th world dreams of."

Prayer is a working force. Indirectly b ally it constructs, establishes, achieves. It d with heavenly force and success, because it the Lord Jesus Christ to put his infinite p save and bless into active operation at the request. Prayer enables Christ to work in t way that the belt enables the engine to wor is, it conveys the power of Christ and appli the various activities and operations of the of Christ. There is a divine mystery wrap in this truth, a mystery of grace. The mys God's self-imposed dependence on the co-operation of his believing children for t accomplishment of his purpose of salvation world. When he formulated the universal he wrought into it the prayer-force of his c and only by supplying that prayer-force perfect the divine order in the world. Pray not frustrate the cosmic order; it reali Prayer is demanded by science, by philosop is a world force. Bishop Hopkins quain marks, "Our prayer and God's mercy are li buckets in a well; while the one ascends, th descends." When I ask, God the Father ar the Son and God the Holy Ghost work; my and his doing are indissolubly linked togethe

Turn on the Power!

Some one tells us that the telegraph key worked and its voice not be heard outside the but turn the switch that connects the key wi storage battery and the voice of the key w with sure, swift wing and be heard thousa miles away. It is so with preachers, Sunday teachers, parents, with all Christians; their may be without power: turn the switch, the switch, and their words flash and fly straight to the hearts of men with power. Prayerless erless: prayerful, powerful!

Would we have our loved ones saved? As for Christ's sake to incline their hearts toward would we lighten the load of care or afflict the tired shoulders of some friend? Pray th ther to give them strength for the burden. we safeguard the way of the young? Pleac the Lord to guide their feet in the paths of eousness. Pray sincerely, trustfully, persever The answer will come in his own time and own way of heavenly wisdom and love. It privilege, our responsibility, to loose Christ's by our asking.

IMMORTALITY

FIRST of the good that has to me been given
I prize this one—the mystic memory:
That when my days of life are ripe for heaven
I still shall have them all to take with me.

The soul has love—love deeper than the sea;
And love has longing which can never die:
Our love and longings all must answered be:
If not on earth, the answer's in the sky.

There we shall know as also we are known,
Known by our differences as we are here;
Each individual a type his own,
Each one for what he is shall there appear.

And shall we rest in heaven from all our toil?
There be from all demands of labor free?
Ah, better earth with all its ardent moil
Than heaven with irksome rest, eternally.

The energy existing in a soul
Implies high action for its wholesome play:
Hence cheerful service while the ages roll
Shall be our joy through an eternal day.

Life, love and longings safe in memory stored
Are pledges all, of higher life to come:
Now could a Father's love with these afford
To lure us on—then fail to lead us home?

DAILY MEDITATION

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR

BY REV. J. H. JOWETT, D.D.

NDAY, August 24. John 6: 47-58. "He that eateth my flesh, and rinketh my blood, dwelleth in me, and I in him." Could any figure f speech express more intensely and more wonderfully the reality of ny possible intimacy with Christ? It is not merely that I may see and hear him: I can eat and drink him! His life will pass into my and become incorporate in me, until I am as really one with him as the l that flows in my smallest finger is one with the flood that courses gh the heart. It is the amazing intimacy of the figure that must ess my mind. The Lord Jesus will enter and pervade my life as surely as deeply as the strength of eaten bread builds itself into my flesh. ow between persons the act of eating is just the act of faith. One life es into another by the ministry of belief. Where one life has no belief nother all communion is closed. The deeper the confidence the more dant is the commerce. The more venturesome the faith the more iously open is the fellowship.

he act of faith is the act of appropriation. To live one's life depending Christ is to eat and drink Christ all the day long. Every moment he es into us—into mind, and heart, and will—feeding the soul with den manna," and preserving it in the saving health of his grace.

MONDAY, August 25. Exodus 19: 1-6, 16-21. "And Mount Sinai was altogether on a smoke, because the Lord descended upon it." And the smoke is the emblem of mystery through which as yet we may not pierce. Everywhere, in the Old Testament, the Lord moveth loud, and a thick mist is round about his dwelling-place. And in the w Testament the cloud lingers, although it is often "a bright cloud"; although areas of hitherto hidden truth are unveiled to our sight, still cloud abides! "I have many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear m now." It is the cloud! "What I do thou knowest not now, but thou lt know hereafter." It is the cloud.

Now, the cloud is "big with mercy." There must be a benign providence our uncertainties. Some gracious things must be generated by the istry of the cloud that could not be born in any other way. Perhaps erence requires the cloud: perhaps faith does: and so perhaps do hope l love. "The clouds drop fatness." The Lord of the sunshine is also Lord of the cloud. The cloud is not a capricious vagrant, but the icle of grace; it is the home of God. The cloud, so full of gloom, is one the ministers of summer splendor and of autumnal glory.

TUESDAY, August 26. Psalm 97. "Clouds and darkness are round about him." When Lincoln had been assassinated, and word of the tragedy came to New York, "the people were in a state of mind which urges to violence." A man appeared on the balcony of one of e newspaper offices, waving a small flag, and a clear voice rang through e air: "Fellow citizens! clouds and darkness are round about him! His vilion is dark waters, and thick clouds of the skies! Justice and judgnt are the habitation of his throne! Fellow citizens, God reigns!" It as the voice of General Garfield.

That voice proclaimed the divine sovereignty, even when the heavens ere black with the menace of destruction. Lincoln had been assassinated, t God lived! Human confusion does not annihilate His throne. God veth! "The firm foundation standeth sure." This is the only rock to and upon when the clouds have gathered, and the waters are out, and e great deeps are broken up. God's scepter does not fall from his grasp, r is snatched by alien hands. The throne abideth. Joy will rise from aos as springs are unsealed by the earthquake. He will bring fortune t of misfortune; the darkness shall be the hiding-place of his grace.

WEDNESDAY, August 27. Hebrews 10: 16-22. "I will put my laws into their hearts." Everything depends on where we carry the law of the Lord. If it only rests in the memory any vagrant care may snatch it away. The business of the day may wipe it t as a sponge erases a record from a slate. A thought is never secure ntil it has passed from the mind into the heart, and has become a desire, n aspiration, a passion. When the law of God is taken into the heart it no longer something merely remembered: it is something loved. Now ings that are loved have a strong defense. They are in the "keep" of e castle, in the innermost stronghold. The strength of the heart is rapped about them, and no passing vagrant can carry them away.

And this is where the good Lord is willing to put his laws. He is wishl to put them among our loves. And the wonderful thing is this: when ws are put among loves they change their form, and his statutes become our songs. Laws that are loved are no longer dreadful policemen, but compassionate friends. "Oh, how I love thy law!" That man did not live in a prison, he lived in a garden, and God's will was unto him as gracious flowers and fruits. So shall it be unto all of us. When we love the law of the Lord we shall discover that we are not under law, but under grace. That we have "the glorious liberty of the children of God."

THURSDAY, August 28. Psalm 24. "Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord!" Who shall be permitted to pass into the sanctuary of the cloud and have communion with the Lord in the holy place? "He that hath clean hands." These hands of mine, the symbols of conduct, the expression of the outer life, what are they like? "Your hands are full of blood." Those hands had been busy murdering others, pillaging others, brutally ill-using their fellow men. We may do it in business. We may do it in conversation. We may do it in a criminal silence. Our hands may be foul with a brother's blood. And men and women with hands like these cannot "ascend into the hill of the Lord." There must be no stain of an unfair and scandalous life.

"And a pure heart." We need not trouble about the hands if the heart be clean. If all the presences that move in the heart—desires, and motives, and sentiments, and ideals—are like white-robed angels, "without spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing," everything that emerges into outer life will share the radiant purity. The heart expresses itself in the hands. Character blossoms in conduct. The quality of a coin is determined by the quality of the metal in the mint. "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he."

And so it is with the children of the white robe who are called to dwell in the heights with God. They wear the appointed wedding-garment, and their raiment shall be their passport into the great feast.

FRIDAY, August 29. Galatians 3: 19-29. "The law hath been our tutor to bring us unto Christ." And scarcely that, for the word essentially means not the schoolmaster but the one who takes us to school. The Lord himself keeps the school, the wonderful school of grace, and he is the only Master. And "the law" brings us to the school. The law is weak and can do nothing with us, except to lead and drive us to grace. It cannot make saints of us: only grace can accomplish that holy end. Turn to the early part of the Pilgrim's Progress, and you will find a poor, heavily ladened pilgrim being led by the law to the school of Christ. Or turn to the first part of the Grace Abounding, and you will see Bunyan himself being led by this gruff pedagogue to the school of grace. Grace receives the failures of the law.

It is good to stand before the awful decrees of Sinai: we shall the more surely and swiftly be led to Calvary. It is well to listen to the ten commandments: we shall then run to the beatitudes. It is wise to stop and hearken to the clanging bell of the law: we shall then hasten to hear the Gospel-bells of grace. And the wonderful thing is this—the poor, haunted victim of the law is never denied the protection and sustenance of grace. "Where sin abounds, grace doth much more abound."

SATURDAY, August 30. Hebrews 12: 18-28. "Ye are not come to the mount . . . that burned with fire." We need not live at the foot of Mount Sinai. It is like living at the foot of Mont Pelée, the home of awful eruption, and therefore the realm of gloom and uncertainty and fear. We are not saved by law, neither indeed can we be. Neither can law heal us after our transgressions and defeats. The law has nothing for prodigal men but "blackness, and darkness, and tempest." It has no sound but dreaded decree, no message but menace, no look but a frown. Who will build his home at the foot of Mount Sinai?

"But ye are come unto Mount Zion." Our true home is not at Sinai but at Calvary. There is no place for the sinner at the first mount: at the second mount there is a place for no one else. At Calvary we may find our way back to the holiness we lost at Sinai. Through grace we may drop the burden of our sin and begin to wear the garments of salvation. The way back to heaven is by "the green hill, without a city wall." Even he who has "spent all" shall find full restoration of life at the gate of his Saviour's death. "Ye are come to Jesus, the mediator of the new covenant."

MESSAGES FROM PRESENT-DAY POETS

RIST THE GOOD SHEPHERD

HE Shepherd with his flock is seen.
As forth he leads the way.
gives them rest in pastures green,
Ie watches lest they stray.

all his sheep how great his care!
hat care will never cease.
leads them by still waters, where hey slake their thirst in peace.

ough lovely paths of righteousness
Ie ever leads his sheep;
e reproves, it is to bless,
o shield, to guard, to keep.

ough dangers compass them about, hough shadows cross the vale, ir enemies within, without,
n their assaults shall fail.

The Shepherd's loving, tender care
Is constant as the sun;
And in that care we have a share
Until our day is done.

How blest are we at close of day,
With all its moments told,
'Neath Shepherd's care to find our way
Safe, safe within the fold.

LOVING SERVICE

If I can live
To make some pale face brighter, and to give
An added luster to some tear-stained eye,
Or even impart
One throb of comfort to an aching heart,
Or cheer some wayworn soul in passing by;
If I can lend
A strong hand to the fallen, or defend
The right against a single envious strain—
My life, though bare,
Perhaps, of much that seemeth dear and fair
To us of earth, will not have been in vain.

THE "GLAD GAME"

OH, WE should have more moments
In which we might be glad,
While counting out our mercies—
All that we ever had.
'Twould drive away the wrinkles,
And smooth the ruffled brow,
And heal the little heartaches
From which we suffer now.

'Tis quite a "game" to play at—
The ruse of being glad,
In which we are the winners,
Where prizes may be had.
"Glad games," were they played often,
Would so much sunshine bring,
That all the bats of worry
Would quickly take to wing.

And is there aught a fireside
That discontent reveals,
We hope some child plays "glad games,"
To oil domestic wheels.
Let's lift our tear-dimmed eyelids,
So we can better see
Our kind and heavenly Father,
Who hears our humblest plea.

Should clouds grow dark with sorrow,
And troubles sore affright,
We'd hear—did we but listen—
Glad voices in the night.

WORSHIPERS' WEEK AT KESWICK

PART OF THE VAST THRONG AT ENGLAND'S GREATEST CAMP-MEETING AT KESWICK

THE Lake District, in the northwest of England, bordering on Scotland, is everywhere recognized as a place of surpassing beauty and attractiveness. Fifty-five mountains, eighteen mountain passes, sixteen lakes and ten waterfalls are among the outstanding physical features of what is known as "Wordsworth's country." Much of the imagery of his poetry draws its coloring from this region, and his grave is at Grasmere. The names of Ruskin and Southey are also associated here.

Nestling right in the heart of these English highlands lies the quaint, quiet village of Keswick, with a population of about four thousand. This is the place where the great Keswick conventions have now been held for thirty-eight years, and a more lovely spot could not anywhere be found. Hither, from all over the world, God's people assemble year by year, where the Master bids them "come aside and rest awhile." This year the attendance is said to be larger than ever. Simultaneous meetings are held in two huge tents, the "Eskin" and the "Skiddaw," each tent having a seating capacity of 2,500, and they are both filled to overflowing. The regular program for the day is as follows: 7 to 8 A.M., prayer-meetings; 10 A.M. to 1 P.M., two sermons or Bible expositions; 3 to 4, meeting, usually missionary; 6.30 to 8 P.M., two sermons or addresses, followed by an after-meeting of consecration, and the day ends with an open-air service on the market square of the village. The convention proper lasts only four full days. This year it was from Monday evening, July 21, to Friday evening, the 25th.

Both tents were packed at the first session. There was an air of eager expectancy and reverence on the part of the worshipers, a large proportion being young men and women. The singing was deeply fervent, and in slower time than with us. During prayer in the tents, all bow solemnly forward and many kneel. The keynote of the convention was struck in the opening sermon by the Rev. Hubert Brooke, who took for his text Exodus 12: 26, 27, "And it shall come to pass, when your children shall say unto you, What mean ye by this service? that ye shall say, It is the sacrifice of the Lord's Passover." The discourse was an exposition of the Keswick teaching: that all truly converted people occupy a place like ancient Israel.

One will note the large number of sermons preached from Old Testament texts. Rev. Charles Inwood conducted four Bible readings in the Skiddaw tent. Most popular of all were the great expositions, four in number, on "The Heritage of Believers," by the Rev. Mr. Webb-Peplo announced topic was, "The Life Which I Indeed." These are but a few samples many excellent discourses. The whole con was on a high spiritual plane. It w freshing to meet with such an absolute r tion of the authority of God's Word, of th of our blessed Lord, and trust in the atonin rifice upon the cross, the work of the Holy and the power of prayer. The great central ings of Christianity found a large place a gatherings.

The morning prayer meetings at seven deserve special mention. In the Eskin te spirit of the meetings was thoughtful and e At the Skiddaw tent the meetings were large sionary. The average attendance would be thousand. Missionaries and native Chr were here from almost every foreign land.

Every country was brought by name befo in prayer, Labrador, China, India, and America, Persia, Africa, and the islands sea. Tears were in many eyes and emotio gled with prayer as the appalling destitutio needs of these lands were brought before the of the harvest.

A Story Complete in This Issue

IN THE great house on the avenue little Miss Millionaire Row—otherwise Dorothy May—had ten dolls for which she cared little. In the crowded tenement on the cross street little Miss Poverty Court—otherwise plain Maggie—had one doll for which she cared much. Dorothy May's dolls were wonders of wax and ringlets, in sumptuous apparel, with eyes that winked and voices that lisped "papa" and "mama." They seemed, indeed, almost alive, though Dorothy May knew, of course, that they were not alive. They were "just dolls."

Maggie's doll was a wonder, too, in its way. It had a rag body, a painted cloth face, and a wisp of black yarn for hair. Its eyes did not shut, and there was never a word from its barely discernible lips; but it was alive. Maggie knew that. Its name was Helen Henrietta. Dorothy May's dolls, too, had names. There were Arabella, Estella, Pauline, and—but never mind. What does it matter? Even Dorothy May herself could not remember half the time what they were. They were just dolls, anyway, you see.

As it chanced, in both Millionaire Row and Poverty Court there were sickness and unhappiness. In the one place it was Dorothy May herself who was ill. In the other it was Maggie's mother. Dorothy May had been sick for weeks, but she was better now. She was well enough, indeed, to sit up and be dressed, though she looked pale and thin.

"Let her have whatever she wants—so long as it's nothing that will hurt her, of course," directed the great doctor whose minutes were worth dollars apiece. "Don't cross her in anything if you can possibly help it."

"Of course!" breathed Dorothy May's mother, with a sob in her voice.

"I'll get the moon for her if she wants it," avowed Dorothy May's father, huskily.

But Dorothy May did not want the moon. She did not want anything, and that is where the trouble lay. Her one-time favorite stories were now "such tiresome things." Her puzzles were "silly," and her games were "stupid." Even Arabella, Estella, Pauline and all the rest were "nothing but those old dolls."

"No, I don't want it. I'm tired of—of everything!" she would say fretfully, lying back in her chair with eyes unsmiling, lips pouting, and hands folded listlessly in her lap.

As to her food, it was the same. There was nothing she wanted to eat. Savory broths, tender chickens, luscious grapes and golden oranges—all alike were "those same old horrid things," until even the doctor whose minutes were worth dollars apiece lost his patience. To his wife he did say one day: "If that child were mine she'd know what it was to get really hungry for once in her life, and she'd know what it was, too, not to have so much as a rag doll to play with for a whole week!" All of w of course, was the rankest of heresies, and w to be so much as whispered on Millionaire Row

Meanwhile, in Poverty Court, another lay Maggie's mother; and she, too, had been sic many weeks. There were no luxurious rugs no carefully shaded lights, no soft-stepping n no savory broths, tender chickens, nor lu grapes and oranges; no doctor whose days, were worth dollars. There were only bare bare walls, curtainless windows, a sputtering sene lamp, and Maggie—Maggie, whose littl were tireless, but noisy, and whose fingers were ing, but untrained; Maggie, whose heart was to bursting with love and fear; love for her m and fear because it wanted less than a week t day, and there were not so many as half a dimes in the tin coffeepot to meet it.

Maggie knew rent-day as the cause for exist a sort of goal set up each month for the race o At all events, she knew that no sooner was it br lessly reached on the first day of the month tha mother began to hoard the dimes in the tin c pot for the next one. Once they almost miss Maggie never forgot how frightened her mothe been then. They would be put out in the street said, if they could not pay the rent—they, an their belongings. And now—

HE NIPPUR "CREATION" TABLET

NERAL interest has been aroused in archeological circles by the nnouncement that the famous Sumerian tablet, excavated at Nippur Babylonia several years ago, and now in the possession of the Uni- ersity of Pennsylvania, has been successfully deciphered, after many Dr. Arno Poebel, the distinguished Oriental scholar, has accomplished ult task, which places before the world the Babylonian account of the and also of the flood, engraved in mysterious hieroglyphics over four years ago. It is believed by authorities that the tablet belongs to a it 2,500 B.C., thus making it the oldest known record in existence of ious character. Dr. Poebel's translation is a work of great care and research. A corre- of the New York rites:

new account of the and the Flood much new light on ideas of the Baby- and Sumerians. The novel features of the et are these: That it emale deity who cre- nkind, known as 'the aded,' from the color air; that new deities characteristics of the e discovered in the document, although ve been hinted at in ways; the character emale goddess is now mportant from the times and equal with male ruler gods; that st seven prediluvian nd the special god of e discovered; that the Babylonian name of iptural Noah is Ziu- that deluge ruins of ediluvian cities were destroyed, some not istoric times."

tablet originally was seven inches square, such a surface the s could write in ideo- c signs a long epic and that is what this contained. The story with a grand poem on gin of the heavens, as s of the earth. Nintu, ale god, created man- nd is found lamenting he other gods design the destruction of the race for wickedness. She speaks of men as "my creations." Anu and Enlil were the chief gods of power, the first being god of heaven and the second of earth.

In telling the story of the creation, the tablet says: "Nintu created the black-headed" (human race). . . . "The fields of the ground produced abundance, the cattle and the four-legged beasts of the field artfully they (the gods) called into existence." But the wrath of the gods was kindled against men for wickedness. "Enki (god of wisdom) held counsel with Anu and Nintura over the proposed destruction of mankind. At that time Ziugidda [the Babylonian Noah] was king and high priest of Shurappak, and he made obeisance to the gods and prayed, prostrating himself in humility and daily and personally he was in contact with them by means of dreams, and conjured them daily by the name of heaven and earth."

The flood is thus described: "Windstorms which possess great power, the rainstorms in their entirety went with them, and the storms were terrible. After seven days the rainstorm had stormed over the land and carried away the huge boat. Then the Sun-god came forth, shedding light over heaven and earth. Ziugidda opened the (roof) of his ship and the light of the Sun-god was let in to the interior of the huge boat."

After the flood abated Ziugidda prayed to the gods and sacrificed an ox and a sheep. Enki and Nintu persuaded the other gods not to continue their wrath further. As for Ziugidda, he is represented as having been taken to an island in the Persian Gulf, where he dwelt thereafter in a region like paradise.

Portions of the Nippur tablet are missing, and some of the hieroglyphics are yet undeciphered. It is said that Dr. Poebel has made one further discovery of a startling nature, which he is holding back for a fuller verification. The tablet gives the period from the Flood to a date about 230 years before Hammurabi as 32,223 years.

"Dunno—but they all says it, 'most."

"And you don't get it back ever—here?" she asked.

" 'Course not. Ye sellin' it here."

"Oh!" said Maggie.

"Paper!" cried a man sharply.

Mike ran then, and Maggie went home.

"I shall go to the man with the three gold balls, Helen Henrietta," she said softly but emphatically to the doll in her arms; "then mother can buy it back when she gets well."

In the one-room tenement called home, Maggie looked hopefully about for the thing that she should take to the man with the three gold balls. But very soon the hope in her eyes became fear, and the fear dismay. What was there, after all, that she did not "need"? The bed?—mother was on that. The stove?—that kept mother warm and cooked her food (when they could find anything to burn in it). The table?—that held mother's cup of water and other things that she might need when Maggie was out. The chairs?—there were only two, and they were broken. There was little else. Certainly there was nothing to sell, decided Maggie despairingly—then her eyes fell on Helen Henrietta, and her heart gave one big suffocating throb. After that it seemed to stop entirely its beating.

By just what course of reasoning Maggie arrived at the sickening realization that Helen Henrietta was indeed the only unnecessary possession she had, it is needless to tell. Suffice it that after a day and a night of misery a very red-eyed, stony-faced little girl, hugging a forlorn-looking rag doll, resolutely entered the doorway above which hung the three yellow balls. Not two minutes later she passed under the balls again, still hugging the doll. But this time the red eyes flashed angrily, and the stony face twitched with indignation.

The man had not wanted Helen Henrietta! He had refused to take her. He had looked at her with scorn in his horrid little eyes, and he had laughed—laughed!—and called her "that dirty little rag doll." He—Helen Henrietta! Just as if—!

Maggie fairly choked with rage. She was too angry even to think coherently as she stumbled blindly toward home. But she would show him! She would advertise Helen Henrietta for sale. She would tell how perfectly lovely Helen Henrietta was—then we should see! As if anybody, with the chance to get Helen Henrietta, should not want her!

Maggie had quite forgotten now how long it had been for her to bring herself to give Helen Henrietta up. She was feeling only the prick of the scorn in the pawnbroker's eyes; and it was while she was under the sway of this feeling that she laboriously scrawled her advertisement on a piece of brown paper. Maggie was so glad now that she knew how to print. Mother had taught her that. She was glad, too, that she remembered that word "sacrifice," which Mike said was always in.

> "For Sale. At a Sacrifice. My Dolly Helen Henrietta. The bestest and Most Butifullest Dolly in the World. I got to Pay my Rent."

This done, Maggie carried the paper to Mike for approval.

Mike almost laughed, but he saw Maggie's face and turned the laugh into a whistle just in time.

"Is that right?" demanded Maggie. "Have I said enough about Helen Henrietta?"

"Sure," returned Mike, gravely; "but ye wants ter put yer name down there, an' where ye lives, else how is the party goin' ter know where ter find ye?"

"Oh," frowned Maggie, "of course." And she got out her pencil.

Mike eyed her doubtfully. "Got any money ter pay for puttin' this 'ere notice in the paper?" he asked.

Maggie's jaw fell. "Does that take money, too? Can't you do anything without money?" she wailed.

Our Peace Mission in Mexico

WITH the announcement of the acceptance of Ambassador Wilson's thrice-tendered resignation, and the despatch to Mexico of ex-Governor John Lind of Minnesota as President Wilson's personal envoy, we enter upon a new phase of the Mexican negotiations which affords the first definite understanding of the administration's purpose. While the nature of Governor Lind's instructions is not disclosed officially, it is understood that they include an effort to bring about either a suspension of hostilities, pending the approaching constitutional election, or the voluntary retirement of Huerta from the presidency, in order that a provisional executive acceptable to both parties may be chosen, recognition by our government to follow in either event. A semi-official intimation has been conveyed from Mexico in a somewhat roundabout way that unless Lind comes as an ambassador, with authority to recognize the Huerta administration, he will not be received by the president and may even be requested to leave the country as an undesirable visitor. While such an event might be serious indeed, the suggestion overlooks the fact that Governor Lind goes in no diplomatic capacity, but simply as adviser to the American embassy, and it is not at all necessary that he should even see Huerta, as official communications would pass through the embassy. Lind is said to be a practical, clear-headed man; and although the sending of a personal envoy on such a mission is a striking innovation in diplomacy, the result of the experiment may prove it to have been fully justified. But it is clearly within the power of Huerta, if so inclined, to block every well-meant effort for peace. He is represented as willing to resign, provided recognition be paid as the price of his retirement; but such a bargain would not be seriously considered in Washington. He gave a pledge that he would not be a candidate for re-election; yet he might resign in time to qualify as a candidate in October.

President Wilson is an ardent peace lover. From the beginning of the present trouble with Mexico, he has made it clear to the whole country that he believed in a pacific policy. He has pinned his faith upon that policy, and we trust it may not be misplaced. It has been intimated that besides the opposition of Huerta and his associates, there are strong interests, not Mexican, that might be advantaged by stirring up strife between that republic and ourselves. Meanwhile it is well to exercise patience, and await developments. Whatever changes may come, our government will be ready to meet them.

The "Creation" Tablet

IN THE discussion on the "Creation" tablet, lately deciphered by Dr. Arno Poebel of the University of Pennsylvania, it seems to have escaped the attention of the newspaper critics that the tablet recording what is known as the Babylonian version of the creation was discovered by Pinches as long ago as 1891 in the course of excavations at Nippur. Distinguished Orientalists have long worked at deciphering the tablet, with varying results. All agree that the names of the Babylonian gods are Sumerian, and belong to one of the very ancient divisions of the Babylonian race. They found that among the deities of that far-off day, there was one Tiham'At or Tiamat, representing Chaos, the original deity of the primeval ocean and the bearer of all the others. This deity, who represented the female principle in the primitive heathen worship, is recorded as having mingled the waters together "when as yet no cornfields were to be seen and when as yet none of the gods existed — then were born the gods . . ." All this and much more was well known to the scholarship of twenty-two years ago, just as the Babylonian story of the Flood was also known.

Dr. Poebel has apparently succeeded in deciphering more completely than any of his associates the strange symbols on the Nippur tablet, and the story which his translation reveals is accordant with previous readings, though much fuller. Nintu, not a goddess of heaven but one who mingled with the gods of earth, is credited, as other interpreters have credited Tiamat, with creative powers. She created "the black headed," which he interprets to mean the human race. Then the fields, cattle and the other animals were "called into existence" by the other gods, reversing the accepted order which places man last in creation. There are seven antediluvian cities, each with a special god reigning over it. Then the gods, angered by the wickedness of men, desired their destruction. Nintu (or Nintura) lamented; but the gods were obdurate. This explanation is a prelude to the Flood. Ziugidda, king and priest, was the Noah of the Sumerian story. In his ark-ship he and his associates ride the tempest for seven days. After the flood subsides, Ziugidda is conveyed to the Persian Gulf, where he lives in an Oriental paradise.

The Nippur tablet is of uncertain date, but may belong to the period about 2,000 B.C. It has long been a center of attraction to Orientalists, as containing a wondrously interesting variant of the Creation and Flood narrative, concerning which myths have been found to exist in many ancient lands. All of these myths, legends, or traditions have unquestionably had one general source or origin. That some at least were accessible to the early Jewish writers is not improbable, although there is not the slightest suggestion of them in the Genesis narrative. There is a strong reminder of the polytheism of Egypt and Assyria in the religious system which the Nippur stone represents. It is the earliest evidence that has yet come to light which testifies to the fact that the religious principle in man strove to find expression in crude, primitive forms, yet not wholly destitute of revelation and enlightenment. The vision of truth and righteousness, of divine mercy and justice, was seen, dimly, even in those early hours of "the morning of the world."

Little Spools of Prayer

IN THE Orient, where textures of the most exquisite colors are woven, primitive methods are still in use. It is not uncommon to find straight palm trees used as the upright timbers of the loom. Upon great beams of wood the intricate and almost innumerable threads of the warp are rolled. In the shade of the palms the skilful weaver stands and silently plies his shuttle. Children sit at his feet, winding the rich-hued, silken thread on little spools, which they put into the hands of the weaver. He takes the spools, arranges them and uses them as he needs them. Into his shuttle he puts them and weaves the varied colors into the long warp, and thus works out the design which is painted upon his brain; but as fast as it is woven, it is rolled silently upon the beam and disappears from sight. Not until the whole design is completed is it unrolled to reveal his plan and to surprise and gladden the eye with its beauty. We are the ... sitting at the Weaver's feet, winding our ... in prayer. The words of Dr. Richmond should drive ... church not to resentment, but to prayer.

White House Trees Uprooted

THE storm which on the 30th of July did such damage in Washington, causing the death of two persons, the injury of scores, and the destruction of a million dollars' th of property, was especially severe with the perty of the government. Not content with daging the roofs of the Pension Office, the Agri- ural Building, and the Post Office Building, and g injury to the State, War and Navy Buildings, tornado entered the beautiful White House unds and tore to pieces and uprooted many of glorious trees that have for so long been the le of the nation. The large elm just east of north portico was blown down. This tree was nted by President Cleveland during his first ad- nistration, and was an historic landmark. The planted by President Hayes was also uprooted. is group of magnificent trees in the front lawn the White House that suffered such wreckage l in it trees that dated back to Andrew Jackson's ministration, and many of them to the time of ncoln. Representative Flood, chairman of the reign Affairs Committee, had a narrow escape m injury or death when one of the large elms s blown down over the path just in front of his tomobile as he was driving up to see the Presi- nt. President Wilson was seated in the execu- e offices when the nd crashed through veral windows in the hite House. Secretary multy hurried the esident and Represen- tive Korbly of Indiana, ith whom he was con- rring, to a sheltered terior room, away from ne searching lightning ashes. The President ent on with his inter- iew with reference to ne tariff, not dreaming nat such fearful havoc ad been wrought among ne stately trees. The ree has life. It feeds on he instability of nature, he sunshine, the dew- rop, the shower, the torm, and anchoring it- elf, it becomes a symbol f magnificent stability, ence the shock and re- ret to see it thrown down by the angry torm. The tree has a benevolent life. It is a study for the artist, a hade for cattle and ired men, a depository f instruments for al- nost every industry f man, and even at its leath becomes fuel for warming our homes. Trees ormed an important part in Bible story. Little vonder that heathens should worship them, or our God be worshiped among them. The three angels ound Abraham with his tent in an oak grove, and e said to them:

Let now a little water be fetched, and wash your feet, and est yourselves under the tree. (Gen. 18: 4, R. V.)

American Farmers' Average Income

THERE has been a great deal of misunderstanding as to the income of the average farmer in his country. The Department of Agriculture at Washington for the first time in the history of farming in the United States has managed to secure accurate data on the subject. It reports that the average income of our farmers is $640 a year. It is reasonable to infer that at least half of the farm families have even smaller incomes. Individual farms here and there have much larger revenue than this. In this small average credit has been given to the value of the products raised and consumed on the place. This average seems a mere pittance when compared with the hard work rendered by the farmer and his family, and yet when we remember that the income of the average lawyer is at starvation's edge, that the income of the average preacher is around that of the farmer, that 75 out of 100 men who enter on mercantile life make a failure of it, and that the wages of the average workingman do not keep the wolf away from the door, we hesitate to pity the farmer, who, like men of other callings, deserves better financial reward, and rather envy him as the one so necessary to the existence of other branches of industry, and the one who in many regards is the most independent, thrifty, and happy member of the community. The farmer was an important member of society. Christ made frequent reference to the agriculturist in his teachings.

Hear then ye the parable of the sower. (Matt. 13: 18, R. V.)

International Medical Congress

PERHAPS the greatest concentration of medical wisdom the world has ever known met in London a week, beginning August 6, at the International Medical Congress. About ten thousand doctors were present. The opening exercises in Albert Hall were presided over by Prince Arthur of Connaught, acting for the king. The wide range of the subjects treated is shown by the fact that there were thirty-two sections and subsections of the Congress. In one of the earlier addresses Professor Landouzys gave this definition of the doctor's mission: "To make life longer, and death softer." Among the American delegates were Professor Harvey W. Cushing of Harvard University, who delivered an address on surgery; Dr. Robert Abbe of New York, who told what radium had done toward curing malignant cancer in its earlier stages; and Dr. Rudolph Matas of New Orleans, who described his success in transplanting blood vessels and transferring organs and even limbs from one living organism to another. The German delegation included Dr. Paul Ehrlich, chief of the Government Institute at Frankfort-on-Main, who is acclaimed by his people as the world's greatest pathologist. From Japan came Shibasaburo Kitasato, a famous bacteriologist, and considered the greatest authority on the plague. The medical profession, though it has some "quacks," as all callings have impostors, is composed of men of the best intellect, the widest culture, of tireless energy, and of heroic devotion to the health and happiness of mankind. The medical calling in olden times was very primitive, but it contained splendid men. Christ went to it for one of his evangelists. He is thus mentioned by the apostle in his letter:

Luke the beloved physician, and Demas greet you. (Col. 4: 14.)

Dentistry Flourished Centuries Ago

THE head of the Department of American Archeology in Columbia University, Professor Marshall Howard Saville, has just returned from an expedition in Ecuador in search for prehistoric treasures. Among the important things he found were the skulls of highly developed persons containing teeth carefully filled with cement and gold. He estimates that the persons to whom they belonged lived at least a thousand years ago. In Mexico Professor Saville has dug up skulls with teeth filled or ornamented with stone, but he had never before seen gold fillings in a prehistoric skull. The gold was on the edges of the teeth, and had been applied from the inside. It showed little on the outside. Whether the fillings were gold or cement, the borings indicated that a tool had been used that did the work apparently as well as the instruments of modern dentistry. Some of the teeth that had been loosened were held together by gold bands. The inconvenience of imperfect teeth is thus suggested by the wise man:

Confidence in an unfaithful man in time of trouble is like a broken tooth, and a foot out of joint. (Prov. 25: 19.)

Increase in Food Animals

REPORTS to the Department of Agriculture in Washington show that in the fiscal year ended June 30 last 57,628,491 animals were slaughtered for food under Federal inspection in the 790 slaughter-houses in 225 cities and towns in the United States, an increase of nearly 5,000,000 over the previous fiscal year. Of these there were 7,245,585 cattle, 2,277,954 calves, 14,979,354 sheep, 72,871 goats and 33,052,727 hogs. Slaughtering establishments and meat food packing industries increased from 919 to 940 in the fiscal year. Of the animals under government inspection, Chicago leads in numbers slaughtered, 12,910,506. Then came Kansas City with 5,646,-161; South Omaha, 4,609,655; New York, 3,034,685; East St. Louis, 2,966,292; South St. Joseph, 2,671,443; Boston, 1,826,044; Indianapolis, 1,598,503; Sioux City, 1,520,607; Buffalo, 1,381,-271. The total condemnations for disease or other cause for the year numbered 232,687 whole carcasses and 494,328 parts of other carcasses. This animal food report indicates that there are many persons who do not share the opinions of some who insist that fruits, vegetables and cereals are the proper articles of food, and that the use of meat is hurtful. The Creator made some of the human teeth flat to grind corn, and others sharp to tear flesh. Among the Hebrews animal food was an important article of diet, although the swine was barred out by divine command. The divine penman by his figure indicates his belief in the use of animal food in producing the strongest kind of physical vitality.

But strong meat belongeth to them that are of full age. (Heb. 5: 14.)

Policeman Killed Saving Children

POLICEMAN BERNARD O'ROURKE, of the Bergen Street Station in Brooklyn, N. Y., sacrificed his life the other day to save several children in the path of a runaway horse. Three other men were injured before the horse came to a stop after crashing into an ice wagon. The horse, attached to a milk wagon, became frightened at an automobile and made a mad gallop down the street. A number of children ignorant of danger were at play in the middle of the roadway when O'Rourke caught sight of the horse, and shouted to the children to fly for safety. Running ahead to meet the animal the policeman attempted to seize the bridle, but was shaken off and hurled to the stone roadway. He was hurried to the Methodist Hospital, where he died of a fractured skull. The calling of the policeman is one of perpetual danger and heroism. This brave man, guardian of the public, of helpless little children, and sacrificing his life for them, was in imitation of our Master

Who gave himself for us. (Titus 2: 14.)

A WEEK IN THE WORLD'S NEWS

A New Envoy to Mexico

INTERNATIONALLY the chief interest in Mexico during the early part of August centered in Washington, D. C. Henry Lane Wilson, within a few days after his return from Mexico City, for the third time since March 4 last tendered his resignation as United States ambassador to Mexico, and it was immediately accepted, to take effect theoretically on October 14 next, but in fact immediately. This resignation was promptly followed by the appointment of ex-Governor John Lind of Minnesota, not as ambassador to Mexico, but as President Wilson's personal representative in Mexico City. Mr. Lind accepted the commission and immediately left for Mexico. Just what instructions or suggestions have been given the ex-governor are up to date only surmised, as the State Department has made no official statement.

JOHN LIND
President Wilson's Personal Representative to Mexico

Mr. Lind does not seem booked for a very happy time of it in Mexico if the Huerta government maintains its present attitude on this subject. As soon as the news of the special mission reached Mexico City Manuel Garza Aldape, the minister of public instruction, who is acting minister of foreign affairs, transmitted to the United States embassy there and to the representatives of the Mexican government in Europe, the following statement:

"By order of the President of the Republic, I declare, as Minister of Foreign Affairs ad interim, that if Mr. Lind does not bring credentials in due form, together with recognition of the Government of Mexico, his presence in this country will not be desirable."

This has been construed as a threat to order Mr. Lind out of Mexico, and the possibilities following such a course are not pleasant to contemplate. The day following the publication of Provisional President Huerta's statement, high officials of the administration were optimistic of a peaceable solution of Mexico's troubles in spite of their admission that the situation was grave.

President Gomez Leads Against Castro

CIPRIANO CASTRO, former dictator of Venezuela, has again plunged that country in civil war. After an absence of nearly five years, he has returned, and, with the aid of two of his old generals, succeeded in placing a revolutionary army in the field. A cable advice from Port of Spain, Trinidad, states that Castro's forces number about 12,000 men. President Juan Vicente Gomez is in the field at the head of a Federal army of 7,000 men, comprising infantry and artillery. Prominent men in New York, who are considered widely informed on South American questions, differ greatly as to the feeling of the Venezuelan people. On one side it is stated that the Gomez administration has been an abject failure, while on the other, President Gomez is declared to have the undivided support of the people. Only one thing is agreed upon: "that this revolution cannot succeed as far as General Castro is concerned."

Peace Again in the Balkans

ON AUGUST 6 peace was concluded among the Balkan States and the preliminary treaty was signed by the delegates of Servia, Greece, Montenegro, Roumania, and Bulgaria on the following day. The agreement was arrived at only after another exhibition of the utter helplessness of Bulgaria to face her ring of enemies. Bulgaria's submission to Servia, Greece, and Montenegro is due to Roumania's interference. Up to August 5 King Ferdinand's government struggled to continue the negotiations, but Roumania threatened to occupy Sofia before the end of the week unless Bulgaria gave way.

The new frontier, as agreed upon, starts at a point on the old frontier west of the Struma River, follows the watershed to the west of the town of Strumitza, thence runs almost through the Struma Valley to the Belesh Mountains, and thence easterly in almost a straight line to the Mesta River. This leaves the town of Strumitza, the port of Lagos, and Xanthi to Bulgaria, and the port of Kavala to Greece.

In passing through London on his way from Sofia to New York, General Nelson A. Miles, U.S.A., reiterated his previous statements that Bulgaria did not declare war upon Greece and Servia, but was invaded; also that she committed no atrocities, and could have coped successfully with Greece and Servia but for the interference of Roumania.

German Military Secret Case Ends Tamely

IN APRIL last Dr. Karl Liebknecht, a Socialist deputy in the German Reichstag, brought sensational charges against officials of the Prussian War Office, stating that they had accepted bribes from the Krupp Company, manufacturers of guns and armament, in return for national military documents. Early in August seven unimportant persons connected with the Ordnance Board were convicted on these charges by court-martial and sentenced to serve from six months' imprisonment to three weeks' light arrest. The highest officers convicted were junior lieutenants, and the trial was conducted with great publicity, so that it was robbed of the mystery and consequent seeming importance at which the framers of the charges had aimed.

South China Revolution Crushed

THE most recent advices from China state that the attempted revolution of the Southern Provinces has been speedily put down by President Yuan Shi Kai's army from the north. A despatch from Hongkong says the declaration of independence of the revolutionary provinces has been abrogated. That Canton, one of the most important southern cities, is not disappointed by the result seems evident from the reports of celebrations held there in rejoicing at the end of e rebellion. From Peking, Hankow, Nanking and Shanghai come despat stating northern victories. In the province of Kiangsi the rebels have driven back all along the line. Though the Southerners were reinforce 25,000 men from the provinces of Kwangtung, Hunan and Anhui, were compelled to retreat southward. An army of government troop August 4 captured the town of Tehan on Poyang Lake, the principal rebel in the province of Kiangsi. Another defeat was inflicted on the rebels in province of Hupe, when the town of Shayang, on the Hankiang, was captu from them.

There is now little doubt that the rebellion, in any truly organized sense over. General Huang Hsing, the revolutionary military leader, is flee southward, defeated, and Dr. Sun Yat Sen, the ex-provisional president civil leader of the rebellion, is reported in a Peking despatch to have fled f China on a Japanese steamer bound for Formosa.

The Senate and Nicaragua

THE opposition to the Nicaraguan Treaty in the Uni States Senate has triumphed and our proposed administ tive policy of supervision and protection is shelved, for a ti at least. The opponents of the treaty held that it was a me ure which would "practically turn the affairs of the Central American repu over to private bankers and put the army and navy of the United States behi them to enforce their contracts and the payment of their debts." This w doubtless, an extreme statement, but it was apparently an effective one. Bryan's plan had strong supporters, who regarded his policy as a practi illustration of the Monroe Doctrine, while others took the view that it smack too much of imperialism.

A Record Around the World

A NEW record for a globe encircling trip has been achiev by John Henry Mears, who for the New York Evening S traveled over 21,000 miles in thirty-five days and a few hour This beats Jules Verne's fictitious Phileas Fogg by more tha forty-four days; "Nelly Bly" by more than thirty-six days; Henry Frederi by over eighteen days, and Andre Jaeger-Schmidt by nearly four days. M Mears traveled eastward from New York to Liverpool, to Moscow, via th trans-Siberian Railway to Harben, to Yokohama, to Seattle, to Chicago, and s back to New York. The success of this attempt to belittle the obstacles of tim and distance was made possible by the ready aid in emergencies which h received everywhere along his journey.

A Cure for Cholera Announced

DR. PIERRE ROUX, director of the Pasteur Institute, re cently announced before the Academy of Sciences in Paris France, the discovery of an anti-cholera serum. Dr. Rou said that monkeys which had been infected with cholera ha been entirely cured by inoculation with the serum. Dr. Alvah H. Doty, for mer health officer of the port of New York and now medical director of th American Telephone and Telegraph Company, was not inclined to be deeply impressed by the announcement, and voiced his belief that only a long demonstration can establish the value of such a serum. He said in the course of an interview: "Anti-cholera serums are being discovered all the time in different parts of the globe. At first there exists a certain amount of optimism in regard to them, and they seem successful. A long demonstration is necessary before a serum can be proved efficacious. Some time, of course, a serum will be found that will satisfy all requirements."

Eighteen Perish in Mine Disaster

EIGHTEEN men were killed in the East Brookside mine of the Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron Company, near Tower City, Pa., on August 2, by a double explosion of what is believed to have been dynamite and gas. Thirteen men perished in the first explosion and five went to their death in the second blast, after an heroic attempt to rescue the victims of the first. It is not known exactly what caused the explosion, but the miners are inclined to the belief that the first was dynamite and the second was caused by gas liberated by the dynamite. The dead were scattered about for a quarter of a mile. Only three men were taken out alive, and one of these died on the way to the hospital. The East Brookside Colliery is situated on top of the mountain, about two miles west of Tower City, and employs about five hundred hands.

A Unique Birthday Celebration

ON THE 18th of July of each year there takes place one of the largest birthday parties that has ever been given in the United States. One man on that day celebrates his coming into this world by making hundreds of children happy. In the little city of Atchison, Kan., this man, by his unique and generous celebration, arouses the whole population to enthusiasm and happiness. He is Mr. B. P. Waggener, and he spends as high as $15,000 each year for this glorious day, that is enjoyed by men and women, as well as the favored children.

At nine o'clock in the morning the doors of the public schools are opened, and an armful of gifts is given to each child in the city. Then a parade of automobiles meets the eighteen coaches which have been chartered by Mr. Waggener to furnish free transportation to all the children from the surrounding country. The music from four bands, the horns of the school children, all tend to give the visitors a hearty welcome. The automobiles, filled with as many of the little visitors as they can carry, form a parade, which is followed by a children's floral parade. Prizes of twenty-five, fifteen and ten dollars are given for the best floral piece, and each child taking part receives a personal letter and a new two-dollar bill in appreciation. On the afternoon of this year's anniversary there were two ball games, band concerts, a cavalry drill, contests and many other pleasures for both young and old, the day ending with a display of fireworks. HE THINGS WE DON'T WANT TO DO

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER, JR.

HELEN, come here, dear," sounded a patient voice, and the little mother's head appeared at the doorway—the careworn mother, who was always too tired to enjoy herself.

elen, stretched out on the sofa a book in her hand, glanced up kly with the bored look that sixsometimes affects. She did not from her extremely comfortable tion.

Yes, mother?" she asked just a litbit impatiently.

he little mother looked grieved.

I'm sorry, dear, that I have to ner you," she murmured apologetiy, "but would you mind shelling peas for dinner? And the baby ds a clean dress, too. Perhaps, if 're not too busy—" She paused, ting. Helen threw her book down elessly on the floor as she scramd to her feet. Her attractive face s not very pleasant looking, for a wl wrinkled up her forehead and mouth drew down at the corners.

Seems to me, mother," she muted crossly, "that you always pick the worst time for me to do things. on't want to shell peas, and I don't nt to dress the baby! I want to d this book!"

The mother's lip trembled just the iest bit. She did not seize the opctunity to tell how tired she was; only said, "I'm sorry, Helen," and t the room.

Helen was not a disagreeable girl. e was very popular with her ends, and the members of her fam- loved her very dearly. But she d one fault which had grown until amounted to plain selfishness. She uld ne er bring herself to do pleastly the things she did not care to do.

There are many girls just like elen. Some of them do not realize e habit they have fallen into, but hers go madly on with their eyes en.

Once I was preparing for an exnination in geometry. I hated geomry, and the problem that I was arning was particularly exasperatg. I went over it two or three mes without much success, and then, ddenly raising my eyes from my ork, I saw a book on the table, a ok that I had been very anxious to ad for a long time. I did not want study my geometry, and I most wfully wanted to read that book. he two forces struggled in my soul nd my common sense went down in efeat before my shortsightedness. did not think of to-morrow. I ropped my geometry problem and ead the book.

I hardly need to tell you that I did ot pass the examination. It took e a whole month of hard work to ring up my average.

It is a remarkably good idea occaionally to do the things you don't ant to do. It broadens your mind a reat deal and your ideals become uch larger, besides the many things t does for the good of your disposiion.

Do you suppose that Beethoven anted to practice any more than lots f modern day people who are taking usic lessons? Not at all. His fa- her used to lead him, crying, to the iano, when he was a very tiny boy. And yet if it had not been for this ork, this task that he did not want o do, the world might have lost many eautiful compositions left by the naster musician.

The things that really do matter re usually such tiny little things; he letter you didn't want to write, nd the call you didn't want to make, nd the helping hand you were too usy to lend for a moment. Sometimes you do not know how much good he letter would have done, or how nuch cheer the call would have given o some weary heart, or that perhaps the helping hand might have saved a soul. And you did not do these things simply because you didn't want to!

I spent the summer at a farmhouse one year, and during the season became quite attached to the farmer's little twin girls. There was one thing I noticed about them that pleased me very much. Never in all my stay did I hear them exclaim: "I don't want to!"

I spoke to the mother about it and she told me the story between chuckles.

"They weren't always so good," she said, "but they had a lesson they won't forget. They were saving up to buy dolls, real store dolls, with blue eyes and curly blond hair; the kind that costs a dollar. An' so one day I told them that I would give them a cent a quart for all the raspberries they picked! My! how excited those children were! But just as they were startin' out, old Miss Smith came and leaned over the fence and called me. She wanted somebody to run to the post office for her with a letter; it was awful important, an' I told her one of the girls could go. But, no ma'am, they didn't want to; they was too busy pickin' berries. So I sent Miss Carter's little girl next door. An' when she come back, Miss Smith give her a dollar, she was that pleased. My!" her fat sides shook with laughter, "but the girls were mad."

Do not think, girls, that doing the thing you don't want to, always has a visible reward. But you yourself know that you are doing right, and there is One up above who is watching you and smiling down. Isn't that payment enough?

MRS. BOOTH-CLIBBORN

A Daughter of the General

TALL and slender and eager-faced, the two women sat before me, very much alike in appearance, with the same blue eyes, the same light brown hair, hair which, in the mother, was touched heavily with gray. They were Mrs. Booth-Clibborn, the oldest daughter of General Booth, and her daughter Victoria.

"We arrived only three days ago; Monday, July, the 28th," murmured the mother in a voice with an unmistakable French accent. "We have not yet planned our work out—completely. We expect to speak in churches and public halls, and so far we have had many invitations. From here we go to Northfield, then to Winona."

"Do you care for America?" She came out of her reverie, and her eyes lit up with a smile that was very charming. "Ah! yes, I am very fond of America. On my visit eighteen years ago I met a great many Americans who were dear people. I love them! You know I have been on the continent for many years; in France and Switzerland. I won many people in France. I was the one who introduced the Salvation Army in those countries, and since I left the army ten years ago I have been carrying the Word of God in the same way. I go into public places and music halls. There I speak to people who cannot be reached through the churches. I speak irrespective of any doctrine, and in that way I win them all—Catholics, Protestants, infidels. For I bring them word from a friend—from God. In connection with my work they call me 'La Maréchale.' I come now from England, where I had great success. Churches begged me to stay, for God opened the doors. But I felt that I should visit America. My daughter, who speaks three languages and is a musician, will work for the young people while I talk to the parents."

Her daughter touched her arm gently. "Tell her of your work in Switzerland," she suggested.

"I was not well treated in Switzerland," said the mother obediently, "I spoke there to two classes, the élite and the people of the slums. They threw me into jail twice; they stoned me; they jeered at me. What did it matter? Nothing! I had only my message to carry."

"What is the object of your visit here?" was asked.

"I have several objects," was the answer. "First, I want to carry a message from God to the people. Then I want to talk to the mothers, for I myself am the mother of ten children, and I want to raise voluntary contributions for France. France needs a great deal of help. God has sent a message that is filling my heart. I must tell it to the people!"

"Do not forget my mission," she said as I rose to leave. "Simply in three words, it is this: 'God and France.'"

ANSWERED PRAYERS

WE WERE in great trouble. It seemed that there was no way out, but we took it to the Lord in prayer, and he has opened a way for us and raised up friends for us and delivered us from our great trouble. Praise his holy name."—W. T. K., North Becket, Mass.

"God has answered more prayers for me," writes a friend, "than there are stars in the sky. Most people seem to think God answers only in times of great need, such as sickness, but I have found that he hears and answers prayers about very small and ordinary things as well." A reader, from Grant, Va., writes: "I want to testify along with the others that many times my prayers have been answered. If we all would pray more and ask that God's will be done, how much happier this world would be! It is an inspiration to read the statements of others who have taken the Source of our existence to be their helper."

"I wish to thank God," writes J. J. G., of Boston, Mass., "and acknowledge his great goodness and mercy in answering my prayers for help while in great need financially. By faith and prayer I have many times been helped in other ways."

PUNCTURED

"What happened to Babylon?" asked the Sunday school teacher.

"It fell!" cried the pupil.

"And what became of Nineveh?"

"It was destroyed."

"And what happened to Tyre?"

"Punctured!"

I'm Ready

At any moment in these hot summer days, you can serve without work a delightful meal.

Prepared for you by a famous French chef. Baked for hours in a modern steam oven.

Brought to you with the fresh oven flavor, with the beans mellow and unbroken.

A perfect dish with a matchless sauce. And always ready for hungry folks if you stock a few cans of Van Camp's.

Van Camp's BAKED WITH TOMATO SAUCE PORK AND BEANS

"The National Dish"

The man who prepares this dish of baked beans came from Hotel Ritz, in Paris.

The beans he uses are white and plump—beans picked out by hand.

The sauce is made from whole, ripe tomatoes. It costs five times what common sauce is sold for.

The baking is done with superheated steam, without contact with the beans.

After hours of this baking, the beans come out without being crisped or broken. They are mellow and whole and nut-like.

The tomato sauce is baked into the beans. And the beans by our process are brought to you with all the fresh oven savor.

Such beans are extremely rare. So far as we know, there are no others like them.

So this dish has made this kitchen famous in a million homes.

The beans will amaze and delight you. They will give you a new idea of baked beans. Please try them. Make these summer meals which come ready-cooked as inviting as you can.

DOING RIGHT THINGS IN A RIGHT WAY*

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

THERE is no cathedral in all the world that has the sanctity and grandeur of Mount Sinai as a temple of the living God. One who has seen it thus describes it: "No green spot, no tree, no flower, no rill, no lake, but dark brown ridges, red peaks like pyramids of solid fire; no rounded hillocks, or soft mountain curves such as one sees in the ruggedest of home scenes, but monstrous and misshapen cliffs, rising tier above tier, and surmounted here and there by some spire-like summit, serrated for miles into ragged grandeur, and grooved from head to foot by the winter torrents that had swept down like bursting waterspouts, tearing their naked loins, and cutting into the very veins and sinews of the fiery rock." (From Bonar's Desert of Sinai, p. 236.)

The Israelites came to Mount Sinai in the third month after leaving Egypt. God had determined that it should be a place of schooling for them—a university. It was God's plan to keep them there for one year. Grand was the campus on which they pitched their tents. The valley or Wady-er-Raha, a plain two miles long by half a mile wide, is thought to be sufficient to accommodate two millions of people, allowing to each individual one square yard of standing room. God was there to welcome them! "There was the voice of a trumpet, exceeding loud" (verse 16). God was speaking to them in the thunder, and waving his torch in the fierce lightnings, and lifting his banner in the rocking of the mountains. Mount Sinai was vocal with God! His voice was heard, calling Moses to come up to the top of the mountain and take a message for his people. Let us not forget that God had talked with Moses before in the burning bush, so Moses was not affrighted, though the mountain seemed like a furnace. He knew that it was God's holiness that so illumined it. But something must be done to restrain the people, to keep them from ascending the mountain. God had not said to them, "Come up," so he sent word to them by Moses that they must keep their distance from the mountain, lest they perish. God's words of welcome that day to the Israelites were:

> Ye have seen what I did unto the Egyptians, and how I bare you on eagles' wings, and brought you unto myself. Now therefore, if ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, then ye shall be mine own possession from among all peoples: for all the earth is mine: and ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests, and a holy nation.

God had called them his people before, but here was a reaffirmation of their adoption by him, and all that he required of them was that they should render to him obedience and loving service. Was there anything hard in this? Was it not just what the Israelites would choose to do? "I bore you on eagles' wings and brought you to myself." How tender and beautiful were those words of God! They could not have been misunderstood by the Israelites, for though they might not in Egypt have seen the eagle mother expanding her wings and rising to catch her fledgling in its first attempts to fly, they had without doubt more than once seen such a sight on their journey from Egypt.

Now we are going to draw largely upon an address made by Professor Henry Drummond. "Crossing the Atlantic the other day, the Etruria, in which I was sailing, suddenly stopped in mid-ocean—something had broken down. There were a thousand people on board the ship. Do you think we could have made it go on, if we had all gathered together, and pushed against the sides, or against the masts? When a man hopes to sanctify himself by trying, he is like a man drowning and trying to save himself by pulling the hair of his own head. It is impossible. Christ held up that mode of sanctification to ridicule when he said, 'Which of you by taking thought can add a cubit to his stature?'

"Another man says: 'That is not my way. I have given up that. My method is to concentrate on some single sin, and to work away upon that until I have got rid of it. Now, in the first place, life is too short for that process to succeed. . . . If you dam up the stream at one place it will simply overflow higher up. Religion does not consist in negatives—in stopping this sin and that sin.

"Another man says: 'I am not trying to stop sins in succession, but I am trying to copy the character of Christ, bit by bit.' The difficulty about that method is that it is mechanical. It makes an overbalanced life, and there is always the mark of a tool about such a life. It is like a wax flower as compared with a natural flower.

"There is another method; it is to get a book of blank paper and make columns for the day of the week, and then put down a list of the virtues, with spaces against each for marks, and then follow it up with a great many notes. You remember that is what Franklin did, and I suppose that many men in this day have hung up in their bedrooms or laid away in their secret drawers the rules they have drawn up for themselves. . . . All these methods I have named are perfectly human, perfectly natural, and perfectly futile. . . .

"Now what is the true method? It is laid down in a single verse in the Bible, and it is so practical that any man, any person; can apply it to his own life, and it is as certain in its action as a law of nature. It is the eighteenth verse of the third chapter of Second Corinthians: 'We all with unveiled face, reflecting in a mirror the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory.' We are changed; the mistake is we have been trying to change ourselves. . . . Make Christ your constant companion. Be under his influence more than any other influence. . . . He does not appeal to the eye, he appeals to the soul. The thing you love in a friend is not the thing you see. I know of a very beautiful character—one of the loveliest characters which has ever bloomed on this earth. It was the character of a young girl. She always wore about her neck a little locket, but nobody was allowed to open it. None of her companions ever knew what it contained until one day she was laid down with a dangerous illness, when one of them was granted to look into the locket, and she saw written there, 'Whom having not seen, I love.' That was the secret of her sanctified life. She had been changed into the same image."

Begin with the children, because it is so easy to direct them in ways of obedience and loving service. Who has not seen the delight of a child in getting a glass of water for some one, or "helping to get supper," or carrying home a part of the marketing in a small basket? It would almost seem if ever the children grow selfish it is the fault of those who have undertaken their training. Parents and teachers should study ways to make their children sharers in the work of the Sunday school and the church.

Let parents think more about how they can develop their children in loving service than what they can do to "smooth the way" for their children. It is not good for them to have burdens removed. It is better that they should do as much as possible in caring for themselves and others; in this way tracks are laid for giving loving service to God. Let them not have idle hands nor playing hands all of the time, but useful hands most of the time.

An American trader and two English travelers, during a famine year in China, started on a duck-shooting expedition in the vast rice swamps. By-and-by they lost their way and wandered about for hours. At last they met a Chinaman of the very lowest class, who safely led them back to their starting-place after two hours of plowing through the swamps. The Chinaman was weak and pale with exhaustion when he turned to go home.

The grateful trader and his friends offered the man a handful of money in payment for his services, an amount which was more than he could earn by two years' work, for wages in China are very low. But, to their astonishment, he declined it.

"But why?" they asked.

"Don't you know," he replied, "that Confucius ordered his followers to show kindness to their brother men? We are so poor that the chance rarely comes to us to obey him. No such chance as this has ever come to me before; I will not lose it!"

Are we making use of the opportunities of service which our great Leader gives to us as faithfully as did that poor Chinaman?

*THE INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON for August 31, 1913. Israel at Mount Sinai. Ex. 19; Heb. 12: 18-24. GOLDEN TEXT: "Let us have grace, whereby we may offer service well pleasing to God with reverence and awe." Heb. 12: 28 (R. V.).

OUR SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS' ROUND TABLE

—REV. CLAUDE A. MCKAY, pastor of Greenwood Union Church, Greenwood, Mass., contributes the following very interesting suggestions for our Round Table: "Our Sunday school workers feel sure that boys and girls, young and old, will attend best when the school can maintain a two-fold 'pull'—an inner and an outer. Two words which more adequately express the purposes are 'interesting' and 'helpful.' We endeavor to have stirring, pleasant music, a delightful room, cheery teachers and helpers, school and class loyalty with a 'hurrah' in it, picnics, and the cross and crown pins as merit memorials, all of which go to make up an interesting Sunday school, which is a splendid attendance 'pull.' However, along with this outer pull there must go an inner 'pull,' else the school will descend to the character of a 'club' or semi-religious fraternity. The school must be helpful—mutually so and consciously so. The superintendent plans an interesting program that will be helpful, and everybody will feel the helpfulness even if it is not once mentioned. The teacher in preparing the day's lesson chooses the helpful questions, pointers, hints, character peculiarities and then uses all her ingenuity to make them interesting without moralizing.

—"VACATION HAS MANY attractions outside the Sunday school, many of which are good and can be utilized by resourceful teachers to create a class spirit and class loyalty. A boys' teacher takes the boys on a Saturday afternoon 'hike,' single file, Indian fashion; builds a fire, remembering Abraham, who never stopped on his journeyings without building an altar to worship; studies the birds as insect-destroyers who pay their own board; studies the bee—a bumble-bee whose commission from the great Father is to fertilize the clover and fruit. Vacation attractions which are evil must be overcome by the Sunday school according to New Testament directions—'with good.' The Sunday school hour, the superintendent, the teacher, the lesson study, the very atmosphere is to be both interesting and helpful to pull them to the Sunday school and hold them for the Sunday school's Lord.

—"OUR FATHERS, in their Sunday school days, had very little of the 'outer pull.' To have endeavored to make the young people's churchgoing interesting would have been impious. We, their children, are at the opposite swing of the pendulum. Our tendencies are to measure a Sunday school's efficiency by its powers to please. That which, in the long run, pleases a boy or girl, young or old, is that by which he is helpfully pleased. The teacher who can reach into a boy's bosom and touch the mainspring of his latent manhood will be remembered in holy meditations and consecrated service long after an over-pious soul's moralizing has been forgotten or the prattle of a purposeless teacher has ceased to influence. Teaching boys and girls to be good disciples of Jesus Christ is the divinest task in God's vineyard."

BY AID OF HELEN HENRIETTA

Vary a thing," rejoined Mike with apt certainty.
But—but I thought they'd be glad now I—I had something to sell," faltered.
ike shook his head. "Not noos-ers, kid. They ain't run that way.
—" He hesitated, then plunged hand into his pocket and brought a small quantity of change. Most his he thrust into Maggie's un-ing little palm. "Now jest shove at the man behind the winder, an' him ter put in that worth o' talk.
won't refuse ye," nodded Mike, ewdly, as, with careful directions to reach the newspaper office, he short Maggie's thanks and remonnces.
erhaps, vaguely, Mike had sus-ted that what did happen would pen. At all events it was not long ore a starry-eyed Maggie was back h every dime and nickel and penny act.
Here's your money, Mike. It n't cost a cent," she panted. And y said they'd put the notice in a endid place where everybody'd see and the man said Helen Henrietta s lovely — just lovely!" finished ggie in triumph, still smarting un-the lashing scorn of those small ck eyes behind the three gold balls.
I thought as much," nodded Mike ely, as Maggie turned away, still rging Helen Henrietta to her heart.
I thought as much," nodded Mike in the next morning when on the st page of one of his papers—in a ce and of a size that twice his nick-and dimes could not have bought—saw Maggie's "For Sale" notice, d below it a heart-reaching account the little girl who had brought it.
umph! I reckon there'll be some-n' more'n rent paid now," muttered
ke. "Paper, sir?" he shouted then, d thrust deftly under the man's se Maggie's For Sale notice, face

Now newspapers, as we all know, e not respecters of persons. They e as at home in Millionaire Row as Poverty Court. It is not strange, erefore, that verv early in the day aggie's For Sale notice found its ay into the very chamber of Dorothy ay, for Uncle Ned—who had just ught the paper—carried it there in s hand. In his other hand was a and new doll, gorgeous in blue tin and gold braid. To Uncle Ned was a very pretty doll, indeed, and had high hopes of it; but Dorothy ay only glanced at it and tossed it ide petulantly.
"I'm sick of dolls," she said.
It was at that moment that Uncle ed's eyes fell on Maggie's For Sale otice.
"Sick of them, are you? Then why on't you sell them?" he asked, neted into a sharp retort. "Now here's little girl that's selling hers." And e read aloud:
"For Sale. At a Sacrifice. My olly Helen Henrietta. The bestest nd Most Butifullest Dolly in the Vorld. I got to Pay—" Uncle Ned opped abruptly. There was a catch his throat. He was reading on lently of the little girl who had got pay her rent. Suddenly he became ware that his young niece was speak-g.
"Go buy that doll for me, Uncle ed," she was saying. "I want it."
Uncle Ned changed color. He anced at the name and address at e bottom of the notice. He had a rewd suspicion as to what sort of ll Helen Henrietta might be.
"Nonsense!" he said lightly. "You on't want that doll, Dorothy May."
Dorothy May lifted her head. She oked suddenly not quite so listless.
he stared as if she almost disbelieved
e evidence of her own ears.

"But I said I wanted it, Uncle Ned," she declared imperiously. "I want it!"

"Nonsense!" cried Uncle Ned again. "That doll isn't half so fine as this, I'll warrant." And he lifted up the blue-and-gold beauty from the floor and held it out enticingly.

Every trace of listlessness fled now from Dorothy May. She began to beat her hands up and down, fast and faster.

"I tell you I do, I do," she screamed so loud that Uncle Ned sprang to his feet and began to edge toward the door. "They said I could have anything I wanted—they did, they did; and I tell you I want that doll! Go get it."

"But, I—I—It—oh, great Scott!" groaned Uncle Ned, as he flung himself from the room.

It was but the beginning of the end. In ten minutes the whole house was in an uproar with Uncle Ned and his luckless paper for the storm center.

"But why did you read it to her, anyway, in the first place?" demanded one.

"She can't have a strange doll like that," wailed another.

"'Maggie,' indeed!

"And it's a dreadful street!"

"Right in the slums!"

"'Twould have to be fumigated."

"And to think that the only thing she's wanted had to be this!"

Meanwhile, in Dorothy May's chamber Dorothy May sobbed and shrieked and fought and—yes, kicked—for the doll, Helen Henrietta—chiefly because she had been told she could not have it.

Then came the great doctor.

"What's all this about?" he demanded sternly.

They told him. Then they showed him Maggie's For Sale notice—the cause of it all.

An odd change came to the doctor's face. The stern lines vanished. A tender smile curved his lips and a soft radiance glowed in his eyes.

"Tell Dorothy May that I've gone for the doll," he said then, carefully transferring to his gilt-and-leather note book the despised "slum" address.

"You!" gasped half a dozen voices. And the amazed tones showed how fully was it realized that his minutes were, indeed, worth dollars apiece.

But the doctor had gone.

Maggie was at home when her visitor came. She did not see the wonderful automobile that drew up before the door downstairs, however, for she was crying, with Helen Henrietta hugged close to her heart.

Maggie had forgotten now all about the scorn in the pawnbroker's eyes. She had forgotten that she ever wanted anybody to know how perfectly lovely Helen Henrietta was. She remembered only that Helen Henrietta was going away—and probably very soon. She was crying, therefore, when the doctor knocked and came in.

"Are you Maggie, the little girl who has a doll for sale?" he asked gently.

Maggie nodded her head dumbly. Instinctively she thrust Helen Henrietta behind her back—then, despairingly, she dragged her forward and held her out toward the doctor.

"Yes, I see," said the man gravely. But he was not seeing at all. He was crossing the room to the bed where Maggie's mother lay. And then, promptly, in the bare little room, the great doctor proceeded to squander a small fortune — in minutes — while Maggie, knowing not of the fortune, looked on wonderingly.

"There! we'll soon have you all right again," promised the man, cheerily, after a time, as he wrote something on two or three leaves of paper from his pad. "Meanwhile, I'm thinking I'll send some one here to look after you a bit, eh?"

"Oh, thank you, sir—thank you so much!" breathed Maggie.

"You are quite welcome, my dear," smiled the doctor. And he looked actually as if he felt well paid for those dollar minutes ticked away by the faithful little watch in his pocket. "And now for this young lady here," added the doctor gently, taking the doll from Maggie's clinging fingers. "You wish to sell it?"

"Y—yes, sir; to—to pay the rent, you know." The last came in a sobbing whisper with a tearful glance of caution toward the bed.

The doctor frowned and hesitated. He seemed to be thinking; then, suddenly, he lifted his head and spoke.

"It's a little girl who wishes to buy," he said, handing the doll back to Maggie. "Suppose you come with me and take it to her."

Maggie made a brave effort to blink away the tears.

"All right, sir. Maybe it will be easier to—to know just where she's going," faltered Maggie, reaching out eagerly welcoming hands to Helen Henrietta.

Even the wonderful automobile ride brought only a fleeting smile to Maggie's countenance, and her face expressed settled gloom by the time the house on the Avenue was reached. Silently she followed the doctor up the broad steps and into the hall, Helen Henrietta clasped close in her arms. She did stare a little at the liveried man-servant who admitted them, and her eyes swept half-fearfully, half questioningly the magnificence all around her as they climbed the palatial stairway.

In the hall above they encountered men and women waiting, all of whom stared at her unpleasantly, and some of whom hurried forward with upraised hands.

"Doctor—you wouldn't—that beggar child—in there!" remonstrated one.

Maggie shrank back, a little frightened, a good deal angry. The doctor caught her hand.

"But I would," he smiled; then, as Dorothy May's mother still protested, he said sharply: "Your daughter has everything to gain and nothing to lose, madam, at the hands of this little girl."

Everybody fell back then, and, with the doctor leading her, Maggie entered the most beautiful room she had ever seen.

"Why, it's just like fairyland," she breathed, "that mother has told me about! And this is where Helen Henrietta will live?"

"Did you bring the doll, doctor?" demanded a voice; and at the fretful tone Maggie turned and saw Dorothy May.

"Yes, we have the doll," said the doctor; "haven't we, Maggie?"

"Y-yes, sir," faltered Maggie; but her grasp on Helen Henrietta did not loosen in the least, though in obedience to the doctor's motion she came reluctantly forward.

Maggie saw, then, the blue-and-gold doll face-down on the floor. She saw, too, Arabella, Estella, Pauline, and some of the others sprawled here and there, as if flung from a loveless hand. She stopped, amazed. Then she stooped and picked up the blue-and-gold beauty at her feet.

"But you don't need Helen Henrietta," she faltered, wide-eyed. "You've got so many already—such beautiful, beautiful ones!"

"Pooh! those old things," scoffed Dorothy May. "Come, let me see the doll you brought."

Reluctantly, her eyes filled with longing and with loving pride, Maggie turned Helen Henrietta face

CALL HYMN "AMERICA" REPUGNANT

German Catholics Vote for the "Star-Spangled Banner"

Special to the New York Times.

BUFFALO, August 5.—The German Catholic Central Verein, representing a membership of more than 200,000, adopted to-day a resolution offered by Pa l Prodoehl of Baltimore condemning the anthem "America" as repugnant to American ideals. The convention then voted to endorse the "Star-spangled Banner" as the national song.

Mr. Prodoehl, who is chairman of the civic committee of Baltimore, made a speech before the convention, in which he asserted that the singing of "America" in this country should not be tolerated.

"It is a sad commentary on the patriotic spirit of the nation," he remarked. "that it has borrowed its national air from a country against which it fought two wars, one to procure independence, the other to maintain it. America, the land of civic and religious liberty, is identified with the 'land of the Pilgrim's pride,' the land of religious bigotry and intolerance, the land of blue laws, witch-burning, and persecution," he complained. "I submit that such a song cannot be regarded as the national American anthem. 'The Star-spangled Banner' Centennial will, I hope, have the effect of increasing the popularity of 'The Star-spangled Banner,' so as to make it the sole national anthem, to the exclusion of the misnamed hymn 'America.'"

The convention voted to do all possible to procure the exclusion of "America" as the national anthem.

Catholic Papers and "America"

From the "Monitor" (Catholic), San Francisco, August 2, 1913

SOME silly editor has been advising Catholics to hiss the song "America" because it is sung to the tune of "God Save the King." Could idiocy go to further extreme?

"We agree that as poetry it ["America"] is very poor stuff indeed," says the Boston Sacred Heart Review. "Furthermore it is sung to the tune of Great Britain's 'God Save the King.' But for all that we do not think well of the suggestion that whenever the song is sung it should be hissed. The hissing might be misunderstood. Let us not make an issue of something in which no principle is involved. And above all let us not make ourselves ridiculous."

For a Catholic paper to print such a suggestion as that referred to is nothing short of criminal. That is the sort of stuff on which the A. P. A. feeds and lives. It invites against Catholics the evil-smelling attacks of such scurrilous sheets as the Menace. One is half tempted to believe that a Catholic editor who would be guilty of giving such advice as the Review so properly scores, would not be beneath stirring up agitation for the revenue it would bring.

It all reminds us of some wise words published in the Catholic Chronicle recently regarding a certain type of "Catholic" paper.

"Some of the so-called Catholic journals in circulation are not worthy of even the slender support they are receiving," says the Chronicle. "Loosely and indifferently edited papers and magazines should either drop their pretentions as Catholic publications or else bring themselves up to a reasonable standard of excellence. Failing to do either of these things, they perpetrate serious injury to the Catholic press as a whole. The worthiness of the cause in which inferior journals are sometimes published does not excuse the unworthiness of the papers."

A Catholic paper that would suggest hissing "America" is, to say the least, unworthy the name of Catholic.

about. But she fell back instantly, her eyes ablaze, for Dorothy May had jeered:

"That thing! You don't call that thing the beautifulest doll in the world?"

For a moment Maggie could not speak. Then all the pent emotions of the last hour found vent in one burst of wrath.

"Of course I do—and she is, too! She mayn't wear such fine clothes, but she's just as good inside. But you can't have her now. I won't sell her to you! Helen Henrietta shan't go to anybody who—who won't love her. I love her—but I've got to sell her—to somebody—to pay the rent. She—she's all I've got, while you—you've got all these, and you just throw them away, and—and—" With a choking sob Maggie turned and stumbled toward the door.

A strange thing happened then. Dorothy May sprang out of her chair and ran after her guest, on her face an expression that no one had ever before seen on the face of petted, spoiled Dorothy May.

"Oh, come—say, I didn't mean anything. Is that—that doll really all you've got?"

Maggie nodded dumbly. She did not turn her head.

Dorothy May hesitated, then with one swoop she gathered into her arms three gorgeous dolls that lay nearest.

"Then let me give you—some of mine," she panted.

Maggie shook her head.

"I'd rather have Helen Henrietta," she choked.

"But let me just show you! And I've got loads of dresses for them, and hats, and shoes, and everything, and trunks and furniture. Some of them might fit your doll. See!" And enticingly she threw open the door of a doll-house big enough for both children to enter.

Maggie hesitated. She took one step toward the hall, but she looked back all the while at the doll-house. Then, slowly, she turned her whole body about.

"Well, I suppose I might just look at 'em," she sighed, her enraptured eyes on the sumptuous toyland all about her. "But I wouldn't swap Helen Henrietta for one single thing there is here," she finished, with quick suspicion, as she carefully shifted Helen Henrietta to the side farthest removed from Dorothy May.

A minute later the doctor softly opened the hall door, and, with his finger to his lips, motioned the waiting men and women inside. They saw, then, what they had not seen for months before—Dorothy May actually playing with her dolls and toys, eager, alert and happy.

"You see?" nodded the doctor in triumph. "You see?"

It was Mike who, some days later, was telling a customer the story of Maggie's For Sale notice.

"Oh, yes, it worked bang-up. There wan't no end ter the fine folks that read it an' come ter buy that doll. But a doctor chap, he got in ahead of the rest. He's a big bug, too, they say. He's took Maggie an' her ma away somewheres, where they'll be better looked after; an' they do say that every day now Maggie goes ter play with a rich little kid on the avenoo, who was sick an' most dyin' jest for some one ter come an' make her sit up an' take notice. But, say, would ye believe it, sir?—Maggie never sold the doll at all. She's got Helen Henrietta yet!"

OME AND DEMOCRACY

(From the "Independent," June 12, 1913)

T WAS in an incidental way, in an editorial on "The American Pope," we spoke of our country as one "whose form of governt has been and still is formally lemned by the Church of Rome." have been more than once asked justify that assertion. We said mally," not specifically. There never been a specific mention of country as having a form of govnent to be condemned.

ur form of government is one ed wholly on the will of the peo- Again, it is a form of governit in which the state is free from control of the church. Again, it is orm of government which requires public education uncontrolled by church. All these principles have n formally condemned by Rome. ubtless many, and we trust most, holic leaders in this country ac- t these American principles, but y are officially condemned; alugh they are "tolerated" where s cannot be helped, under the conration of tolerari posse, that they be endured because of the hards of the American heart.

First, as to the will of the people as basis of government. The Church Rome has condemned this principle re than once. Perhaps the latest se was in the letter of Pius X in 10 to the Episcopate of France, conmning the liberality of the Sillon. e quote:

The Sillon places the origin of public aurity in the people, from whom it goes to rulers, but in such a way that it continues rest with the people. This was formally ndemned by Leo XIII in his encyclical turnum illud on the Constitution of Chrisn States, in which he writes: "Many modn thinkers, following in the footsteps of se who in the last century called themselves ilosophers, declare that all power comes from people; that consequently those that exere power in society do not exercise it of their n authority, but as an authority delegated to em by the people, and on the understanding at it may be revoked by the people. Catholics, however, hold that the right to rule comes om God as its natural and necessary princie."

When the Sillon admitted, as all hristians do, that all power comes iginally from God, Pius proceeds to ow that this does not meet the point; nd he further quotes Leo XIII, that ection by the people "may single out ne ruler, but it does not confer on im authority to rule, it does not delegate power to him; it simply points ut the man who is to exercise."

The American form of government s based on the theory here condemned. t holds that "those who exercise ower in society do not exercise it of heir own authority, but as an auhority delegated to them by the peole, and on the understanding that it ay be revoked by the people." On hat understanding Charles I. was beeaded; on that understanding our recall" and impeachments, even of president, are based. This doctrine s implied all through our constitution, nd is definitely stated in the Declaraion of Independence, which says, folowing the "philosophers" referred to:

Governments are instituted among men, deriving their just power from the consent of the governed; that when any form of government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the right of the people to alter or abolish it, and to institute a new government, laying its foundations on such principles, and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness.

Again, it is one of the principles of our form of government that it shall be free from church control, and entirely separated from the church. On this matter it is enough to quote from the Syllabus of Errors promulgated by Pius IX in 1864. That syllabus was a long list of errors condemned by the Pope, acting as he did under the right of infallibility. The following is one of "the errors of our time which are stigmatized":

LV. That the church ought to be separated from the state and the state from the church (Ecclesia a Statu, Statusque ab Ecclesia sejungendus est).

A third principle of our government, but dependent on the second, is that free public education should be uncontrolled by the church. That this principle is condemned by Rome hardly needs evidence, for here at home it is attacked constantly by high ecclesiastics. We satisfy ourselves with quoting from the same syllabus the following "error," held by our people, but herein condemned:

XLVII. That the best theory of civil society requires that popular schools open to the children of all classes, and, generally, all public institutes intended for instruction in letters and philosophy, and for conducting the education of the young, should be freed from all ecclesiastical authority, government and interference, and should be fully subject to the civil and political power, in conformity with the will of rulers and the prevalent opinions of the age. (Populares scholæ, quæ patent omnibus cujusque ex populo classis pueris).

And one more error condemned:

XLVIII. That the system of instructing youth which consists in separating it from the Catholic faith and from the power of the church, and in teaching exclusively, or at least primarily, the knowledge of natural things, and the earthly ends of social life alone, may be approved by Catholics.

It would be easy to add to these three points in which our form of government is formally condemned by the Vatican. One, which it is enough simply to mention, is that it claims the right to fix the laws of marriage, which the Catholic Church claims for itself. (See "Syllabus" LXVII, LXVIII, LXXIII, LXXIV.) On this, and on unsectarian education, the church keeps up a more or less persistent conflict, while on others it remains passive, "tolerating" what it has condemned. To tolerate is much, and a multitude of American Catholics, even of the highest ecclesiastical rank, go so far as to rejoice in separation of church and state, and believe fully in the right of the people to rule. Many, especially of the laity, are satisfied with our public school system. There is not half so much difference in practice as there is in theory, and theory is steadily following approved practice. Catholics are loyal citizens. They look to Rome for religion, not for politics, or political theory.

Stable Investments

IT is an undoubted fact that the most truly conservative investment is the one which never fluctuates in price or depreciates in value, but remains fixed and secure at par under any and all conditions. The more nearly an investment approaches perfect stability in value, the more completely is it free from any trace of speculative element.

By its very nature, a carefully chosen First Mortgage Loan on improved real estate is a non-fluctuating investment. When divided up into a series of First Mortgage Real Estate Bonds, the investment loses none of the conservative features of the mortgage. The investor who purchases this class of security rests secure in the knowledge that his investment is free from influence by adverse business or financial conditions, or political or tariff changes.

We own and offer a great variety of First Mortgage Bonds secured by the highest class of improved income-producing, centrally-located Chicago real estate, maturing serially in two to ten years. We have purchased these bonds with our own funds after careful investigation, and recommend them in the highest terms as safe and attractive investments for income. Denominations $100, $500, $1,000 and $5,000.

ANSWERS TO FINANCIAL QUERIES

D., WAYNESBORO, PA. Causes which impelled us to decline further advertising from the company are sufficient reason to induce us to withhold any recommendation whatsoever. We would advise other channels of investment.

S., MUTUAL, OKLA. We cannot undertake to report on the reliability of the Mexico-American Land Company of Kansas City, Mo. This is the province of the commercial agencies. This department does not, however, favor such schemes, regarding them as extraordinarily risky. As a result of our observations extending over many years we can remember no similar enterprise which has been permanently successful.

T., EAST ORANGE, N. J. It is fortunate that you advised with us before N. A. Brown & Co. succeeded in getting your money. N. A. Brown, H. L. Davis, and F. N. Franklin, supposedly constituting the firm of N. A. Brown & Co., were arrested recently by federal inspectors. The trio have been indicted by the federal grand jury for using the mails to promote a scheme to defraud investors. Brown has had a career. He has been identified with such fakes as the United Wireless and the Funding Company of America. Inducing investors to believe they will receive 1,000 per cent. in dividends on Franklin Inc. stock is a practice the government apparently didn't approve of.

M., CALMAR, IOWA. You ask us to suggest a safe investment for $3,000, which is likely to appreciate in value. An attractive investment that apparently meets your requirements is the Baltimore & Ohio twenty-year convertibles. These bonds pay 4½ per cent. and at 91¾, the present quotation, yield nearly 5¼ per cent. The bonds are convertible into the common stock of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad at $110 a share on or before February 28, 1923. If the stock should go above $110 a share, a conversion of the bond into the stock would of course be advantageous. It is not unlikely that the stock will go above $110. In 1906 it sold at $125, in 1907 at $122, in 1909 at $122, in 1910 at $119, and has sold this year as high as 106⅝. The common stock is now around $91. Aside from its speculative feature the bond is protected by the direct obligation of Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co.

R., EAST GREENWICH, R. I. Wabash preferred looks very unattractive from an investment viewpoint. The stock may not prove to be as cheap at $7 per share as it looks. It appears that an assessment of $40 per share will be levied. Keep out of such obvious speculations.

D., ATLANTA, GA. Virginia Railway and Power first and refunding 5 per cent. bonds, yielding 5.45 per cent. on present price, are regarded as an excellent investment issue. The company owns and controls the street railway and the commercial electric lighting and power business in Richmond and Petersburg, Va. The bonds are well secured.

MISS M., BATAVIA, N. Y. Based upon your own statements and upon the financial reports of the two banks now the depositories of your money we fail to see why you should withdraw your savings and redeposit the whole amount in a Buffalo bank. But why do you keep $6,000 in savings banks at all? Every day you are losing a certain sum in interest by not having your money invested in the very class of investments the savings banks in the State of New York direct their own trust funds into. Put your money — at least a part — into seasoned railroad bonds. You can then obtain from 4½ per cent. to 5½ per cent. Isn't this more attractive than 3½ per cent. or 4 per cent.? Properly advised, you may make such investment of your funds without risk to principal or the loss of a day's interest. The CHRISTIAN HERALD always stands ready to furnish advice in matter of the selection of securities which are sound investments in our opinion for a woman. And we believe that the present time is an opportune one in which to buy conservative bonds.

M., P., COATSVILLE, PA. You ask regarding a proposed investment of $5,000 in Southern Railway preferred, Erie common, New Haven, Electric Storage Battery common and United States Steel common. You state that your money is now drawing 3 per cent. in a savings fund. The issues you have under consideration are not indicated as desirable investments for a woman, and we believe you would be committing a very grave error if you transferred your funds into such speculative stocks. Indeed, you should divorce all thoughts of stock buying. Should you venture into the stock market you would eventually lose all your money. Invest; don't speculate. Invest in bonds—municipal, railway and public utility bonds. Your money may be so placed that an average yield of 5 per cent. or more will result.

F., DARLINGTON, WIS. Your lots at Lincoln, N. J., possess no market. W. M. Ostrander, Inc., will make no offer, nor will Mr. Ostrander personally buy them at any price, he informs us. In slang parlance, Mr. Ostrander has "put across some bad ones."

C., DULUTH, MINN. The Cleveland, Barberton, Coshocton & Zanesville Railway Company bonds are not recognized as investment possibilities. The company was organized to construct an electric railway from Cleveland to Zanesville, 180 miles. Up to the present no rails have been laid.

L., SYRACUSE, N. Y. There are a number of semi-investment securities we can recommend to a business man who requires six per cent. or more return. One particularly attractive issue comes to our attention just now. It is the offering of the Interborough-Metropolitan Collateral Trust 4½s, which may be purchased at about 72½, yielding at this price 6.40 per cent. These bonds are secured by deposit with a trustee of stock of the Interborough Rapid Transit Co., which is the New York Subway. Interest is paid with dividends received on the subway stock, and to meet the required interest, the subway must earn and pay 9 per cent. on the stock. Subway earnings equaled over 16 per cent. in 1912 and so far in 1913 have equaled more than 19 per cent. The subway carries more than a million passengers a day at the present time. The territory the subway serves is rapidly extending, and new population flocking in. There seems to be not the slightest prospect that the security back of these bonds will not become more valuable every day. We believe that as a business man's investment they may be safely bought.

D., FORT WAYNE, IND. We cannot report on the reliability of the Land & Irrigation Co. For this information you are referred to the commercial agencies. CHRISTIAN HERALD readers are advised against buying land they have not seen. To act upon this advice is merely following ordinary prudence. Besides, $200 an acre seems high for unimproved agricultural land away off in Oregon when you can buy all the land you want in your own State for $50 an acre and it will be improved and will be where you can examine it without an expensive railway journey.

O., ARKANSAS CITY, KAN. We do not desire to make any further comment on the Metropolitan Telephone & Telegraph Company, and we have warned our readers so many times to keep out of the stocks sold by the Telepost Company that we have grown weary of the task. Why should you or any other discerning investor see any attraction in the stocks of companies that have even a former connection with the Sterling concern, when there are so many real securities in the market? If investors play with fire, they will get burnt. If they risk money on financial ignes-fatui they are likely to lose. They should seek investments that have real substance behind them. Infinitely more attractive are the several security issues of the American Telegraph & Telephone Co. The investor in the stocks and bonds of this great company need not worry. He knows his money is reasonably safe. If he wants to realize on his investment a quick market awaits his commands. There is never the lack of a day in the payment of interest or dividends. He is never ashamed to be known as a partner in the American Telegraph & Telephone Company. If there is one thing more than any other that the American people can be thankful for it is that the United States Postal authorities have driven from the mails a large percentage of the fake stock sellers who in former years swindled poor people out of something like a hundred million dollars a year. Five or six members of the Sterling Debenture Corporation are now under arrest, charged by the government with using the mails in defrauding investors.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S MEETINGS

NOTES ON THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR, EPWORTH LEAGUE AND BAPTIST YOUNG PEOPLE'S UNION TOPICS

Vacation Experiences*

WHAT was the most beautiful scene you looked at during the summer vacation? What was the most inspiring message you heard? What was the best friendship you formed or strengthened? What was the most noble hope or aspiration that came to you?

Much of our modern travel does us little good because we go too fast. We travel too fast just as we eat too fast. And we suffer from mental indigestion just as we do from physical indigestion. We all complain because it is so hard to get back to work after vacation; but there is a real and thoroughly respectable reason for that. After the mind has been thrown out of its routine and has made a lot of new observations and had new experiences, it tries to demand that there should be time to digest these things before hurrying back to work. There should be more contemplation, meditation, reflection about such things.

Now, think it over, and answer the questions suggested at the beginning of this lesson. Then ask yourself another short set of questions: During the autumn and winter, the months of the year's hard work, am I going to keep translating that beautiful scene into soul purity? Am I going to translate that inspiring message into action? Am I going to let that friendship make me more neighborly and useful? Am I going to live up to the high dream that stole over me while I was away?

It may have been the gleam of some beautiful lake. It may have been a sunset over the mountains. It may have been the great ocean at sunrise, or sunset, or under the full summer moon. Remember that, beautiful as nature can be, you can make your soul more beautiful, if you will. Perhaps the message came at some great convention or at some village prayer-meeting. You can be true to it at school or at work if you will trust in the Saviour who was behind the message. If it was a vision, a call to new service, new sacrifice, new opportunity, make up your mind that you will be able to say with Paul, in the later years, "I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision."

Even if your vacation was almost wholly a time of fun and rest, the time has come now to translate that fun and rest into busy cheerfulness and vigorous action. And even if you made some bad mistakes during vacation and did some things that were wrong, that is no reason the winter should be spoiled, because the summer was spoiled. Start all over again. If you are in earnest, God will forgive the wrongdoing and undo the mistakes.

Life is, after all, a very serious matter. Young people never before in the history of the world had opportunities so great as those of to-day. God wants you to be strong and glad; he also wants you to help him make the world glad and the souls of all men pure and strong.

Missionary Essentials. Prayer†

I ONCE heard a missionary say what seemed at first to be a very surprising thing. He was speaking to a congregation in which were a few near friends and a number of acquaintances; even the strangers were extremely sympathetic. He needed money; had come to America chiefly for the purpose of raising money. He had some definite plans, and the decision of a number of people in that congregation might have much to do with the success or the failure of those plans; yet when he rose to speak he said:

"I am going to tell you what I want most from you all. I do not want your money. I want your prayers."

It was not said for effect. He was an honest, earnest man. He was giving voice to a great longing that the missionaries feel, the longing to know that their friends back in the homeland are praying for them.

The missionaries need prayer in their own lives. They need it in their preparation, to get the purity and the power and the wisdom of God into their own souls. They need it every day in their work, to withstand the deadening influence of heathenism, to keep their souls fresh and clean and strong, and to give them joy and victory in their work. They need it to keep love glowing in their souls, love for Christ who sent them and love for the souls to whom they have been sent. The great missionaries are those that have been "rich in faith." "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord." So the missionary must keep in close and constant touch with God, expecting blessing and victory.

But the church at home must keep praying for the missionaries on the field. And you are part of the church. You will find your zeal and interest in them and their work dying out if you do not keep praying. You can join your faith to theirs and thus help them win their victories. Prayer is altogether independent of geography. Think how much you should enjoy going into the study of some missionary friend across the seas and praying with him and for him there. You may do that very thing without leaving your own bedroom. And even if you have no personal acquaintances among the missionaries you may soon acquire some. Begin to pray for any missionary of whom you know and he will soon become your friend. Prayer will probably lead to correspondence; your interest will deepen, and you will get others interested, and so the work that began in your own heart will grow beyond all your expectation.

Prayer is the mightiest power in the hands of man. It is mighty because if it is accompanied by faith, it brings God's might down to the affairs of men. We cannot all go to the mission field; we cannot give all that we should like. But we can all pray.

Woman's Work on the Mission Field*

MUCH of the work that needs to be done on the foreign mission field only a woman can do. The light and cheer that have been brought into the zenanas of the East, the apartments in which the women live in seclusion, are incalculable. The curse of child marriage and the accompanying horrors of child widowhood in India are giving way largely before the influence and work of women. Not only as spiritual missionaries, but as physicians, teachers, and nurses. women are doing most beautiful and wonderful work, which could not be done by men.

It is impossible for us in this enlightened land to realize the darkness and misery of so much of the woman-life of the world. It is less than a hundred years now that this specific foreign work for women by women has been going on. The call for workers and for their support is still urgent. What part are the girls of our Baptist Union to have in this glorious task during the next century?

AN OLD NURSE

Persuaded Doctor to Drink Postum.

An old faithful nurse and an experienced doctor, are a pretty strong combination in favor of Postum, instead of tea and coffee.

The doctor said:

"I began to drink Postum five years ago on the advice of an old nurse.

"During an unusually busy winter, between coffee, tea and overwork, I became a victim of insomnia. In a month after beginning Postum, in place of tea and coffee, I could eat anything and sleep as soundly as a baby.

"In three months I had gained twenty pounds in weight. I now use Postum altogether instead of tea and coffee; even at bedtime with a soda cracker or some other tasty biscuit.

"Having a little tendency to Diabetes, I used a small quantity of saccharine instead of sugar, to sweeten with. I may add that today tea or coffee are never present in our house and very many patients, on my advice, have adopted Postum as their regular beverage.

"In conclusion I can assure anyone, that as a refreshing, nourishing and nerve strengthening beverage, there is nothing equal to Postum."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Write for booklet, "The Road to Wellville."

Postum comes in two forms.

Regular (must be boiled).

Instant Postum doesn't require boiling but is prepared instantly by stirring a level teaspoonful in an ordinary cup of hot water, which makes it right for most persons.

A big cup requires more and some people who like strong things put in a heaping spoonful and temper it with a large supply of cream.

Experiment until you know the amount that pleases your palate and have it served that way in the future.

"There's a Reason" for Postum.

OUR MAIL-BAG

Questions and Answers

M. A. S., Lake George, N. Y. Will you please inform me what is meant by the cardinal sins? How many are there and what is their significance?

The term usually employed is "mortal" or "deadly" sins. The distinction between mortal and venial sins has no Scripture foundation. The seven deadly sins, according to this classification, are: pride, anger, envy, sloth, lust, covetousness and gluttony.

W., Holden, W. Va. Salvation is God's free, sovereign gift. He has his faithful witnesses in every land and called by many different names. No one church or religious denomination has a monopoly of spiritual truth, although some may have more than others, differing in degree somewhat as the seven churches mentioned in Revelation differed. It would be presumptuous for any one to assume to judge of the spiritual merits of others. Judgment belongs to God alone, who knoweth the hearts of men.

M. F., Camptown, Pa. 1. Edward B. Moore, commissioner of patents, was appointed in 1907. 2. Write to Scientific American, New York, concerning carpet tack manufacture. 3. Matt. 18: 10 is a passage which the commentators find somewhat difficult. One explains it to mean that, as among men those who have charge of royal children are allowed free access to the king, so the angels who watch over the dear ones (not necessarily children) enjoy a heavenly privilege which is not accorded in other cases. The passage is obscure and uncertain, however, as to its real interpretation.

G. G. W., Morganton, N. C. 1. Recently explained in MAIL-BAG. 2. There are various opinions among Biblical authorities regarding the Song of Solomon, some holding that it is an Oriental wedding song—an epithalmium—and others regarding it as a song symbolical of the union of the church (the bride) and Christ (the bridegroom). Chapter 1, verse 5, is held by the latter as symbolizing the contrast between the black goatskin tents of Kedar and the splendid state tent of the king. In verse 6 Israel, the chosen one, blackened by bondage and servitude, and given over to be a keeper of vineyards for others, had neglected her own and now recalls that neglect in terms of self-reproach.

A Reader, Essex, Mass. What pleasures must one sacrifice in joining a church? I attend private dances, the theater, and enjoy athletics very much. I am greatly puzzled. Why should one sacrifice any innocent pleasures? I do not understand why a God of love can want sacrifice for its own sake.

You are quite right in saying that God does not ask us to make sacrifice for its own sake. When he asks us to give anything up, it is because he knows it would be harmful to us to keep it. In all our thoughts about God we must hold with a firm grip the great fundamental truth that he loves us. We cannot think rightly or feel comfortable without starting here. Because he loves us he wants us to be happy. He does not want to take away our happiness but to give us more. And he knows that we can be happy only as we love and serve him. He really asks us to give up nothing, except to give ourselves to him. When we realize that we belong to him we also realize that certain things harm us, and that certain other things may have a harmful influence upon others. We are living for him, and for the people for whom his Son died. All these questions settle themselves quite easily then. Wholesome athletics make our bodies stronger to do his work. But we know that dancing has injured the moral and spiritual life of many, and that the great majority of plays have objectionable and harmful features. So the sacrifices that seemed hard at first are seen to be really not hard at all, and we find more happiness in the consciousness that we are pleasing and helping him than we could ever have found in any form of self-indulgence.

N. A. M., Wedderburn, Ore. 1. II Cor. 11: 4, "He that cometh" is interpreted as referring to the high-sounding title assumed by false teachers, some of whom laid claim to Jesus' own Messianic title. "Another Jesus": a different spirit, a different Gospel, from those which Paul had preached. If they had listened to such teaching without accepting it as true, they might be excused, although they should give no heed to it; these teachers, the apostle warns the Corinthians, were merely trying to discredit and supplant him (Paul). 2. II Cor. 6: 14 takes an image from the symbolical precept of the Jewish law (Lev. 19: 19 and Deut. 7: 3). Believer and unbeliever are not homogeneous, and any union between such whether by marriage or in other relationship is an unequal yoke. 3. I Tim. 4: 14 is a warning not to let the spiritual gifts we may possess lie unused, such endowments as would qualify one as preacher, teacher or evangelist. "Given thee by prophecy" is held to refer to Timothy's ordination or consecration when those who performed the office spoke through the prophets God's will to give him all the needed spiritual graces and qualifications. The passage in Heb. 6, on the sin of apostasy, has already been commented on in THE MAIL-BAG.

Reader. Do you think that one can be born again, or converted, after one has been baptized and attended the communion? I have long been anxious to live a real Christian life and to know Jesus as a Saviour and Friend, but have failed to truly repent and find any peace when baptized. Do you think there are promises of peace and forgiveness in the Bible for one like this, that he may yet live a new life, with a soul at peace?

This is another letter from that sad group of people who think that anything in the past, great or small, can prevent them from having God's peace in their souls just now. Salvation is a present matter. So far as your present standing in Christ is concerned it does not make any difference whether you were converted at the time you were baptized or not. The only question is: "Will you trust Christ just now to forgive all the sins of the past and to make you truly his?" You ask if "there are promises of peace and forgiveness in the Bible for one like this." There are promises in the Bible, by the score, of forgiveness for any sinner who will ask for it. Murderers, thieves, drunkards, all sorts of sinners, have found these promises true and received God's peace in their souls. Do you not think that whatever mistakes you have made in the past, in professing what you fear now you did not possess, God will forgive and forget, and let you start all over again now? Cease doubting him at once. Begin to trust him [illegible] and your trouble will appear. Read Gal. 5: 6 Cor. 7: 2; Isa. 55: 7; 1: 18; Isa. 43: 25.

Last Chance for August!

ONLY a few days are left of the month of August, so that all members of The Christian Herald Family who desire to take advantage of our Five-months' Coupon Offer must do so at once. Coupons have been coming in by the thousand as a result of the zeal of Christian Herald Family workers who bring new members into the fold.

We announced some time ago, that if each member of the Family sent in only one coupon, the influence of The Christian Herald Family would be doubled. Of course not every member has sent in a coupon; but it would seem as if those who have sent at all have been making an extra effort to send in more than one. Indeed, we have shipped many hundreds of Red Letter New Testaments as special gifts to those who have sent us in six or more coupons. Many of these have received, in addition, the large American Flag, 6 feet long by 4 feet wide; or the Book "Mother," by Kathleen Norris; or the charming little Weather House, to one of which they are entitled, of course, in addition to the Red Letter Testament.

We would urge you to send in your coupons AT ONCE—this very day, if possible. If it so happens that you have mislaid the issue which contained the coupons, write us a letter, giving the list of names, and accompanied by 30 cents each, and we will see that the new members are duly registered as subscribers to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and that you receive the rewards to which you are entitled.

But, more than all, it will be a great satisfaction to you to know that you have caused a number of your friends to become regular members of The Christian Herald Family, the influence of which is growing every day.

IS THE WORLD READY FOR CHRIST'S RETURN?

LETTERS still come from readers who have been deeply interested in the discussion of the question, "Is the World Ready for His Return?" We give below three of the latest communications on the subject:

Signs of His Second Coming Multiply

THERE is no other subject in which I feel so much interest as this of the Second Coming, which you have so kindly offered us the privilege of discussing. I cannot understand how so many intelligent people can read their Bible and show no interest in this subject, for it plainly tells us in Christ's own words, "And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again." The next question naturally is: Have we any way of knowing when to expect him?

The Second Coming is the great theme of the Bible from the first to the last, and the direct prophecies concerning it are many and varied. Jesus himself gave so many signs of his second coming which have been, if not all been fulfilled, so that even though we may not know the day nor the hour, by comparing prophecy and studying well the Word, we can know that the time is near for his coming in great glory. The Gospel has been preached to all nations, and even the most of the small tribes know of the cross of Christ.

The civil powers of Christendom are in perplexity; the distress of nations is everywhere manifest. They seek alliances one with another; yet the attitude of each nation towards the other is that of animosity, jealousy, revenge and hatred. Even individuals are anxiously questioning the future. The religious situation surely presents no hopeful contrast of peace or security. Conflicting doctrines have divided the church into antagonistic sects. But let us not forget that there is a real Church of Christ, widely scattered in the different denominations as "wheat" among the "tares." "The Lord knoweth them that are his."

Jeremiah, 6th chapter, prophesies: "There shall be a cry of Peace, peace, when there is no peace." When in all the history of the world has there been such a cry of "peace," "peace" as at present? Peace congresses, peace leagues, arbitration courts, etc. Yet each nation is striving to produce or obtain the greatest possible destructive agencies in armies and navies.

Will He Find a World Steeped in Sin?

WE DO well to behold with our eyes the conditions about us. We do even better to open our ears to hear what Christ said he would find on his return to this earth. But why ask if Jesus were to appear now, for a brief sojourn to encourage his people?" He said: "I will come again and receive you unto myself, that where I am there ye may be also." This refers no doubt to the first resurrection, when Christ comes for his saints. Afterward the Lord will come with his saints.

What will he find? Exactly what he foretold: The world much changed in appearance, but with the same spirit. The enemy of God, subject to the god of this world. A world full of idolatry, sin, "the lust of the flesh and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life," "the whole world lieth in wickedness." He will find the heathen raging and the people imagining vain things. How many imagine they can feed their souls on science, culture, philosophy and all the issues of the day and refuse "the bread of life which came down from heaven?" Not long ago, one of the leaders of the French nation said boastingly, "We have driven Him out of the army and out of our schools. Soon he will be put out of our nation."

He will find a large number of professors of Christianity, but not all of these will be true believers. Many evangelical denominations with large rolls of membership. We are told plainly that in the last days perilous times will come; that there will be an apostasy; a falling away. Many will have a form of godliness, but will deny its power. They will not manifest that power in a life of faith and separation from the world, its wealth, its pleasures and vanities.

He will find a sad condition even in his church, the one he is building through his Holy Spirit. Many of his own have not the "blessed hope" of his coming. They love him but love not his appearing. All the apostles were waiting and watching for their Lord. He did not come in their day, yet they were not mistaken. There can be no mistake in obeying the Lord. No truth of Scripture is more clearly taught than that the believer should watch, wait for his Lord, be ready, not for death, but for his coming. E. S. LIEURETUX.

The Apathy of the Church

BELIEF in the literal return to this earth of our Lord Jesus Christ and kindred truths were the light which, twenty-one years ago, took me out of a life of sin and placed my feet on the solid rock and kept me. It took me from the saloon and established a family altar in my home. "He that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as He is pure."

Is the attitude of the church to-day one of watching? Why are the ministry so shy about preaching and teaching those great and sacred truths which are found on nearly every page of the New Testament? The church of which I am a constant attendant has five or six hundred members. During four years I have never heard these truths touched upon in the pulpit, nor can I find any in the church who seem to have any interest in them. "Nevertheless, we look for a new heaven and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness." M. W. A.

THYATIRA

THE CITY OF THE IRON ROD AND THE MORNING STAR

By Rev. Francis E. Clark, D.D., LL.D.,

Founder and President of the Christian Endeavor Society

T FIRST sight nothing would seem more incongruous than the conjunction of these two figures of h, the iron rod and morning star, and yet romise is given to the ful in Thyatira that shall "rule the na- with a rod of iron," hat to them shall be "the morning star." may be able to see the significance of striking figures.

cannot be said that traveler as he ap- hes the modern city hyatira, or Ak-Hissar hite Castle), as it is d to-day, can see in second-rate Turkish anything to remind of iron power over nations, or of the ntness of the morning for it is mostly built nud, the streets are ow and straggling, its ar is uninteresting, it has all the appear- of a decadent but satisfied little city, e position in the cen- of the long valley that ects the two great ys of the Hermus and Lycus gives it a cer- amount of business ortance, which its own rprise or spirit of ress scarcely deserves. ow, as always, Thya- is on an important e route. Now a branch way line runs one or mixed and exceedingly trains of freight and enger cars through the each day. In the ancient times caravans of horses and camels brought h business to its doors, as a sort of half-way house between the great tals of Sardis and Pergamos. Moreover in Roman times, when n wrote the message of the Son of God to Thyatira, the city a station on the imperial post-road that connected Rome l all the great cities of the East. To-day Pergamos mere shadow of its former greatness. Sardis is ap of ruins buried under a mountain avalanche; e is no longer the world's capital, and the t cities of this old post-road are of no sequence as emporiums of trade. Thyatira declined with them, for she was always endent for her prosperity upon her greater stronger neighbors. And yet we find much is interesting in one of these back eddies ivilization such as Thyatira has become. In g from Smyrna by rail we change cars at nisa, a place of considerably more importance lay than Ak-Hissar. Manisa is the old gnesia, which gave its name to the magnetic n which was first found in its vicinity, and ce to our common English word magnet and its ivatives, as well as to the well-known drug mag- ia. Two hours by rail from this junction brings us to ubstantial stone station, across the front of which we d the name "Ak-Hissar." We have come to old Thyatira. e of the broadest streets in Turkey, lined with pleasant es, leads from the station to the heart of the town half ileaway. There is little of the striking or unusual to describe nodern Thyatira. It has no great citadel, or acropolis, as each one of the other cities. The little rise of ground, which formerly tained the fortifications of the city, is now a Turkish gentleman's private unds. The great cypress trees are the one redeeming feature which adds a ch of beauty to the town.

ome twenty thousand people live in Ak-Hissar to-day, and the nationalities about equally divided between the Greeks and the Turks. Our hotel is a d of khan, with a few tolerably clean rooms opening upon a wide court-yard, the center of which is a great plane tree, shading an ever-flowing fountain. rses, goats, camels, donkeys, hens and ducks, and a multitude of doves ng to their windows, share the hospitality of the court-yard with ourselves.

The Protestant Pastor of Thyatira and His Family, Photographed with Dr. Clark

Our landlord furnishes only room and bed for the two "pieces of eight" which he charges us, and so we must go out and forage for ourselves for supper. In the straggling bazaar it is not difficult to find sufficient food for a frugal supper, with eggs at ten paras, or one cent, each, small oranges at two for a cent, a large loaf of bread hot from the oven for four cents, and buffalo's milk for three cents a quart.

Commonplace and uninteresting as modern Thyatira appears at first sight, it is yet a city with a great and varied history. Its position on one of the great commercial routes of the world made it indispensable to the successive rulers of Asia, and yet it was impossible, owing to its exposed situation in the midst of a fertile valley, with no great citadel and no commanding hills near by to defend it from a stronger foe. So, more than almost any city of antiquity, it has been captured and recaptured, destroyed and built up and destroyed again, sacked and pillaged and burned and laid low, and then has risen again from its ashes.

About the year 190 B.C. it came under the power of Rome, and though in the days of the republic it suffered much from oppression and extortion, great commercial prosperity came to it with the inauguration of the empire. About the time that St. John wrote the Revelation it was at the height of its wealth and prosperity as a business city. It is known that there were more trade guilds in Thyatira than in any other city of Asia, for inscriptions tell us that there were guilds of linen-workers, wool-workers, dyers, bronzesmiths, potters, bakers, tanners, and slave-dealers. The selling of ready-made garments was an important business of Thyatira, but whether there were the accompaniments of Jewish sweatshops, long hours and scanty pay, as with us in the same business, we are not told. There were certainly Jews in Thyatira, however, for Seleucus was always hospitable to this race when he founded a new city. One of these was Lydia, though she was probably a proselyte to the Jewish religion from the heathen. At any rate she was a woman of Thyatira, and a seller of purple, and of all the people that ever lived in this ancient city, she alone is of special interest to the modern Bible student. We remember how Paul found her by the riverside in Philippi, when on the Sabbath day he went there to the place "where prayer was wont to be made." We know how attentive she was to the words of Paul, how she was baptized with her household and "besought" Paul and his companions, and even "constrained" them, to come into her house and abide. Since Thyatira was settled first by Macedonian soldiers it was natural that the city should keep up its trade connections with the parent country, and equally natural that Lydia should go there to sell her fine wares. The purple with which she dyed her linen was made from roots found in the vicinity of Thyatira, where it still grows in abundance. We should scarcely call the color purple, however, nor does the Greek word indicate the color which we now know as purple. One of our party obtained a quantity of the madder root in Thyatira, and after boiling it for several hours produced a dye of a rather unsatisfactory reddish color. Doubtless had she had Lydia's recipe for making the dye the results would have been more satisfactory. It is pleasant to believe, though we have no Scriptural authority for it, that the devout Lydia, after she was baptized, and had been instructed in Philippi by Paul and Silas and Luke

DIPLOMACY'S SUCCESS IN MEXICO

THE general trend of events in Mexico City during the last week has favored President Wilson's policy toward that country. Some apprehension was felt as to the reception which would be accorded to Special Representative John Lind, but this was set at rest by the announcement from Provisional President Huerta that Mr. Lind would be regarded as a private citizen and would be accorded full protection.

The first skirmish of the diplomatic campaign was won by Mr. Lind. Within a short time after his arrival in Mexico City he was received unofficially by the Mexican foreign minister, Federico Gamboa. Both Mr. Lind and the foreign minister were emphatic in their denials of any special importance attaching to this visit. Both claim it was one of mere friendliness, the subject of politics or the mission which is intrusted to Mr. Lind being carefully avoided.

In spite of the fact that Mr. Lind's reception was unofficial, great significance was attached to it by the State Department. In view of the statement made last week through Mexico's acting minister of foreign affairs that Mr. Lind would not be received unless he brought credentials and also official recognition of the Huerta government, it is believed that President Huerta's new move indicates a disposition to learn the character of the message which Mr. Lind bears. Rumors, though unconfirmed, were persistent in stating that Mr. Lind would be called to a private and, in all probability, secret conference with President Huerta, and that some basis for an understanding would be laid down in that way.

Mr. and Mrs. Lind have removed from the hotel where they spent the first few days after their arrival, and have taken up quarters in the United States Embassy. This they did at the request of President Wilson. As every move, even the slightest, is made the basis for speculation in this situation, despatches were immediately sent from Mexico City attributing the move to the fear of disorder which would follow some impending action of the President's representative. This was immediately and most emphatically denied in Washington.

Members of the administration in Washington have recently expressed the belief that the situation in Mexico was slowly, but surely, clarifying itself. Both England and Japan have strengthened the stand of the Wilson administration by allowing it to become known, in a semi-official way, that their recognition of Mexico's present government and president was entirely as an ad interim administration. The news despatch on this subject from England used, in connection with President Huerta, the phrase, "recognition as a provisional president pending an election." It is a theory in diplomatic circles in Washington that as England leads, so Japan follows. This theory is splendidly borne out by Japan's immediate statement of a similar position to that of Great Britain, and by her official hedging on the subject of the visit of General Felix Diaz.

From Mexico City there comes an apparently reliable despatch stating that the feeling in that city in favor of General Huerta as president is growing, and that it is altogether likely he will be one of the candidates in next October's elections. Whatever the personal opinion of Huerta's assuming the presidency held by those closest to Mexican affairs, all are agreed that he seems to be the only man who gives evidence of ability to pacify the warring elements of Mexico.

One of the well-informed news bureaus in W ington gives the prospects for the future o Mexican negotiations as follows:

"Emphatic disavowal of any selfish intere the part of the United States may be looked f the next step in President Wilson's Mexican program. Mr. John Lind is believed to hav pressed this in his unofficial conference with S Gamboa. The formal assurance that the U States has no territorial ambitions but seeks the restoration of peace and the encourageme stable government will be addressed not only t Huerta government; it will be communicated t Powers and given to the press. The foundatio subsequent peace suggestions will thus be laid the moral support of other governments and v sentiment invoked."

Since Mr. Lind is proceeding so cautiousl seems evident that his procedure will be gove largely by the later development of events, these lead apparently toward the tenure of a m ground as regards the peace suggestions. Fo accomplishment of such an end, both the U States Government and Mexico's provisional ministration must make concessions from t present attitudes. Especially is this true if Huerta government displays any wish to meet United States half way. Diplomacy will l every opportunity to General Huerta to ini with dignity the suggestions of an armistice es tial to the holding of a presidential electio October. He will not be permitted to forget promise to hold an election at that time.

A large consideration in Mr. Lind's missio the hope of arousing influential Mexicans, hith indifferent, to the necessity of saving their cou from continued civil war and extending brig age. If this latent power can be harnessed to peace project and supplemented by foreign enc agement, it is believed President Wilson's policy succeed. The basic principle of this policy is to be not only the restoration of peace, but an ject lesson to other turbulent republics in Cen America.

Reports regarding the situation in various tions of Mexico were meager. Northern Taba for the first time in several weeks, is reported t restless, with prevailing fear that an outbreak Constitutionalists is imminent. Conditions Frontera are calm.

THE SEVEN CHURCHES OF ASIA

and Timothy went back to Thyatira and established the church of "good works and love and service and faith" of which the Revelator speaks.

The fact that the one who sent the message to the church at Thyatira is described as "One with eyes like unto a flame of fire, and his feet like molten brass," or shining bronze, as it might be translated, reminds us that the bronzesmiths of Thyatira constituted a famous guild. One of the extant coins of the city represents a bronze-worker fashioning a helmet for Minerva. Thus in every way the message is fitted to the people to whom it is sent.

Modern Ak-Hissar, like ancient Thyatira, is still in the midst of a bountiful valley, and the fertility of the soil seems unimpaired. Cotton and wheat, maize and olives still constitute the riches of the city. We made an interesting call on a feudal lord, or bey, who lives on the low hill commanding the town, the ancient acropolis of Thyatira. The bey is an interesting, well-educated man, and lives in a fine stone house. In his large and well-furnished reception room he showed us a picture of the landing of King George and Lord Kitchener at Port Said, an event which had just taken place, as well as a statuette of the late King Edward, for he is an admirer of England and her institutions.

In his ample grounds is a large fountain made from an old sarcophagus, covered with an inscription in ancient Greek, which tells us it was erected in memory of a beloved wife. How little we know, and alas! how little we care, for the unknown widower of two thousand years ago and the dear wife whose death caused him so much grief!

Ak-Hissar is in the earthquake region, and two years before our visit was terribly shaken. Several minarets were thrown down, and now on the broken fragment the muezzin comes out five times a day to proclaim to the people that "God is great," that "prayer is better than sleep," that "prayer is better than food," and that they should "come to prayer, come to prayer."

Since the message to Thyatira, as to the other churches, was addressed to the "angel," who is supposed to be the minister of the church, it is interesting to know that there is an "angel" of what we believe to be the true church still in Thyatira. His name is George Prussaevs. He is the pastor of the Protestant Greek Church in this city, the only one of the seven, save Smyrna, that can, so far as we know, boast a single Protestant Christian. He is an earnest, faithful minister of the church, trained in one of the mission theological schools of the American Board, with a wife who is a true helpmeet, and three beautiful little children, Syntiche, Lydia and Chloe. May the little Lydia of Thyatira, as she grows up, rival in faith and good works the older Lydia, the purple-seller, who made her native city famous!

As to the message to the church in Thyatira, it is an obscure and difficult one to interpret, since we know so little of the prevalent customs and heresies of that time. Commentators differ as to the "woman Jezebel," some claiming that she was a heathen priestess, who stood for all manner of licentious rites and evil practices, and others that she was the leader of the Nicolaitans, a division of the church that claimed to be none the less Christian because it tolerated some heathen customs, like eating meat offered to idols, offering incense to the statue of the emperor, joining social clubs, which were numerous in those days, and which often fostered much debauchery and even licentiousness. Many of these clubs were connected with the trade guilds, and on this account Thyatira, which was famous for these guilds, offered special temptations to the Christians who belonged to these guilds, to condone, even if they did not approve, the un-Christian practices of many of the members.

The praise accorded in the first part of the message to the church of Thyatira seems to give color to this interpretation, for the Son of God himself says, "I know thy works, and love and service and faith, and that thy last works are more than the first." It is thought by many that the Nicolaitans, though their doctrines were wrong, and their complaisance toward the practices of their heathen neighbors was most dangerous, yet were still active in good works, and perhaps vied with their stricter and more Puritanical church members in acts of benevolence and subscriptions to all good causes, so that the "last works were more than the first."

Nevertheless the seeds of failure and destruction of the church lay in the laxness of the Nicolaitans. It is the old, ever-recurring struggle of expediency against duty. How far shall we go? how far c form to the world, indulge in its amusem join its clubs, and live its life? Doubtless, Nicolaitans had a thousand good reasons, or r sons that seemed to them good, for their doctri and their manner of life. They could do more g by remaining in these clubs and exerting a g influence within them. They did not wish to pear sour, and straitlaced, and Puritanical; t could perform just as many acts of charity benevolence as though they were the strictest P tans. But the Revelator does not accept their cuses or their reasoning. He knows that either church or the world must prevail, and that to c form to the heathen world is sure death to church. Therefore, he has "a few things" agai the church of Thyatira; it has not cast out woman Jezebel, but allows her and her followers remain in good and regular standing in the chur

In spite of Jezebel and the Nicolaitans, the wri is sure of the final triumph of the church and of right. Those who have not followed the teachi of Jezebel are not required to leave the world fo hermit's cave, to cut off all intercourse with heathen, for "no other burden" is put upon th than that which was decided by the apostles in f mer days to be absolutely necessary for the pres vation of the church. To those who thus k themselves pure a glorious reward is promis Their power shall exceed the power of Rome, t ruled over the nations. They too shall rule with rod of iron. Even this divided church in this co paratively obscure and unimportant city of Thy tira shall triumph, and its faithful members sh become ruling princes with the almighty power the Father. The contrast between weak Thyati and this promise of victory and mighty power all the more striking. But not only shall the fait ful have power, but brightness and glory; for t morning star shall be given to them. Obscure, c spised, reproached for their Puritanism and th separateness, they shall yet shine in the firmame the observed of all observers. By this beautif promise we are reminded of the glorious promise the prophet, "They that be wise shall shine as t brightness of the firmament, and they that turn righteousness as the stars forever and forever

"He that hath an ear, let him hear what t Spirit saith unto the churches."

MPEACHMENT OF GOVERNOR SULZER

Y a vote of 79 to 45 the State Assembly of New York, at 5 o'clock A.M., on August 13, after an all-night session at Albany, adopted a resolution ordering the impeachment of nor William Sulzer for "wilful and corrupt ct in office and for high crimes and misde- ors." It was the climax of a long and bitter al fight which began shortly after Mr. 's election as governor. The impeachment ition sums up charges against n these words:

reas, The Joint Leg- Investigating Com- has filed a report in sembly on the 11th f August, 1913, to- with testimony an- thereto, showing or g to show that Wil- Sulzer, governor of tate of New York, a false and fraudu- eport to the Secretary te under his oath, as ed by law, that the contributions in aid campaign as candi- or the office of gov- were $5,460 and no and hereas, He has otherwise corruptly and un- ully acted or omitted to act, herefore, be it resolved, That William Sulzer, rnor of the State of New York, be and hereby npeached for wilful and corrupt conduct in e and for high crimes and misdemeanors.

Meanwhile, he claims the right to ex- ise executive functions, holding that Assembly exceeded its constitutional vers in acting on impeachment at an raordinary session. New York thus two rival governors, Sulzer holding State seals, signing papers and nsacting official business in the execu- e chamber of the capitol building, and ting-Governor Glynn in a less pre- tious room on another floor.

Governor Sulzer has long been a well- own figure in Empire State politics. ile in Congress he had become newhat of a popular idol. Not only New York City but throughout the ate there were thousands who be- ved in him as the soul of honor, and one who could be trusted to keep a eat office untainted with partisan- p, or self-seeking, or corruption in y form. Great is their disappointment d deep and genuine their sorrow. ith the passage of the impeachment solution in the Assembly, their idol fell from its ty pedestal. On the afternoon of that same day which impeachment was voted by the Lower use, the Senate was notified of the Assembly's tion in accordance with the usage in such cases, d immediately thereafter Lieutenant-Governor artin H. Glynn automatically assumed the duties d responsibilities of the governor's office. Acting- vernor Glynn is a New Yorker from up State d an organization Democrat. He received strong mmany support at the last election. He was ucated at Fordham College, a Catholic institu- n, and is now in his forty-third year.

Within sixty days after impeachment the ex- governor will be placed on trial before a joint body composed of State Senators and the Court of Appeals. Mr. Sulzer has declared his purpose of fighting the impeachment proceedings by applying to the Supreme Court for an order of restraint, and he proclaims his intention of carrying the case to the United States Court of Appeals.

From first to last, the battle which has just resulted in impeachment has been in the nature of a great political duel between the ex-governor and the leaders of the Tammany organization. It is admitted even by Mr. Sulzer's friends that he is an intense egotist, and that this characteristic has often led him to follow what more wary politicians would have deemed an unwise course. No sooner was he elected than he openly invited a conflict with Tammany. He refused to consider the claims of that organization in the distribution of official patronage, and he antagonized its leaders personally. He avowed himself strongly in favor of giving publicity to campaign subscriptions, although he had no wish to disclose those in connection with his own election. He championed a public investigation of Wall Street methods, while at the same time he is said to have engaged in stock speculations which only came to light later. His methods of distributing official favors and promises began to be widely discussed to his disadvantage; but he apparently considered himself impregnable. And when at last the situation became acute, and his political opponents began to gather evidence, he scorned the suggestion of investigation.

Then came the appointment of the Joint Legislative Investigating Committee. Sulzer refused to recognize it. As the investigation progressed, it became a life-and-death battle, on the governor's part at least. Against the counsel of his advisers he had aroused antagonisms which he now seemed powerless to allay. Disclosures before the committee grew daily more and more important, and the defense was literally at a standstill. Among other things, the articles of impeachment allege that a number of checks, received as campaign contributions, and aggregating $32,860, were omitted by the governor in his sworn statement, and appropriated to his personal use. The charge is made that he withheld true testimony from the Investigating Committee by interference with witnesses; that he made illegal promises in return for votes on certain legislative measures; and that he corruptly used his influence and authority to affect prices on the Stock Exchange.

A pathetic incident in this sad story of humiliation was the action of the governor's wife. With rare magnanimity, she offered herself as a sacrifice in the hope of averting her husband's impeachment. She stood ready to take upon herself all the responsibility for the stock-dealing operations, and to declare that the governor knew nothing of them personally; that she accepted the checks given for campaign purposes, intending to save the money for a "rainy day," and meaning no harm. When her husband was elected governor, his finances were at a low ebb, and he had debts amounting to $40,000. She further declared that Mr. Horgan, the secretary of the Joint Investigating Committee, knew of her endorsing the governor's checks and depositing them, and that the secretary had even advised her in financial matters. To this remarkable confession she added the astonishing statement that her bank books and the letters had lately been stolen! When Mr. Hinman, the Republican leader in the Assembly, brought Mrs. Sulzer's statement to the attention of that body, during the progress of the terrific debate, it was presented as a last resort by which she hoped to avert the impending blow. But the hope was vain. The Assembly would not accept the devoted wife's act of self-sacrifice, and Mr. Hinman's motion to postpone action on impeachment for one more day was voted down at two o'clock in the morning, by 73 to 49. When Mrs. Sulzer learned of the failure of her plan to save her husband, she is said to have been sorely stricken and almost in a state of collapse.

WILLIAM SULZER, THE IMPEACHED GOVERNOR OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK

What may be produced for the defense at the coming trial it is difficult to conjecture. Tammany has succeeded in dragging down the governor of a great State, although in doing so it has won no laurels for itself. There is a general feeling of pity for Sulzer in his present humiliation, which is regarded as the wreck of a career lately full of promise. Yet, under the circumstances, impeachment was inevitable, and would doubtless have resulted, no matter what political faction controlled the situation. Tammany happened to be in that commanding position, and with the evidence at hand, did not hesitate to force its advantage. Sometimes strange instruments are chosen to meet the ends of justice; but while the instruments may in themselves be unworthy, the lamentable fact remains that they serve the purpose, though perhaps with added malignity over the opportunity afforded of gratifying political revenges.

The next step in the drama will be a fair and speedy trial before a tribunal far above partisanship. The Impeachment Court will probably assemble September 22.

LIVING IN CHRIST

*A SERMON BY DAVID JAMES BURRELL, D.D. LL.D.

TEXT: "For me to live is Christ." Phil. 1: 21

A LETTER from an unknown friend runs as follows: "Dear Sir: Will you kindly permit me to ask what in your opinion is the greatest, highest, deepest spiritual theme for Christians to consider at the present time? As for myself, I very reverently take Paul's words, 'For me to live is Christ.' I should be grateful to receive an answer from you."

I take occasion to answer my unknown friend from the pulpit in this way. In our text we have presented, as he says, "the greatest, highest, deepest spiritual theme." I want to unfold it; but the trouble is I cannot adequately grasp it. I feel as I did once when, standing at the Giant's Causeway on the extreme coast of Ireland, I saw stretching before me the immeasurable sea. I am lost, bewildered, overwhelmed in the contemplation of it. But it opens up some questions on which we may possibly get a little light.

First, what is Life? What is it "to live"?

Is it simply to exist, to breathe and eat and sleep, to arise in the morning and seek the shop or office where we pursue our common tasks, then home again to eat and sleep and rise to the familiar treadmill; until one day the pulse flutters ominously and the doctor is called in, then crêpe on the door, a hearse rumbling through the streets and a new stone in the graveyard bearing the inscription "Rest in peace"? Is that all? This is the lowest, the merely physical conception of life.

Man's Highest Life

The intellectual conception of life is higher. It is a splendid thing to cultivate the mind, because knowledge is power. But is even that of itself worth while? Up in Cambridge there is a boy of eleven who they say has mastered the higher mathematics. Not long ago he lectured to the Harvard faculty on "the fourth dimension"; a something or other of which most of us have no information. The newspapers speak of him as a "megalocephalous phenomenon"; but it would be more to the purpose to be informed that he is a good boy. The fact is, intellectual culture has no influence upon the moral nature. The wisest man of his time in France was Voltaire, whose friends were fond of calling him "The Encyclopedia." He was an encyclopedia, indeed, bound in pigskin; for in many respects he was the most vicious of men. The wisest man of his time in Holland was Grotius, who had mastered so many branches of knowledge that he was called "the learned Grotius"; yet, referring to one of his acquaintances, a mere cobbler, he said, "I would give all my knowledge to learn John Urick's secret of life."

We turn, therefore, to the spiritual conception of life, which is the true one. Its definition is found in the words of Jesus, "This is life eternal, to know God."

We were created in the likeness of God; and our life is bound to end in failure unless it brings us into harmony with him. To use the words of Augustine, "We came forth from God; and we shall ever be homesick until we return to him." This, then, is life; to be in perfect accord with God's plans and purposes concerning us. Its best expression is in the word "godliness," that is, God-likeness. We are alienated from God by sin; and the problem of all problems is, how to regain our lost estate and live the life which shall be pleasing to him.

The second question is, "When does this life begin?"

It begins at the instant when a man comes into vital touch with God; that is, when he cuts loose from sin. For "without holiness no man shall see God."

It is said of the youth in the parable who went away to the far country and wasted his substance in riotous living, that he "came to himself" at the moment when he said, "I will arise and go unto my father!" No man who is still wasting his substance in that far country has really begun to live. For sin is in and of itself the essence of spiritual death. The sinner is said to be "dead in trespasses and sins."

In the poem of "The Ancient Mariner" a picture is presented of a ship manned by dead men; a dead man at the wheel, dead men on the deck and in the shrouds, dead men everywhere. In like manner there are multitudes moving about our streets in sordid pursuits who have the semblance of life but are spiritually dead. The possibility of life, however, is before them all. Its sole condition is that they shall return to God.

And this return is through Christ. For we know God only as he has manifested himself in Christ as his only-begotten Son. In him is life; as he said, "I am come that ye might have life, and that ye might have it more abundantly." And furthermore, "I am the way: no man cometh unto the Father but by me." To accept Christ, therefore, is to come into vital touch with God. And faith is the hand stretched forth to touch him.

The Revolution of Faith

On one occasion Christ was asked, "How shall we work the works of God?" that is, work which shall commend us to him. His answer was, "This is the work of God, that ye believe in him whom God hath sent." Faith in Christ, then, is the one "good work" which brings a man into acceptance with God.

But to receive Christ by faith means to make an absolute and unconditional surrender to him. It was by such a surrender that Paul entered into life. He says that, previous to his conversion, his morality had been above reproach: "I have lived in all good conscience unto this day." But the time came when, on his way to Damascus, clothed with authority as an inquisitor for the extirpation of the Christian Church, he saw at high noon a light above the brightness of the sun and heard the voice of Jesus calling him. At that instant his life and character were revolutionized. All his prejudices were dissipated, so that, seeing Christ as very God of very God, he cried, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" He then began to live. He had returned to God by way of Christ. He had made the great surrender. "What things were gain to me," he says, "those I counted loss for Christ. Yea, doubtless, and I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord: for whom I have suffered the loss of all things, and do count them but dung, that I may win Christ, and be found in him, not having mine own righteousness, which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousness which is of God by faith: that I may know him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death: if by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead." By which resurrection he clearly means the newness of life which is here and now.

To Know Christ

The third question is, What follows? This is answered in the words, "For me to live is Christ."

There is a world of meaning in that word "is." To undertake to analyze it would be like pulling apart a flower; one hesitates lest in the process its beauty be lost. But there are helpful suggestions in it.

To begin with, it presupposes a knowing about Christ. But how is one to learn about him? He himself tells us: "Search the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they are they which testify of me." In seeking information about Christ it is not safe to trust to hearsay, still less to form our impressions from the imperfect reflections of his life and character which are seen in those who profess to follow him. The best of Christians is only a stumbling sinner saved by grace. But the Bible speaks clearly respecting Christ; and it can be trusted, for it "was written by holy men as they were moved by the Spirit of God." If one cares to know about the higher life, therefore, let him take down his dust-covered Bible and read it. And if, putting away the hoodwink of prejudice, he will read as one searching for hid treasure, he will surely find Christ, "chiefest among ten thousand and altogether lovely," walking through its pages from beginning to end.

But before one can say "To me to live is Christ," he must know him. To know him is more than to know about him. You may know all about Kaiser Wilhelm without ever having been introduced to him. To know Christ one must at least be on speaking terms with him. He solicits our friendship, as he says, "Behold, I stand at the door and knock. If any man will open unto me, I will come in and sup with him and he with me." To let him in, and to cultivate his acquaintance while we sup together, this is to know him. Is our intimacy such that in meeting him in a strange place, we should recognize him? Do we know him so that if to-night we were called to go through the Valley of the Shadow his rod and staff would comfort us? Do we know him so that at heaven's threshold his voice calling "Enter into the joy of thy Lord" would not seem like the voice of a stranger? Do we know him so that we can confidently say, "I know him in whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day"?

It means moreover that we believe Christ. One cannot be a Christian without receiving him as the authoritative teacher and taking him at his word. All controversies are to be settled by referring them to him. For example, the question of his divinity must be determined by what he teaches about it; and the question as to the inspiration and entire trustworthiness of the Scriptures must be answered in the same way. No matter what preachers or theological professors say, his word is for his followers the Court of Final Appeal. All his promises are to be taken at their face value; such as "Ask and it shall be given unto you," and "Thy sins be forgiven thee."

Life's Truest Gain

It means, still further, that we are to believe in him. And to believe in him is immeasurably more than merely to believe him. I dare say everybody regards the President as a truthful man; but to believe in him means that one approves his policies and is ready to lend a helping hand to carry them out. So to believe in Christ is to assent to the proposition that he did what he came into the world to do, that is: "he bore our sins in his own body on the tree": and going thus far we are bound in common logic and consistency to go further and say, "My Lord, my Life, my Sacrifice, my Saviour and my all!"

One thing more is contained in those words "For me to live is Christ," namely, the handclasp. This means to enter into covenant with him.

He extends his hand, a pierced hand, to every man; a pierced hand to every hand; and the issues of life and death are in taking or refusing it. To clasp that hand is to seal the compact of life with him. It means that I take him to be my Saviour from sin, my Exemplar of character, my Lord and Master. At this point there can be no reservation. The clasping of hands means the blending of lives; as Wesley said,

> This one thing I find,
> We two are so joined,
> He can't go to heaven
> And leave me behind.

Thenceforth Christ is, as it were, one's alter ego. There is an engrafting such as is set forth in the parable of the Vine and its Branches. We catch his spirit, so that "the mind that was in Christ Jesus is also in us." It was thus that Luther was moved to say, "If you knock at my breast and ask 'Who lives here, Luther?' my answer is, 'No! Luther once lived here; but Christ came, and Luther moved out to make room for him. Now, I no longer live; but Christ liveth in me.'" And this is life, the life that is "hid with Christ in God."

Have I clarified the text? Paul himself could not understand it. The mysteries here are deep beyond all sounding. Paul's plummet could not fathom them: "I count not myself to have apprehended," he said, "but this one thing I do; I reach forth!" He longed for, and expected to have, an ever broader, deeper apprehension of this mystical union of the Christian with Christ. As life passed

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR

BY REV. J. H. JOWETT, D.D.

SUNDAY, August 31. Isaiah 43: 1-7. "When thou passest through the waters they shall not overflow thee." When Mrs. Booth, the mother of the Salvation Army, was dying, she quietly said, "The waters are rising but I am not sinking!" But, then, she had been saying that all through her life. Other floods besides the waters of death had gathered about her soul. Often had the floods been out and the roads were deep in affliction. But she had never sunk! The good Lord made her buoyant, and she rode upon the storm!

This, then, is the promise of the Lord, not that the waters of trouble shall never gather about the believer, but that he shall never be overwhelmed. He shall "keep his head above them." Yes, to him shall be given the grace of "aboveness." He shall never be under, always above! It is the precious gift of spiritual buoyancy, sanctified good spirits, the power of the Christian hope. When we are in Christ Jesus circumstances shall never be our master. One is our Master, and "we are more than conquerors in him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood."

MONDAY, September 1. Exodus 20: 1-11. "Thou shalt have no other gods before me." If we kept that commandment, all the other commandments would be obeyed. If we secure this queen bee, we are given the swarm. To put nothing "before" God! What is left in the circle of obedience? God first, always, and everywhere. Nothing allowed to usurp his throne for an hour! I was once allowed to sit on an earthly throne for a few seconds; but even that is not to be allowed with the throne of God. Nothing is to share his sovereignty, even for a moment. His dominion is to be unconditional and unbroken. "Thou shalt have no other gods beside me."

But we have many gods we set upon his throne. We put money there, and fame, and pleasure, and ease. Yes, we sometimes usurp God's throne, and we ourselves dare to sit there for days, and weeks, and years, at a time. Self is the idol, and we enthrone it, and we fall down and worship it. But no peace comes from such sovereignty, and no deep and vital joy. For the real King is not dead, and he is out and about, and our poor, little monarchy is as the reign of the midge on a summer's night. Our real kingship is in the acknowledgment of the King of kings. The greater God is to us, the greater do we become. Nay, when we worship him, and him only, he will ask us to sit with him on his throne.

TUESDAY, September 2. Psalm 119: 97-104. "How sweet are thy words unto my taste!" Some people like one thing, and some another. Some people appreciate the bitter olive; others feel it to be nauseous. Some delight in the sweetest grapes; others feel the sweetness to be sickly. It is all a matter of palate. Some people love the Word of the Lord; to others the reading of it is a dreary task. To some the Bible is like a vineyard; to others it is like a dry and tasteless meal. One takes the word of the Master, and it is "as honey to the mouth"; to another the same word is as a bitter drug. It is all a matter of palate.

But what is a man to do who has got a perverted palate, and who calls sweet things bitter and bitter things sweet? He must get a new mouth! And where is he to get it? Not by any ministry of his own creation; his own endeavors will be impotent. A healthy moral palate depends upon the purity of the heart. Our spiritual discernments are all determined by the state of the soul. If the heart be pure, the mouth will be clean, and we shall love God's law. If the soul-appetite be healthy, God's words will be sweet unto our taste. And so does the good Lord give us new palates by giving us new hearts. "Create within us clean hearts, O God, and renew right spirits within us."

WEDNESDAY, September 3. James 1: 21-24. When we "hear the Word," but do not do it, there has been a defect in our hearing. We may listen to the Word for mere entertainment. Or we may attach a virtue to the mere act of listening to the Word. We may assume that some magical efficacy belongs to the mere reading of the Word. And all this is perverse and delusive. No listening is healthy which is not mentally referred to obedience. We are to listen with a view to obedience, with our eyes upon the very road where the obedient feet will travel. That is to say, we are to listen with purpose, as though we were ambassadors receiving instructions from the King concerning some momentous mission. Yes, we must listen with an eye on the road.

"Doing" makes a new thing of "hearing." The statute obeyed becomes a song. The commandment is found to be a beatitude. The decree discloses riches of grace. The "hidden things of God are not discovered until we are treading the path of obedience." "And it came to pass that as he went he received his sight." In the way of obedience the blind man found a new world. God has wonderful treasures for the dutiful. The faithful discover the "hidden manna" which the Lord of the road has concealed for loyal pilgrims who delight to do his will.

THURSDAY, September 4. I John 4: 11-21. "Herein is our love made perfect." How? By dwelling in God and God in us. Love is not a manufacture; it is a fruit. It is not born of certain works; it springs out of certain relations. It does not come from doing something; it comes from living with Somebody. "Abide in Me." That is how love is born, for "love is of God, and God is love."

How many people are striving who are not abiding. They live in a manufactory, they do not live in a home. They are trying to make something instead of to know Somebody. "This is life, to know Thee." When I am related to the Lord Jesus, when I dwell with him, love is as surely born as beauty and fragrance are born when my garden and the springtime dwell together. If we would only wisely cultivate the fellowship of Jesus, everything else would follow in its train—all that gracious succession of beautiful things which are called "the fruits of the Spirit."

And "herein is our love made perfect." It is always growing richer because it is always drawing riches from the inexhaustible love of God. How could it be otherwise? Endless resource must mean endless growth. "Our life is hid with Christ in God," and therefore our love, fed and nourished by the infinite love which revealed itself on Calvary, will "grow in all wisdom and discernment," becoming more and more alive with the light and fire of the eternal God.

FRIDAY, September 5. Psalm 19: 7-14. "The law of the Lord is perfect." Let me listen to the exquisite chimes of this wonderful psalm as they ring out the blessedness of the man whose delight is in the law of the Lord. What shall he find in the way of obedience?

He shall find restoration. "Restoring the soul." He shall find new stores of food along the way. Every emergency, every new need shall discover new supplies. When one store is spent, another shall take its place. "Thou re-storest my soul." In the ways of righteousness the Lord has appointed ample store for the provision of all his faithful pilgrims.

He shall find joy. "Rejoicing the heart." In the way of obedience there shall be springs of delight as well as stores of provision. "With joy shall ye draw waters out of the wells of salvation." Fountains of delicious satisfaction rise in the realm of duty, the satisfaction of being right with God and in union with the eternal will. There is no day without its spring, and "the joy of the Lord is our strength."

He shall find vision. "Enlightening the eyes." The eyes of the obedient are anointed with the eye-salve of grace, and wondrous panoramas break upon the sight. Visions of grace! Visions of love! Visions of new privilege! Visions of new service! Visions of glory! "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God."

SATURDAY, September 6. Deuteronomy 11: 18-25. If we wish to retain "the word of the Lord," everything depends upon where we keep it. If we just keep it in the mind, a leaky memory may waste the treasure. A Chinese convert declared that he found the best way to remember the Word was to do it! The engraved Word became character, written upon the fleshy tables of the heart. He incarnated the Word and it became a vital part of his own personality. He lived it and it lived in him. The Word became flesh. This is the only really vital "way of remembrance," to convert the Word into the primary stuff of the life.

There is a secondary way by which we may help our apprehension of God's Word. "Ye shall teach them." Our hold upon a truth is increased while we impart it to others. The Gospel becomes more vivid as we proclaim it to our fellow men. We see it while we explain it. It grips us the more firmly as we use it to grip our children. This is a great law in life. In these matters it is literally true that memory best retains what she gives away. A truth that is never shared is never really possessed. The Word that we teach becomes rooted in our own mind.

MESSAGES FROM PRESENT-DAY POETS

HE DID HIS BEST

SOME day, some day when you and I
Have laid us down to quiet sleep,
Our cold lips mute, our dim eyes closed,
No more to sorrow nor to weep,
Shall some one say in looking down
Upon us in our dreamless rest,
"He lived and loved for Christ alone;
He did his best, he did his best"?

Shall some one say, "He took my hand,
And helped me to a better life;
He made my hard heart understand
How Christ could take all hate and strife
Away from me, and in its place
Leave peace and love so calm and blest;
Heaven's joy be his, for sure I know,
He did his best, he did his best"?

Some day, when all this life is past,
Shall we lift up our eyes and see
The golden gates, the pearly streets,
And Christ who died for you and me?
And will he lead us by the hand,
Into a world of perfect rest,
Because we lived and loved for him,
And did our best, our very best?

Howe, Ind. SILAS B. MCMANUS.

IF WE ONLY UNDERSTOOD

IF WE knew the cares and trials,
Knew the efforts all in vain,
And the bitter disappointment,
Understood the loss and gain—
Would the grim eternal roughness
Seem—I wonder—just the same?
Should we help where now we hinder?
Should we pity where we blame?

Ah! we judge each other harshly,
Knowing not life's hidden force—
Knowing not the fount of action
Is less turbid at its source;
Seeing not amid the evil
All the golden grains of good;
And we'd love each other better
If we only understood.

Could we judge all deeds by motives
That surround each other's lives,
See the naked heart and spirit,
Know what spur the action gives,
Often we would find it better,
Just to judge all actions good;
We should love each other better
If we only understood.

"NO FARTHER SIDE"

(Written by a reader of this journal now in her ninetieth year)

I LINGER on the shores of time;
Before me spreads an ocean wide.
I gaze across its face sublime,
Seeking in vain its farther side.

Alas! there is no farther side,
Eternity! Eternity!
But on its islands fair abide Loved ones of earth awaiting me,

What can I do? What can I send,
To finish up my heavenly home
So that my ever-loving Friend
May bring the welcome message, "Come"?

A WEEK IN THE WORLD'S NEWS

Still Fighting in China

THE news from China is largely made up of rumors and surmises at the present time. Dr. Sun Yat Sen and General Huang Hsing, with several other revolutionary leaders, are in Japan, yet there is still desultory fighting going on. One of the most recent reports says that 25,000 rebels from the province of Hunan have crossed the border into the province of Hupe and defeated a small force of loyalists. Their intention was believed to be to capture Hankow and afterward to move against Peking. Northern troops were despatched from Hankow with artillery to intercept the rebels and drive them south.

THE CHINESE REVOLUTIONARY GENERAL HUANG HSING

On August 13 the Southerners in Nanking for the third time proclaimed their independence of the Peking government, and rebel flags were again flying outside the governor's official residence. The new secession was preceded by sharp fighting for two nights between the First and Eighth divisions of the troops, the Eighth having declared for the government. There was a vast expenditure of ammunition, but little loss of life. The fighting ended when the Eighth division consented to throw in its lot with the rebels.

From Shanghai comes the information that the Wusung forts, which for some time had been in the hands of the rebels, surrendered to-day to the government troops.

The negotiations for the surrender were made through Dr. Cox of the Red Cross. The commander of the forts asked for guarantees for the safety of the rebel officers and a payment of money to enable the troops to return to their homes.

The London Times's Peking correspondent describes the Chinese revolutionary situation as most unsatisfactory. He says that the unspeakable slowness and clumsiness of the Northern troops have put a premium on sporadic outbreaks in defiance of the central government, and that nobody is able to tell what is going on in the province of Szechuen behind the broken communications. "The 25,000 Hunanese rebels," the correspondent adds, "are mostly a mob of untrained and unequipped recruits, short of ammunition and negligible as an army, but their moral effect on the loyal Wuchang army may be disquieting. The government has ordered the withdrawal of a third division of troops from Mongolia for operation against the Hunan rebels. The neglect of the government to take advantage of its early successes has encouraged revolt at new points and created a chaotic situation."

One hundred assassins are reported by Japanese newspapers to have been sent to Japan to kill Dr. Sun Yat Sen, Huang Hsing, and other Chinese revolutionary fugitives by Provisional President Yuan Shi Kai. The Japanese Government, in consequence of these reports, has arranged to give police protection to the leaders of the Chinese revolution who have sought asylum in Japan. It declares, however, that it will not permit Japan to be used as headquarters for Chinese plotters.

Castro's Revolution Fizzles Out

THE United States consul at Caracas, Venezuela, has advised the authorities at Washington, D. C., that the Castro uprising has met with failure. One brief cablegram states that the revolutionists landed a force of 1,400 men at La Vela in the State of Falcon, whence they despatched troops to the interior, but the report from the consul confirms earlier reports that General Torres and his officers, who headed the revolution in the eastern part of the country, have been captured.

Conditions along the west coast of Venezuela, the principal theater of the Castro revolutionary activities, are to be investigated by Commander Long of the cruiser Des Moines. After landing, Secretary Harry F. Tennant, newly appointed to the legation at Caracas, proceeded westward along the coast on a scouting cruise.

Mad Mullah on the Warpath

A CABLEGRAM from Aden, Arabia, announces that on August 10 a small remnant of a detachment of British native camel corps troops was rescued from the hands of the followers of the Mad Mullah in the interior of British Somaliland. The camel corps detachment was engaged in regular military police duty when attacked by the fanatical tribesmen. The British commissioner and commander in chief, Horace A. Byatt, on hearing the report sent a flying column to the aid of the camel corps. The reinforcements found all that was left of the police corps entrenched eighteen miles to the southwest of the town of Burao, in the middle of the Protectorate. The camelmen had been ambushed by over two thousand dervishes, who had killed one white British officer and wounded another, and killed or wounded fifty or sixty of the native troops. Heavy losses had been inflicted on the dervishes. The commissioner has advised the Colonial Office in London that many thousands of tribesmen are on the warpath and that Burao is likely to be attacked

Japan in Friendly Attitude

SOME weeks ago General Felix Diaz of Mexico was appointed by Provisional President Huerta to undertake a special mission on behalf of Mexico to Japan. General Diaz had journeyed up the Pacific coast as far as Vancouver, B. C., when word reached him from Tokyo that the Japanese Government would appreciate the postponement of his visit until the return of the emperor from Nikko, where he is now staying for rest after the rather trying days that followed his convalescence from his recent illness. General Diaz is reported to have said that he would continue his journey as he had originally planned and would expect to be received in Tokyo as an accredited representative of his native country despite the International complications which might arise.

The Japanese press, in commenting on the action of the Tokyo ministry, frankly expresses the opinion that it was feared the visit might prove embarrassing and was likely to be the cause of anti-American demonstrations on the part of a certain section of the populace. Not only does the Japanese Government desire to avoid such acts, but it is anxious to guard against any step which might be interpreted as a criticism of the policy of the United States as regards Mexico.

Italian General Strike Ended

FOR several days during the early part of August several of the most important cities of Italy were industrially paralyzed and generally disordered by strikes and attendant riots. Milan, Rome, Pisa and Genoa were most affected, the reports from the provinces indicating that the majority of the workers entirely disregarded the threats and promises of the strike agitators. The trouble started among the mill-workers of Milan, and spread to other cities, enlisting laborers in many lines of work. In Rome, though the strike was not general, it brought business to a standstill for several days. In Pisa almost all the workmen were out and there were frequent clashes between them and the police. In Genoa savage scenes were enacted when the strikers attacked the headquarters of the non-strikers and attempted to raid the government dockyard.

A despatch from Milan, dated August 13, says in part: "The 'general strike' in Italy, which has now come to an end, resulted in the death of three persons, the wounding of 165, and the arrest of 2,478, while the financial losses to workmen and employers amount to several million dollars. All the workmen presented themselves at the factories here this morning, but the transport workers still remain out. At some of the factories the employers told the men they could not resume work till Monday, as the furnaces had to be relighted. Negotiations are proceeding with the purpose of finding an acceptable middle course between the claims of the transport workers and the terms offered by their employers."

August Bebel Dead

AUGUST BEBEL, foremost of German Socialists, died at Zürich on August 13, in the seventy-third year of his age. His death attracted widespread attention, and the daily press of both continents united in voicing their high esteem of the intrepid leader of a movement that has made its most rapid strides in the Fatherland. Herr Bebel was the only Socialist in the Reichstag in 1870; at the time of his death, his was the largest party in Germany, polling nearly 4,300,000 votes, more than a quarter of the entire vote of the empire. It had the second largest representation in the Reichstag, holding 110 seats. The amazing growth is attributed, in large measure, to the brilliance, earnestness and integrity of Bebel. Although consistently opposed to war, being the only member who refused to vote fiscal credits for the war with France in 187[illegible], he warned foreign Powers that German Socialists would not remain neutral in the event of an attack against the Fatherland. He was severely criticized by members of his own party for voting recently in favor of the bills financing the increase of the German armaments.

"Jones of Binghamton"

GENERAL EDWARD F. JONES of Binghamton, who had been a national character since the outbreak of the Civil War, died at his home in Binghamton on August 14, at the age of eighty-five. His regiment, the Sixth Massachusetts, was the first to pass through Baltimore, bound for Washington, when hostilities began. When he arrived at Washington, it is said that President Lincoln rushed toward him, and, shaking his hand, exclaimed: "Thank God you are here! If you had not arrived to-night, we should have been in the hands of the enemy before morning." In 1865 General Jones became a member of the Massachusetts House of Representatives. In 1866 he established his great scales factory in Binghamton, N. Y., and in 1885 was elected lieutenant governor of the Empire State. His advertising watchword, "Jones, he pays the freight," became a familiar proverb, and he is also said to have been the originator of the popular and vigorous phrase, "Do it now." A few years ago the general became blind, and although he had been engaged in large and strenuous enterprises for so many years, he surprised his friends by acquiring great skill in knitting, making many intricate designs by his acute sense of touch. General Jones belonged to many distinguished societies, and was the author of a number of books. Although blind, he retained his strong mental faculties and his keen sense of humor until the end.

A Diary of Fifty-nine Years

HENRY BALLINGER, an oldtime resident of Cœur d'Alene, Idaho, a man close to eighty-one years of age, opens a challenge to the world for having kept a diary continuously for the longest period of time. His record reaches a short while over fifty-nine years. He began keeping the diary on September 18, 1854. Since that time every day has added its page in the diary, and incidents which are now in history are mentioned in the pages. Mr. Ballinger is also proud of his record of never having smoked or chewed tobacco or drank a glass of any intoxicant. He has never been sick in bed a single day in his life. He was converted at the age of eleven years, and has always followed the early teachings of his parents. Mr. Ballinger is in the very best of health, is about the city every day, and is well known to every one as "Uncle Bal."

Farm Credits Win in Congress

ONE of the most important steps in the congressional proceedings on the enactment of the so-called Glass money bill was taken when it was decided, after long argument, that credits based upon rural commodities shall be acceptable by Federal reserve banks. The section of the law in question, with the proposed change, reads as follows:

> Upon the indorsement of any member bank, any Federal reserve bank may discount notes and bills of exchange arising out of commercial transactions; that is, notes and bills of exchange issued or drawn for agricultural, industrial, or commercial purposes, or the proceeds of which have been used for such purposes, the Federal Reserve Board to have the right to determine or define the character of the paper thus eligible for discount within the meaning of this act: but such definition shall not include notes or bills issued or drawn for the purpose of carrying or trading in stocks and bonds. Notes and bills admitted to discount under the terms of this paragraph must have a maturity of not less than sixty days.

The leaders of the forces urging this form of the bill insisted that the directors of any Federal reserve bank should be allowed to admit to discount notes and bills of exchange satisfactorily endorsed, of short maturity, and secured by warehouse certificates, issued by individuals or corporations owning cotton or other staple commodities, such as corn and wheat, suitably standardized and stored. They said that if the bill were changed so as to permit this they would be satisfied if the Federal Reserve Board were clothed with the right to fix the conditions under which such certificates shall be accepted as collateral, to prescribe the standard form for their issue, and to issue regularly an official list of those eligible for the purpose of this section of the new law.

NORTHFIELD'S "OPEN DOOR"

THE value of a life can be determined only after the lapse of years. It is for this reason that great men not fully appreciated in their generation, but only after work is seen at a distance, in relation to other lives h they have influenced, and es which they have set in mo-. This is true of Dwight L. dy. Great as was his work n evangelist, and wide as was nfluence in the lives of tens of isands of men throughout the lish-speaking world, his spirit ably was never more potent it is to-day, nor have his racter and genius appeared large as now, after the lapse early fourteen years since his th. Henry Drummond twenty rs ago spoke of him as the atest "human" he had ever wn. There are many living lay who knew Mr. Moody, who ld probably concur in Henry mmond's opinion, but it is as a itual force, and not simply as human," that his influence is g felt at the present time. Years ago, Mr. dy wrote to a friend who had helped him his work, that when the new century opened, work would begin to tell, and that he had "streams in motion" that would continue long er he was gone. Time has proved the truth his prophecy, and one has but to visit the North- d schools to feel the spirit of the man who still s in the work which he founded. In laying the foundation at Northfield Mr. Moody built wisely, and for the future. Northfield Seminary and Mount Hermon Boys' School were established to meet a need, and not to perpetuate a name. It is doubtful whether the founder himself realized how great a need they were to meet, or how rapid would be the growth of this work. He lived, however, to realize something of its future, and recognized it to be, as he said, "the best piece of work I have ever done."

TWO OF THE MAIN BUILDINGS AT NORTHFIELD

The wisdom and forethought with which he built are now being demonstrated in the fact that these two schools, now under one board of trustees and management, have continued to grow in numbers and expand in their equipment, while remaining loyal to the original purpose of the founder and his associates. The Northfield Schools have continued to carry out Mr. Moody's educational theories in helping poor young men and women in their struggle to retrieve the educational privileges of which they have been deprived in early life; in their emphasis of the place of the English Bible in the curriculum in their educational system, and in emphasizing the importance of manual labor and the responsibility in meeting daily required duties, or the execution of some assigned task. It has not been a slight undertaking to keep the doors of opportunity for poor students open at Northfield, in the face of the increased cost of living; but so loyal have former associates and present trustees remained to this principle, that although the cost for maintenance has doubled with the growth of the school, the student charges have been kept down to one-half the actual cost, and every student enrolled represents a deficit of one hundred dollars a year, which must be met by appeal to the Christian public. In Mr. Moody's time, this was a sufficiently heavy

BY ANNA CHAPIN RAY

A Story Complete in This Issue

OF COURSE he did not pronounce it with any reference to the spelling. What Frenchman ever does? Not that that fact mattered. What did matter about Gignac was s personality and the obvious delight he took in s work. No avowed artist in oil or clay, in demiavers and subdominants or just plain ink, ever ent into the details of his profession with more thusiasm than Gignac gave to his elevator.

Gignac had the new-wing car, the largest in the ilding and the one serving the greatest number floors, and yet the quietest. The new wing was ght and airy; it had the sun all day. On that acunt it was largely filled with regular boarders ho lived inside their rooms, not with transients, ways going in and out. For that reason, a reaon about evenly divided between interest in humany and in silver, the wing elevator was not a favote with the different boys. Gignac liked it, ough. The personal greetings from his people unted almost as much to him as silver; and the mparative leisure of the service gave him time to erfect his peculiar methods.

That they were peculiar, no one doubted. Other oys on that same lift had been tardy and inattenve. Gignac was always there. Other boys had rown familiar and a little cheeky with their older lients. Gignac always kept up a certain reserve; e took no liberties, and he allowed none, as cerain of the transients found out to their cost. Other oys had their hours of sending the lift upward as f they meant to cleave the heavens; of bringing it own as if they sought to perform an appendicitis peration on the earth. Gignac was quick; but he ever bumped one about, or gave one the impression hat his heart was seeking exit through his ears. Most remarkable of all, Gignac was strictly impartial in his service. He was as prompt and deferential to the crabbed spinster in the back-court room n the eighth as he was to pretty Mrs. Vansittart in he tower room three floors below.

Not that Gignac liked them all alike, however. He was too human for that, too fine in his perceptions. Indeed, that very fineness had led Mrs. Vansittart, who had been his bright particular star from the hour of her appearing—had led Mrs. Vansittart to declare that there was something almost feminine in little Gignac; at least there would have been had he not been such a manly little soul.

When asked, the head bellman confessed his ignorance concerning Gignac's inner life.

"There are so many of them, Mrs. Vansittart," he said apologetically. She smiled at him as if she realized there was a man inside the corporation uniform.

"I know," she said. "Still, you can't show me another Gignac."

The head bellman lowered his voice a little and turned his back to the bench where half a dozen bellboys sat straining their ears in hope of overhearing personal mention by their chief.

"I know that as well as you do, Mrs. Vansittart. I've not another boy who compares with him."

"Then can't you—" Her pause was eloquent. Then she added hastily, "Not that I could bear to lose him, though."

The head bellman smiled.

"It's plain—excuse me, Mrs. Vansittart! It's plain you haven't ever been a boy. We're like wolves, all of us, ready to fall in a bunch on the one of us who has the largest bone. I have my eye on Gignac; but I must go slow. If I were to rush him the least bit, every single boy in the house would have his teeth in him before the week was out."

The little woman lifted her chin.

"Surely, Browne, you could protect him."

And Browne answered with the accent which had made Mrs. Vansittart willing to discuss the matter with him in the first place:

"I could, of course, Mrs. Vansittart; but in a fellow like Gignac the scars would always show."

Against her own will, she assented.

"Yes," she said, "I know they would." Then, "What do you really know about him, Browne?" she asked.

"Precious little, I'm sorry to say. You see, they come and go so often; and, from the start, he's been over in the wing. The boys here on the bench I get to know a little better; the elevator boys I have to take a good deal on trust. Gignac's brother used to be here. He was on that same lift two years ago, one of the nicest little beggars you ever saw, but not so smart as this one."

"Is he here now?"

Browne shook his head.

"Killed by a car, crossing the tracks, one slippery, foggy night. All the regular boarders were in despair over losing him; he was a great favorite with everybody, transients and all. Two weeks later this fellow appeared and asked for his brother's job. I hadn't been able to get the right man for the place; the bellboys were taking it by turns, grumbling and getting balky. I looked the boy over and thought he wasn't strong enough to be worth teaching; thought he wouldn't hold out for a week. Then he told me he knew how to run a lift, and, moreover, he proved it to my satisfaction. I hired him on the spot, there and then; his name and his likeness to his brother wouldn't have made it safe for me to let him go."

"You mean—?"

Browne laughed.

"Regular boarders have their little ways, Mrs. Vansittart. Also they have their little prejudices."

She nodded.

"I see. And he has made good?"

"You appeared to think so."

"How long has he been here?"

"Almost two years."

"And this is all you know about him?"

"All but his address."

"Poor little youth!" Mrs. Vansittart was thinking aloud. "Two years of good service and a total nonentity at the end of it. No, Browne; that isn't aimed at you; but corporations are heartless things."

Browne opposed her, though, respectfully but very firmly.

"I used to think so myself, Mrs. Vansittart; but I know better now. They can't spend too much time in being merciful; it's all they can do to keep even with simple justice. You see, they are between two fires."

As she turned and went away, the little woman smiled. Browne, speaking, had brought his finger to his cap, in token that he intended no disrespect. Moreover, the eighteen months that Mrs. Vansittart had lived in her tower had borne to her ears many a tale of the way the head bellman, in the intervals of dispensing swift, sure justice, yet found the time to probe into the lives—and troubles—of his tumultuous staff of boys.

Gignac's face lighted, and his quiet voice hailed Mrs. Vansittart, as she turned the corner by the elevator.

"I heard you coming," he said simply, but the pleasure was evident, despite the shortness of the phrase.

"Heard me?" Mrs. Vansittart looked a little startled. It had not seemed to her she roystered in the long, still halls.

"Your step." Gignac slid the door together as carefully as if he feared to disturb a nervous invalid. "I know the steps of all my people."

The Honor of the State

FOR well-nigh two generations, save at rare intervals when the people rose in their might and put a temporary quietus on bossism, the great State of New York has been the plaything of politicians—the rich harvest-field of the political mowing-machine. To-day, thanks to a stubborn and egotistical executive on the one hand, and to a machine strong enough to rule or ruin on the other, the State is disgraced in the eyes of the whole nation. Its legislature, controlled by one dominant, unscrupulous faction; its governor impeached for "high crimes and misdemeanors," on charges brought at the instance of that faction; and the halls of legislation transformed into a political battle-ground, the spectacle it presents is one that may well cause shame and mortification to every right-thinking citizen.

That Governor Sulzer signally failed to fulfil the expectations of those who had a right to look for a sane, decorous and satisfactory performance of the duties of the executive, it would be useless to deny. Even his warmest friends were disappointed in him. He was believed to be a man of high ideals. From the moment he grasped power, he seemed to be obsessed with the notion that the executive authority was a weapon with which to make personal war, instead of an investiture for high public service to the State. His gubernatorial record was an unbroken series of personal conflicts with entrenched bossism, and the shafts of the enemy quickly found out the vulnerable points in his armor. Then they dragooned and humiliated him without mercy. At the impeachment proceedings in the Assembly, absentees were hunted up and corralled, and hesitating members were driven into line under the machine whip. There was no opportunity for discussion. It was political "railroading" from first to last. The impeachment, however, is but the prelude. At the trial soon to take place, he will have a final opportunity for vindication, and for the honor of the State let us hope he may succeed.

Mr. Sulzer has made a general and sweeping denial of the charges in the impeachment. He also claims that the extraordinary session of the Assembly, under the State constitution, had no authority to make such an investigation. He will now have an opportunity before an unbiased tribunal to present his side of the case. Nor should any one prejudge him, for the governor of New York should not be held guilty until legally found guilty by a competent court. And if the present disgraceful ordeal through which New York is passing should stir up the people to unite their forces and put an end forever to bossism and machine politics, with all the corrupt forces in their train, and to substitute clean, sane, honest representative government, the outcome would compensate for all that has been endured. This also would be for the honor of the State.

Are There Too Many Churches?

THE spectacle of half empty churches or churches far more than half empty is disheartening and depressing. The empty pews frighten the minister and dampen his ardor; they grieve the regular church-goers; they surprise casual attendants; the knowledge of them keeps outsiders from coming, for it is always the crowded places to which the crowds want to come.

Why are our churches so far from being filled? Many reasons are advanced from various points of view. But aside from any spiritual or theological convictions about the matter, it might occur to any unbiased observer, either outside or inside the organization, that there may be too many church buildings. In the ordinary town of five thousand, let us say, the five or six hundred worshipers who gather forlornly in ten or a dozen churches would make a rousing congregation for one large church. There are, of course, many obstacles in the way of such combinations, many of them serious and grave. But it would surely do us good to face the problem frankly: "Are there too many churches?"

In an interesting article appearing in the August number of the World's Work Mr. Everett T. Tomlinson gives some important figures. He states that there are in this country 192,795 church edifices, providing a seating capacity for 58,536,830 persons. This makes room for approximately two-thirds of all the people in the United States, including many classes who cannot possibly attend church. The average membership is 157 per organization. It is hard to think of any good reason why the average congregation could not be 500 instead of less than 200. Most depressing of all is the statement of the church debts. The total valuation of church property is $1,257,575,876; the average value being $6,756 and the average debt $3,214, practically 50 per cent.

There is certainly food here for most serious, earnest and prayerful thought. It would seem that one of two things ought to be done. Some of this superfluous church property should be gotten rid of and some of these too meager congregations consolidated. The other alternative is for the church to give itself to fasting and prayer, and through faith and consecration and the power of the Holy Spirit stir up the unchurched to come in and fill these dreary miles of vacant pews and share in the blessings of the kingdom of God.

England and the Panama-Pacific Fair

ENGLAND is being urged by her own people to revise her decision not to participate in the Panama-Pacific Exposition. It was represented in the House of Commons that the decision had caused very general dissatisfaction among the English-speaking peoples, and one of the government officials explained that the whole matter was one of expense and comparative trade results. It would necessitate an expenditure of $1,250,000, or two and a half times the amount voted by Congress for the same purpose. This is not precisely the sort of reasoning we should have expected, and even from a purely commercial point of view it is not altogether sound. With the completion of the Panama Canal, Great Britain will, no doubt, expect to share equally with other nations in the vastly increased facilities for Pacific trade; but this seems to have been overlooked by the spokesman for the government in making his explanation.

Clean Hands and a Pure Heart

NOTHING is so unchangeable as an event that has taken place. So long as an occurrence is in the future, a million things may intervene to prevent its becoming actual. Even if there remains a millionth part of a second something may happen to change the program. A bolt of lightning, the shake of an earthquake—and what would have been a fact is only a thought. But when once a deed is done not all the powers of God and man can undo it.

We are producing these eternal events, moment by moment, as we live. Since they are so [illegible]orable and relentless after they are made, re[illegible]n and conscience unite in beseeching us to act [illegible]e-fully. These hard, changeless things are difficu[illegible]to hide. There will be a flaw in the covering, a [illegible]u-tuberance of the covered and forgotten th[illegible]g. Somebody will drag it out. The time to think [illegible]d pray and be brave and discreet is now, before [illegible]e wrong deed has been done.

There is only one sure way of making a c[illegible]n record. That is to have a clean heart. The h[illegible]ls simply make pictures of what is in the heart. [illegible]o love honor more than life; to love duty more t[illegible]n self; to have a heart that cares for others and [illegible]t loves to obey God—these things, and only th[illegible], can keep our record clean.

The man with a clean record and a clean h[illegible]t can have no fears. Even in the face of overwhelm[illegible]g opposition and misunderstanding and accusatio[illegible]e stands firm and serene. He is invincible. In [illegible]e midst of the hardest fighting he can declare [illegible]e Galahad:

> My good blade carves the casques of men,
> My tough lance thrusteth sure,
> My strength is as the strength of ten,
> Because my heart is pure.

Ten Thousand Blankets

ALL accounts of conditions in Bulgaria and Ma[illegible]donia go to show that the two wars have [illegible]these unfortunate countries frightfully impov[illegible]ished and in a pitiful state. THE CHRISTIAN H[illegible]ALD Relief Committee, which has been the means saving many lives and relieving much distre[illegible]cables this new appeal:

"SOFIA, August 14

"Number Macedonian refugees swelling. T[illegible]thousand blankets needed immediately. Won[illegible]and children begging on streets; hungry moth[illegible]bearing weakling babes everywhere. Come o[illegible]and help us!

[Signed] PASTOR FURNAJIEFF, DONTCHO ATANASOFF."

This is the cry from Macedonia, the same la[illegible]from which Paul, nearly twenty centuries a[illegible]heard the cry for the Gospel. Now, it is a loud a[illegible]agonized call for bread, a pitiful plea for covering "Ten thousand blankets!" Who will answer t[illegible]despairing appeal? If every reader of this journ[illegible]whose heart is touched with compassion for the suffering ones were to give the value of a sing[illegible]blanket, the need would be supplied without dela[illegible]Who will help?

God's "Not Yet"

DR. McLAREN calls attention to the frequenc[illegible]with which, during our Lord's life on earth, th[illegible]expression was on his lips, "the hour," "my hour as implying clearly that every act of his was reg[illegible]lated by the conviction that the time appointed f[illegible]it had arrived. Friends tried to hurry him, but h[illegible]would not be hurried. He waited for his hour t[illegible]strike, and until that was heard, nothing could in[illegible]duce him to act. Those who trusted him learne[illegible]then, and all who have trusted him since hav[illegible]learned, that his hour is always best. God's cloc[illegible]does not go at the same rate as ours; a thousan[illegible]years may sometimes be crowded into one of hi[illegible]days, or one of his days may be lengthened to a slov[illegible]thousand years. The considerations which deter[illegible]mine his hour are beyond our sight; but this w[illegible]know, that whatever holds back his hand, it is no[illegible]lack of sympathy with our sorrow, it is not disre[illegible]gard for our confidence, it is not unwillingness o[illegible]inability to respond to our cry. All delay is the re[illegible]sult of his love, and is meant for highest good.

How beautifully Ruskin has clothed the thought "There is no music in a rest, but there is the making of music in it. How does the musician read the rest? See him beat the time with unvarying count, and catch up the next note true and steady, as if no breaking-place had come in between. Not without design does God write the music of our lives. Be i[illegible]ours to learn the time and not be dismayed at th[illegible]rests. If we look up, God himself will beat the time for us. With the eye on him, we shall strike the next note full and clear. If we say sadly to ourselves, 'There is no music in a rest,' let us not forget there is the making of music in it." So let us wait God's good time with no drooping faith, never doubting that his delays and our sorrows are the fruits of his love, and the preparation for larger blessings and deeper joy.

ator Races Pennsylvania Train

LYING the Bluebird, a Moisant monoplane, C. Marvin Wood raced with a Pennsylvania rain from New York to Washington, D. C., n August 8. He lost the contest, but claims broken the no-stop record for a distance run. nerican distance record for continuous flight ade last April by Lieutenant Thomas DeWitt of the United States Army, who flew, with nant William Sherman as a passenger, from City to San Antonio, a distance of 224 miles, r hours and twenty-two minutes, without g his engine. Aviator Wood made his start point between Hempstead and Garden City, t 4.38 o'clock in the morning. The Pennsyl- train, bearing Wood's friends, newspaper re- s, and members of the Aero Club of America, rsey City a few minutes earlier. There was heavy fog that Wood, fearing to risk the sky- rs of Manhattan, veered southward, crossing oney Island, the lower bay, and Staten Island d the mainland of New Jersey. The car roofs special had been whitewashed, but there were different tracks on the Jersey side of the and Wood could not pick out the Pennsyl- road, nor did he once get a sight of the cars s racing, nor did the people on the train get pse of his aeroplane. The aviator tells in his words his ill luck. "I was almost from the very start. rising from Hempstead, I ed steadily till I found my- five thousand feet up above se blanket of fog. I swung ly to the right, and then my r stopped. I saw the Atlan- cean below me. It was an us moment for me. I worked tly at the engine. She caught stroke again, and I was saved r a watery grave. I did not the ground till I struck the oad tracks at New Bruns- . Near Trenton my engine dead again, but I managed art it. Passing to the east of adelphia, my engine once e gave out, but I got it started ight. From Havre de Grace asted from 7,350 feet all the to Baltimore. Finally, near hersburg, Md., my engine led, and I had to volplane to ground." Wood landed in a of wheat stubble on the farm Mr. John Diamond. Through phone at the house he talked Washington, and an auto e out to him. Toward night got the Bluebird in flying pe, and made a most beautiful ent on the field at Fort Myer, re he was welcomed by officers of the army, nbers of aero clubs and others. The train ched Washington at 9.45 o'clock A.M. Wood ld have reached Washington at 8.45, an hour lier, if his engine had not behaved so badly, and e had steered his airship straight for Washing- from Baltimore, which he passed at 8.05. If claim shall be verified by authority, Wood will d the American record for non-stop flying be- en two points. The heavy fog and uncertain tor encountered by the airship in its race with railroad train suggest the handicaps the apostle ntions to be reckoned with in the race of life:

Wherefore seeing we also are compassed about with so great loud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight, and the sin ch doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the e that is set before us. (Heb. 12: 1.)

Backbiting Resulted in Misfortune

A YOUNG man in a large city was a clerk in one of its most important business houses. The ior member of the firm took a notion to him and moted him rapidly. When the head of the house s planning for his annual tour to Europe, he ited his favorite young friend to accompany him, h salary continued and all expenses paid. They d scarcely left the dock before the young man nmenced to fill the ears of the merchant with ticisms and slanders about the other employees the house. He thought he was making a great pression on his employer, and so he was, but was of an unfortunate character. On land- ing, the merchant said, "I expected to have you two months with me abroad, but you are such a mudslinger and scandalmonger that it has been with great impatience that I have endured you. You are envious, jealous, malicious, and inordinately ambitious. You make a bad companion, and you are not a good man for our house." He sent the backbiter home on the return ship, and the partners and employees were much surprised to see him home so soon, and the surprise was increased by a cablegram discharging him. He got exactly what was coming to him, and so does every man or woman who tries to get up in life by pulling some one else down, who tries to gain favor by the slinging of mud or whisperings of slander.

The poison of asps is under their lips. (Rom. 3: 13.)

Grafting Limbs in Surgery

BY a cablegram from London there comes an account of an address made by a New York surgeon before the World's Medical Congress giving a report of his successful experiments in grafting legs of dead animals on live ones, and his firm belief that limbs of dead men and women can be grafted on the bodies of the living. In his address the surgeon said: "I took the leg from a dead white dog, and grafted on a yellow dog whose leg had been removed. The yellow dog, with one white leg, now trots about thoroughly well. I have now three patients awaiting my return, to whom I hope to give new limbs taken from the bodies of persons accidentally killed." The grafting of organs and limbs of animals on other animals is not new. It may be that the science of modern surgery, with no end of marvels, may do what the delegate to the Medical Congress claimed: that limbs and arms will be transferred to living men and women from the dead, who no longer have any use for them. The transfer of one species of life to another organism in the vegetable realm by grafting was known in Bible times and is referred to as a symbol of the spiritual life which flows into and appropriates the human nature that is grafted into it. Any power the physical organism may have to adjust itself to or appropriate that which may be grafted upon it is suggested by this figure:

And if some of the branches be broken off, and thou, being a wild olive tree, wert grafted in among them, and with them partakest of the root and fatness of the olive tree: . . . thou wilt say then, the branches were broken off, that I might be grafted in. (Rom. 11: 17, 19.)

AVIATOR WOOD IN THE BLUEBIRD

Signals Wife by Searchlight

PEOPLE of Huntington, Long Island, wondered why every other evening their homes have been lighted briefly by the rays of a distant searchlight which appeared to be conveying a message. The flashes came from the searchlight on a Providence steamer. Captain Harry Barrett, as he goes along the Sound past Huntington Bay, seeks out the house in which his wife and daughter Amy are spending the summer. It is in Huntington, some ten miles distant from the steamer's course. When the house is found two signals are flashed skyward and back, then after a pause three more. They convey to Mrs. Barrett and the daughter the message: "All is well. Good night." This searchlight brilliantly illustrates the domestic fidelity of the average American home. The bold pictures of the adventuresses and adventurers in the papers, the story of separation, of divorce, of alimony from hundreds to millions, though too many, are the deformed and diseased features of American society which are the exception. The real picture is the turning of the eye and the heart to the home where wife and children are and in the salutations of love that follow in obedience to this apostolic command:

Let every one of you in particular so love his wife even as himself; and the wife see that she reverence her husband. (Eph. 5: 33.)

New Children's Court Building

THE cornerstone of the new Children's Court House in Manhattan, New York City, was laid on August 11 in the presence of a distinguished gathering, Borough President McAneny presiding, and Isaac Franklin Russell, chief justice of the Court of Special Sessions, who selects and assigns to duty the judges of the Children's Court, making the chief address. Among other beautiful things Judge Russell said: "Within its walls no child shall be pronounced guilty of a misdemeanor or a felony or receive the brand of a criminal. The language of the penal law, the jargon of the jail, the shadow of the Tombs, the manacles of the turnkey—none of these will terrify or torment the child offender. Instead there will stand by his side and sit over him in judgment and follow him in punishment those who will administer to him in mercy, devoted men and women who will feed the hungry, wash away the stains of cruelty and disease, and say a prayer for the sins of the soul. To-day we, the judges and officers of the children's court, pledge ourselves anew to the service of the city, its justice and its mercy, its charity and its humanity." The cornerstone of the new building bears this inscription: "For every child let truth spring from the earth, and justice and mercy look down from heaven." Every inch of the building and every session of the court will incarnate the thought of the Psalmist:

Mercy and truth are met together; righteousness and peace have kissed each other. (Ps. 85: 10.)

Invested in Worthless Securities

A MAN died in a New Jersey village the other day, leaving securities of the face value of a million dollars, which were not worth a single penny. Years ago he read of a man who became wealthy through the sudden appreciation of stocks and bonds which had been considered without value. From that time he commenced the accumulation of worthless securities with the hope that by the sudden rise in value they would make him rich, but the rise never came, and he sent his good money after bad money, and at last left zero as his estate. It is not a usual thing for people to invest in worthless securities except with the belief that they are valuable and will become much more so. But this man deliberately threw his money away through his wild-visioned hope of gain. He is a sample of multitudes of men and women, who spend vast sums of money on things which are not only worthless, but positively hurtful to body, mind and soul. One or more billions of dollars go out into this waste every year. Those who waste their fortunes in worthless securities in the temporal or spiritual world ought to listen to the question of the prophet:

Wherefore do ye spend money for that which is not bread? and your labor for that which satisfieth not? (Isa. 55: 2.)

THE MENACE OF FIRE

BY MRS. SARAH W. H. CHRISTOPHER

ON MARCH 25, 1911, one hundred and forty-seven persons, chiefly women and girls, were killed in New York City in the ghastly Triangle Waist Company fire in Washington Place. On the afternoon of July 22 last a holocaust in the Binghamton Clothing Company's factory at Binghamton, N. Y., snuffed out the lives of thirty-one persons, mostly women.

Now it is a fact that these dreadful disasters, as well as many others of a similar nature which have taken place in factories throughout the country, might have been prevented if the operatives in these factories had been properly taught how to guard their lives. Of the truly practical suggestions from various sources that followed the Triangle fire, none, broadly speaking, has been enacted into law.

The Bureau of Fire Prevention of the New York Fire Department has placed a number of violations and put up a lot of non-smoking signs in factories. Fire drills have been instituted, even required; but all that is not getting at the heart of the matter. All the fire-drills in the world are not going to save lives if they are not enforced, if they are not executed regularly and promptly, and if they are not properly planned in the first place. Fire-escapes, no matter what their measurements or specifications, are not going to be efficient exits if the people in the building cannot get to them easily and without fear of tripping and going down under a stampede. Workshops are not going to be safe as long as they are permitted to be littered with inflammable material and as long as smoking and the careless handling of fire does not mean instant dismissal.

There are hundreds of workshops in which no fire drills worthy of the name are performed, hundreds in which exits are within the letter of the law, but utterly at variance with its spirit; where doors are locked while the workers are within, and many, many more where, with some slight unfortunate combination of circumstances, a far greater death list than that at Binghamton, or even that in Washington Place, might occur.

It is not only employers that are to blame. Odd as it may seem, many of the workers themselves are opposed to fire drills. These men and women are usually piece-workers. To drop their work for five minutes, or five seconds, means to lose money. In other cases it is mere laziness; they do not want to take the trouble to go through the drill, or they complain that after they have walked down the stairs or the escapes, they have to walk up again. Of course, such a position is due to ignorance of the risks they run every day; an ignorance which spares them at least mental terror if it adds to their physical danger.

Realizing the situation, and that some practical steps must be taken to lessen the great and imminent fire peril in which thousands must do their daily work, the Cotton Garment Manufacturers' Association recently appointed me fire chief to 1,500 girls in 150 factories of Greater New York. In the factories my power is absolute. When I enter one, always unannounced, I sound the fire alarm, and instantly all work must be laid aside. If this is not done on the dot, I have been given full authority to discharge or discipline, as I may see fit, any employees who do not obey the fire laws, and I am careful to do it to make an example. When work has been stopped, I put the employees, and employers also, for they frequently need it as much as the operators, through various fire drills, those which I think best adapted for the needs of that special factory.

MRS. CHRISTOPHER SHOWING FACTORY GIRLS HOW TO HANDLE FIRE HOSE

MRS. CHRISTOPHER INSPECTING A FACTORY WATER-TANK

Mr. D. E. Sicher, president of the Cotton Garment Manufacturers, selected me for the work, I suppose, because I had been previously working under Fire Commissioner Joseph Johnson of New York for some months as the only woman inspector of the Fire Prevention Bureau, and even before I took hold of this work, I had been for a long time, all last summer, in fact, investigating for myself methods of fire prevention in the factories, and my experience as an operator in a sweatshop was only one of the many means I took to find out just what the real conditions were on the inside. I think now that I know just what to do when I go to a factory building.

The first place I inspected when taking hold of my present job was an old six-story building on the lower East Side. It was a typical sweatshop. The building itself was a veritable fire trap. There were about twelve hundred employed in the building, most of them being girls and women. On the ground floor was a saloon and a dirty restaurant; on the next floor a paint shop, forming a splendid place to start a big fire. The floors above were occupied as clothing establishments. There were no fire extinguishers. I found a few pails with no water in them. The floors were crowded with machines together that the women almost touched each other as they worked. you could find any trace of them, the aisles were practically blocked goods, and almost the entire floor in the work room was covered with inflammable cloth. At the rear of the floors I found the pressing-tal the old-fashioned heating-stoves for the irons placed hard up agai wooden partitions. The stoves in many cases were red hot, and the roo was close and stifling. The stoves were absolutely unprotected, and irons might at any time start a blaze, so carelessly were they left I found that many of the doors opened inward, that the stairs were and, in some cases, blocked up with boxes and goods. This first buildi I officially inspected, I think, was the worst one I have yet seen, althou ditions in many of the new so-called loft buildings are by no means should be. Things were soon changed around the first factory I inspec made report of th ditions to the ass with recommendati to what should be and it wasn't long the owners were pelled to start at th of making the plac I shall soon have back there and inspe work that they have

The next building ited was a twenty factory, and the conc were quite different what I had seen i first place. The bu was equipped with m standpipes and spr system. The employee a fire drill which wa fect. In fact, cond there could not have bettered.

In one of the roo found that the ma was anxious to warn employees of the da of fire, and not havi regulation fire sign ar he improvised one w read like this: "No s ing, spitting, or fli allowed by order of Board of Health. thought that the Boar Health would have difficulty in enforcing at order.

What the Cotton r- ment Manufacturers' Association wants to do i to provide means to lessen the possibility of fire in factories of its members, and when fire does occu o provide means by which every soul in the building get out safely. That is my work.

The drills I am having include the organization of employees into squads, and marking off for each sq the nearest route out of the building. Then I hav organize fire-fighting squads among the men employ teaching them to handle the fire-extinguishers and hose, and how to manage the sprinkler system. Un r my supervision the employees of each floor are org - ized and given in charge of the forewoman. A mon r is appointed to take charge of the squad designate use the fire apparatus.

Certain employees are detailed to take their posts t the head and foot of the stairs to keep the lines mov orderly. The workers are instructed that at the fi touch of the alarm they must hold themselves in rea ness to obey the instructions of the forewoman.

Any building under these conditions can be empt in a few minutes. There is no need of panic. There no chance for loss of life or injury, and the drills are easily learned that after they are repeated a couple times the workers know just what to do, and in case fire would probably be out of the building before th knew whether there was really a fire or only a drill.

My work, of course, has just begun. There is mu to be done before the factories under my care are as sa as they should be, but in time I hope that we shall have drills in all of them a the proper precautions taken so that there will be absolutely no danger to t women who have to work in these places.

As to concrete suggestions to increase safety in factory buildings, I belie the following of the utmost importance: True fireproof construction; regul fire drills, planned in relation to exit facilities and rigidly lived up to, wi punishment or dismissal for laxity, and, perhaps, reward for promptness a efficiency; exits of sufficient number to empty each floor rapidly and witho undue crowding; wherever possible, fire-escapes in the form of bridges adjoining buildings: these I believe to be the most effective escapes in t world, for the occupants of the building on fire can readily pass by means o them to a building entirely unaffected without going either up or down, an they know that they can do this and are thus relieved of dread; all escapes lev with the floor, and without obstructions separating them from it, such a window-sills and door-sills, doors opening outward, and, of course, unlocke floors, tables, and machines clear of litter or inflammable material to the la possible degree consistent with the work; a well-drilled fire brigade workin independently; constant supervision; constant watchfulness.

NTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON for ay, September 7, 1913. The Ten Command-s. Ex. 20: 1-8. GOLDEN TEXT: "Thou love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, with all thy mind." Luke 10: 27.

pulsion behind the command 'to "keep the Sabbath holy." In days when religious acts were forced, Charlemagne first, and Cavaliers and Puritans afterwards, required church attendance by law; but no such laws have existed for a long period, and there is no danger that any such laws will ever exist again, any more than there is danger of witch-burning. In our Sunday laws we compel men to stop work but not to worship.

There is another most important thing to b. said about the Decalogue as a whole. Both Moses and Jesus summed up all the commandments in two great commands: Love God, Love man. And Paul summed up the whole law in love, when he said, "Love is the fulfilling of the law." And let us not forget that when Jesus gave the Golden Rule he said: "This is the law and the prophets." This explodes the fallacy of those who have contrasted the law manifested at Sinai with the love manifested on Olivet. But really, the Beatitudes and the Decalogue are but two aspects of the same divine love, both seeking for our sake to win us from the misery of wrongdoing to the joys of rightdoing.

To save the children from the sorrows that follow disobedience to divine and civil and parental law, and especially to cure at the root the habitual lawlessness of our cities and towns, we need to remind the young that as fathers' and mothers' laws are made of love, as they well know, so God's laws are "for our good always," to keep us out of trouble; and that the true laws of the state are also like the rails on which the train goes forward smoothly and safely, keeping us from jumping the track to our own destruction.

As the naturalist becomes enthusiastic in the discovery of God's natural laws of planets and plants, so the moralist should exult yet more in discovering the higher moral laws of righteousness and gladness in the soul, and should sing with the psalmist, "O how I love thy law! It is my meditation all the day." And as Jonathan's love was most fully shown in the arrows of warning, so God's love is shown in nothing more clearly than when he warns us and even commands us not to do the things which will destroy us, body and soul. "God is love," and never more truly so than when he safeguards us. Mr. Thomas Storrs Waterman says: "Show me the man whose ancestors, paternal and maternal, have for ten generations kept the commandments and I will show you the best brain and the purest blood on the face of the earth."

The first commandment requires singleness of worship: "Thou shalt have no other gods before me." Does "before me" mean "in my sight," or "above me in esteem"? Both. The question of idols is not yet reached. This command fits all lands and all grades of intelligence. It means that God must be supreme in our hearts. When there is a contest whether we will do his will or that of some other person; whether gold or God shall be highest in our affections; whether we will sacrifice righteousness for office, or conscience for pleasure, it must be the fixed habit of our lives to be loyal to God against all comers.

The second commandment requires spirituality in worship: "Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image." Idols in nearly all cases are set up at first as visible symbols of an invisible God, to make it easier for the mind to worship. But it usually happens that instead of serving as guideposts to point the mind to God, these idols serve as bars to keep men's thoughts from going any farther.

This commandment against idolatry should prompt three thoughts in us: first, a thought of gratitude that our own European ancestors and millions more have been turned from the worship of heathen idols since Jesus was born in Palestine, which was then the only country in which the people worshiped the true God; second, a thought of helpful sympathy for the millions who still worship heathen idols blindly and sadly in Africa and Asia and the islands of the sea; third, a thought of helpfulness for those in Christian lands also who superstitiously worship images, originally intended to be only symbols, but which have become to many real idols. The days of the week, each reminding us of some false god our European ancestors worshiped—the Sun on Sunday, the Moon on Monday, Tuiske on Tuesday, Woden on Wednesday, Thor on Thursday, Freya on Friday, Saturn on Saturday—should prompt us to daily prayer and weekly gifts for the saving of those who still live in terror of hideous images "which see not nor know," missing all the joy that comes to our homes from trusting, loving and obeying our heavenly Father and Jesus our Saviour-King.

We leave the fourth commandment, save verse 8, to which we have already referred, to be treated with other duties to man in the next lesson, and close with practical words on the third commandment.

Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain. The writer in frequent addresses to high schools on "The Essentials of Manliness," speaks of profanity as a triple illustration that bad morals are bad manners, that what is wrong is rowdy. The first essential of manliness is consideration for others, and the swearer violates this when he slaps decent people's feelings, which is worse than slapping faces. If a group of boys were talking together, and one of them should say ugly words about another boy's father, we should say he was a rowdy. But it is even more ungentlemanly to say ugly words of my heavenly Father, who never makes a mistake. Swearing is also inconsistent with the second essential of manliness, a good vocabulary. Men swear in a great majority of cases, not because they are angry or wish anybody ill, but because they want to speak strongly, and haven't enough words whose meaning they understand to express themselves, and so fill up with oaths.

Swearing also violates the third essential of manliness, a quiet independence which makes one refuse to do things when there is no reason to do them except to mimic the folly of somebody else. Nobody ever began to swear because there was any reason to do so, but only because he was a mimic, which is not man-like but ape-like.

Maintain your rank, vulgarity despise;
To swear, is neither brave, polite nor wise.

OUR SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS' ROUND TABLE

—AT THE World's Sunday School Convention in Zürich there were very helpful conferences on how to conduct men's classes, led by Mr. W. C. Pearce, of Chicago, the international leader of adult class work. He gathered at the front all the men in the audience who are officers and members of men's classes and led them skilfully in the study of the lesson about Moses killing the Egyptian. It was not a lecture or sermon, but a lively conversation developed by reviewing, examining and developing questions. He was not disturbed by differences of opinion, nor led aside by irrelevant remarks. He took good care to make an impressive close in the last five minutes. (The teaching had been preceded by such business as could not wait for the week-day meeting of this organized class, which had a president and secretary and many committees, with some altruistic work for all members to do.) After the teaching a man arose and said he envied and admired those who could develop class conversation by questions, but that he was handling a class of five hundred men by giving them a straight talk on the lesson. He could not know intimately all members of so large a class, but this was provided for by appointing "captains of ten." The experts in class work generally insisted that the teaching of men's classes, as of all others, should be the question method, and smaller classes were favored; but the leader of this "Round Table" believes that big classes of men have a strong attraction and will draw many who would not come to a small class if only for fear they would be questioned and be led to expose their lack of proper Bible instruction, which they regret and seek to mend. There is need of both kinds of classes for two kinds of teachers and two kinds of classes.

—A MEN'S CLASS needs something besides Bible study—especially some ways of applying what they learn in useful action. Besides a full set of officers there should be a committee on new members, with the understanding that all would help in that; and a committee to visit sick and absent members, which should have access to flowers and a relief fund to be carefully administered; and a committee on athletics and recreations; and a committee on work for boys to furnish "big brothers" for the juvenile court and teachers for boys' classes; and a missionary committee to keep the class informed on foreign and home missions and advise as to contributions for both; and a good citizenship committee, not to drag the class, as such, into party politics, or law and order work, but to enable the class to speak—in union with other men's classes if possible—to the government of city or state or nation, as of old prophets and apostles spoke to kings of "righteousness, temperance and a judgment to come."

—MR. FRED B. SMITH, the great Y. M. C. A. leader, in his speech at Zürich, held out as a call to men and boys to service through the Sunday school a worldwide vision of what the Sunday schools of the world might and could do with more men and boys to help: 1. Abolish the bar-room the world over. 2. Secure economic justice on Bible principles. 3. Suppress the "white slave traffic"—a man's job. 4. Carry the missionary movement to triumph since Christianity must be everywhere or nowhere at the end of the conflict of religions. Rev. W. A. Brown, a moral twin of Fred Smith in a similar world vision, showed that Christianity is (1) dominating the commerce of the world; (2) dominating its scientific research; (3) dominating its social service; (4) will dominate the world through foreign missions, which brings us together more than anything else, for it is too big for any one denomination to do alone. And in this saving of the world the Sunday school is our best entering wedge. Men must stop the decrease of boy attendance at Sunday schools, for partly as a consequence, no doubt, juvenile crime is increasing two and a half times as fast as the population. The writer in referring to the boy problem as a man's problem also showed that the habit of Continental Europe to graduate boys and girls out of Sunday school at fourteen is a most fatal mistake, since the new explorations of adolescence show that is the very time of all others when both boys and girls need just the help that is afforded by a Sunday school teacher and class fellowship and comradery and protection.

—HOW SUNDAY SCHOOLS are planted on the frontiers of civilization in the home mission field is specially told by a homespun hero, Mr. Robert F. Sulzer, in a small book entitled Planting the Outposts, published by the Presbyterian Board of Publication, Philadelphia, Pa. It is a good book to put in the hands of boys who like heroic action, and it may be hoped that it will prompt some brave boys to "go to the front" in a fight for a "better country" here and now.

This was the song:

Where the birds are, and the flowers.

What calls me "dear!"

She saw me and stopped short, round baby eyes very wide and surprised. I felt that I owed an explanation.

"I was listening to you as you sang," I explained.

"Yes," said the tiny child, "I always sing when I'm happy!"

"Why are you so happy?" I asked. It was an unnecessary question.

"'Cause I'm going away," she answered me, "t' Mont-Lawn. Mont-Lawn is country. Did you know that?"

A girl was walking across the floor with a curious compound of pain and pleasure on her small round face. Her finger was in her mouth. She paused in front of me expectantly.

"What's the matter?" I inquired.

"A toothache," she answered briefly. "A awful toothache that makes me feel like crying. Did you know I was going to Mont-Lawn?"

"Yes," I responded, "but aren't you afraid that you will feel badly while you are away—on account of the tooth, I mean?"

A look of indescribable scorn passed over the child's face. It wrinkled her small nose and curled her rather pretty mouth.

"You don't know," she informed me. "I'll be too busy an' happy to have a toothache."

Do you see how much everybody loves Mont-Lawn? The kiddies love it, and the mothers love it and hard-working girls make sacrifices for it. And I am sure that there is One who loves it more than anybody else could—One who sends his flowers and trees to decorate the place, and his breezes to refresh the tired children who hardly know what a breeze is. And he gives them their daily bread, for he puts beautiful thoughts into kind hearts, and when a beautiful thought enters a kind heart it means that some CHRISTIAN HERALD friend is going to help the little children to find their way to the healthful, happy country, the land of their dreams, the Children's Paradise.

The heat rolls over the city,
As a cloud goes over the sun,
And the people are praying, anguished,
That their life work will soon be done.
And the children moan in the darkened nooks,
For a breeze, or the feel of dew,
That is waiting for them in that wondrous place,
Mont-Lawn, which they owe to you.

The Good Things Some Folks Have

At breakfast today, perhaps a million children found Puffed Grains on the table.

Crisp, toasted grains, puffed to eight times normal size. Grains that taste like toasted nuts.

At dinner today, on many a table these grains were served in soup. And many another housewife used them as a nut-like garnish for ice cream.

At supper tonight, countless bowls of milk were served with these Puffed Grains in them.

Thin, airy wafers—bubble-like and brown—grains four times as porous as bread.

This afternoon, legions of girls used these grains in home candy making. Used them in place of nuts. And armies of boys enjoyed the grains dry, like peanuts, when at play.

Forty million dishes per month are now served in all these delightful ways.

Puffed Wheat, 10c
Puffed Rice, 15c
Except in Extreme West

Your boys and girls would enjoy these grains better than any other cereal food.

They are thin and fragile—steam-exploded—filled with a myriad cells. And terrific heat has given them a delightful almond flavor.

Every food granule has been blasted to pieces by Prof. Anderson's process. Inside of each grain there have occurred at least a hundred million explosions.

So these are whole grains made wholly digestible, as no other process can make them.

They are ideal foods—scientific foods—the best-cooked cereal foods ever created.

It's a pity to go without them.

"Really?" Mrs. Vansittart tried to keep him talking. His thin little face lighted wonderfully at times, and his voice took on unusual tones, which often told her far, far more than did his words. It was a strange voice for a boy, light and thin and flexible, its notes a pure contralto, totally lacking in the baritone quality his years seemed to demand. Not that it was easy to discover the years of Gignac, however. His figure was young and small and curiously undeveloped; yet the shaping of his hands and feet, their perfect fitness for his size, seemed to denote that he had reached the limit of his growth. Moreover, his eyes looked old.

Now, as the elevator slid smoothly upward, he nodded without speaking. That was another curious thing about Gignac. Although the long hours of waiting for a passenger must have tried his patience to the uttermost, must have made him long, indeed, for any society that was not his own, yet he never answered futile comments on his earlier phrases.

At the door of the car, however, Mrs. Vansittart halted.

"Browne has been telling me about your brother, Gignac."

To her surprise a scarlet wave rolled up across his cheeks. She had not looked, even in Gignac, for a grief so permanent, and she half regretted her words.

"Yes, madame."

"It was good that you could come to take his place here."

"Yes, madame."

"Was he the only one besides yourself?"

"No, madame. I have a little, little sister and a little brother," Gignac told her.

She noted the difference in the phrases, realizing the distinction in age that they implied. Then—

"And a father and a mother, I suppose?" she queried.

"No, madame. My mother died at the coming of my little sister. My father never recovered from the news about Raoul. His heart was weak."

"Poor Gignac! That makes a heavy responsibility for you. But who takes care of the babies?"

"I do, madame."

"Gignac! But not when you are working here?"

"Every other day I have the morning and the evening," he reminded her. "And the little brother is five, and discreet."

"Poor little baby!" she said slowly, and the lengthening pauses were the measure of her pity, a pity that was by no means all for the "discreet" baby boy. "But do you mean you cook for them and—and all?"

Gignac nodded, his face flushed and overcast. It was plain to his questioner that he dreaded to make a confession belittling to his boyish dignity. However—

"Myself, I make the whole ménage," he told her simply. "But what of that? I like the little babies."

Mrs. Vansittart looked as she felt, perplexed. It would spoil Gignac, for herself and for all the other people if she feed him too constantly. None the less, she longed to be of practical use in helping his slim shoulders bear his heavy burden. Accordingly—

"Some day I shall come to see your babies," she told him lightly.

His face refused to brighten at her suggested coming.

"Madame will find it far from here, and very hard to reach."

And Mrs. Vansittart went her way, pondering, perhaps a little hurt. Even an elevator boy, after months of service, has it in his power to hurt one; and this was the first time Gignac had shown anything but buoyant pleasure in her presence.

The next afternoon, however, coming up from luncheon, she found Gignac his old self, yet a shade more enthusiastic than it was his quiet wont to be.

"Such a beautiful baby has come to Number Four!" he told her breathlessly, before she was well inside the car.

"A baby, Gignac?"

This time, instead of disregarding her echo, he took it as a text for renewed enthusiasm.

"A little girl of four, madame, pretty as a fairy and clothed like a little queen." Gignac always had an eye for clothes. His own uniform was invariably spotless and creased to perfection; and he showed a respect for frilly trains by no means common to his class.

"Is she to stay long?"

"The nurse says yes. She will be here all the winter. And she is as good as she is beautiful."

"Really, Gignac," and, in spite of Gignac's possible feelings, Mrs. Vansittart laughed outright; "the baby seems to have made a sudden conquest."

Gignac nodded gravely.

"How could she help it, madame, when she put her little hand in mine and wished me good day in the real French of Paris?"

"She is French, then?"

And Gignac answered simply: "But yes. How else?"

Less than a week had passed, when Mrs. Vansittart also fell beneath the baby's spell, as, indeed, did all the other inhabitants of the new wing. One could not very well do otherwise; the child was so pretty and so well-mannered, she accepted their adoration so as a matter of course. However, it took some breadth of mind for Mrs. Vansittart to admit the baby's charm, since, as she laughingly explained to Browne, her own nose was out of joint entirely. And it is something to be first favorite of anybody, even of one's lift boy.

That the tiny girl had been elevated to that place, no one living in the wing could doubt. She was that rare being, a young child who did not abuse her freedom, and freedom she had in plenty. What she lacked otherwise, Gignac gave her. Nowadays, his car was always halted at the fourth floor, where the two good cronies, child and almost-man, met and whispered together by the hour, while the nurse sat by, on guard. They told each other stories unnumbered and interminable. With the deftness of his race, Gignac cut out wonderful dollies and dogs and houses from newspapers, from old menu cards, even from bits of board. She fondled them, and treasured them, and, in return, she wove a flower into the buttonholes of his brown uniform, or brought the sash from her best wax doll that he might wear it for a necktie. Sometimes, if she were very good and the nurse were very busy, she spent a rapturous morning, riding up and down, perched in the chair in the corner of the lift. As the days went on, Gignac turned the angle of the chair a little, and taught her to read the figures on the indicator. After that, they never wearied of their one pet game in which Gignac was too deaf to hear the bell, and she was forced to tell him when it rang, and where.

A month later, there came the fire in the new wing.

It started just before nine, one night, started in the west end of the fifth floor, and the wind had been blowing from the west all day, blowing hard. Not that anybody really thought much about danger, though. The wing was as fireproof as such a place could be, and the general imagination stopped short at discomfort. However, between smoke and water, there would be enough of that.

Strange to say, Gignac, on the ground floor, was one of the last to know about the fire; and, when all the bells above his head went ringing at the same minute, he stood and gazed at his annunciator, sure that his signal line had fouled. It was only for an instant, though. The next instant blew a puff of smoke into the shaft, and Gignac understood. Before it seemed possible that his senses could have rushed the message to his brain, his car went flying upward, smoothly and steadily as ever, but many times more swift.

Fifteen minutes later, the shaft was black with smoke, and the space about the ground-floor door was black with people, all harping upon the selfsame theme.

The assistant manager, puffing with excitement and smoke, came hurrying towards them.

"All here, and safe?"

"Yes, thank God!" somebody said devoutly.

The assistant manager turned to Gignac.

"Everybody is out?"

"Yes, sir."

The assistant manager's eyes swept the little group.

"I don't see the Langevins," he said.

"They went out early, the maid told me, sir, and they have not come in."

"And they took the child?"

"She said so, sir."

But some one contradicted.

"I heard her chattering to the nurse, not an hour ago."

"Where is the nurse?"

"She told the child that she was going out. I heard her, and then I heard her shut the door."

"Then—" The pause seemed ominous, when one saw the black, black smoke rolling now from all the upper windows of the wing.

For one instant, Gignac, white to the lips, stood swaying to and fro, as if about to drop there where he stood. Then he stiffened sharply, and stepped inside the car, whose upper grill-work was beginning to show red.

"Gignac!" It was Browne who spoke, and curtly. "Do not go. It is too late now. Besides," his glance moved from the white, set face to the black, black smoke surrounding it; "besides, you can't."

Gignac took refuge in the French impersonal which has crowned more deeds of simple heroism than the French Academy has books.

"One always can," he said.

And then the car shot upward, to vanish in the smoke.

None of the watchers knew whether it was gone for seconds, or for years. What they did know was that, at the end of all things, it reappeared again, a badly smoked and frightened baby huddled in a corner of the floor, and Gignac, gasping, at the lever. Before the waiting crowd could fully seize the joy of the appearing, though, the cheers broke off sharply and ended in a moan. In the final minute of its usefulness, the gearing had given way under the intense heat. With a rush and roar, the loosened car shot past them and crashed down on the basement floor.

Gignac, his left leg dangling limply, looked into Browne's eyes, when his kindly chief bent down to lift him.

"The baby?" he asked briefly, first of all.

"Safe and sound, thanks to you, Gignac. But you've been hit hard, poor old man."

Gignac nodded. Fear lay in his eyes.

"Is it the hospital?" he asked.

Browne tried to speak cheerily.

"Just at first, till they can look you over."

The fear in the eyes increased to terror, panic. Browne, watching, could not understand. Gignac had made no moan to show he was in pain. He was not one to funk; not, that is, if Browne knew anything of men.

The panic-stricken eyes appeared to be in search of something, some one. Browne bent lower.

"What is it, old man?" he asked.

"Is Mrs. Vansittart here?"

As a matter of course she was. Now she stepped forward.

"Here I am, Gignac," she said gently.

Gignac's hand shut upon her skirt.

"Don't leave me," he begged; "not at the hospital, not all through."

Wondering, Mrs. Vansittart started to reply, to reassure him; but before she could speak, the clutch upon her skirt had tightened, and—

"For the love of mercy!" Gignac had added.

She rode with them in the ambulance, Browne steadying the broken leg, but Gignac's head against her shoulder. On the way Gignac scarcely spoke; when they lifted him out, though, the terror came back into his eyes.

"Just you," he begged her piteously. "Not Browne, nor anybody else."

What could she do but yield? He was so slim and young and fragile, so pitiful in his dumb, desperate terror of all that lay ahead of him. Close beside him, she went up the steps; but she paused on the threshold long enough to say, quite low,

"Wait here, please, Browne. It may be I shall need you." Then the door swung to behind her.

Fifteen minutes later, Mrs. Vansittart understood.

Afterwards, when the leg had been set, and Gignac had been carried to the room and bed which Mrs. Vansittart had chosen, she sat down beside the bed and laid her hand on Gignac's arm.

"Tell me all about it, dear child," she said gently.

And Gignac told, sobbing a little now and then, less for the pain of her broken leg than for the agony of her broken maidenly reserve.

She had been wicked, perhaps; but what else could she do? Raoul had died: and then her father, two days later; and there were two babies. And always they had lived comfortably. She had never known how to work, except to keep her father's house. And if she went out to service there were still the babies. And Raoul had taught her to run his car. She used to go to see him nights, when the place was still, and he had shown her then, just for the fun. He used to say, only in a joke, of course, that if anything came to him, she could do his work. And, alas, what else was there for her to do? There always were the babies, and there was no money in the bank to give her time to learn a trade. And so she had cut off her hair and put on Raoul's outgrown clothes, and— But madame knew about the rest.

Later, after a little time, when pain had taken away her power of speech, she looked up into Mrs. Vansittart's face again. All the terror had gone from her eyes by now. In its place was infinite appeal.

It was very wicked, very bold; but the good God was merciful, and he had an understanding. Did Madame think that Browne would keep the place till she was better?

on he felt like a traveler in the Alps who, climbing higher and higher, sees ever new heights before him. But he reached forth! And he gloried in the thought, One day we shall know!

In the meantime this is certain: no man can form a just conception of the spiritual life until he enters it. To stand without and ask an explanation is like contemplating a painted window from the open street. Get into the sanctuary if you would have its beauty break upon you! "He that doeth my will," said Jesus, "shall know the doctrine." It is as if he said, "Take my hand, and I will lead you into life; and you shall see the mystery and the glory of it."

I do not know why my friend did not quote the whole of the text: "For me to live is Christ—and to die is gain!"

The world is seeking gain. The people who jostle us in the street are striving for it; gain of gold, of honor, of selfish emolument. To gain a little yellow dust that shall sift through the fingers at last! These are gains that perish with the using. They end in loss. But the things which Paul counted "loss for Christ" were destined to be gain forever. "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his life?" Or what shall be lost if, losing the whole world, he gain it?

In the article of death, when earth's substance passes like the baseless fabric of a dream, then, says Paul, comes gain! Death itself is gain, because it introduces the soul to eternal life.

Oh, what is that? I wish I knew. How easily we say it: "Eternal life!" But who shall define it? Who shall explain it?

Did you ever look up at the stars and on through the interstellar spaces and wonder, "What is beyond?" So, dreaming dreams and seeing visions, we gaze through the promises which illumine the great mystery of death and wonder what eternal life shall be. "Now are we sons of God; but it doth not yet appear what we shall be." For "eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man the things which God hath prepared for them that love him!"

ANSWERED PRAYERS

A CANADIAN reader, A. G. E., writes: "I wish to acknowledge through your Answered Prayer column the wonderful way God has answered my prayers. I feel so ashamed of my lack of faith, but I know God understands. He not only answered, but gave more than I had courage to ask for. But the answer seemed to come only when I was willing to do the thing I said I could not do. Yet God has not required me to do that; it seemed to be the willing spirit he required. The column is such a help, and the Glad Game is so helpful, too."

Here are some records of definite answers to prayer in practical matters. E. B. K. writes from Middletown, Ohio: "My prayers were answered for the success of my son in final examinations, and again that he might find suitable employment along his line. God is good to us if we only have faith. I enjoy the Answered Prayer column."

M. A. M., of Nevada, Mo., writes: "We had a fearful drought. We prayed for rain, and last night it came. For several hours it fell. Oh, how good it looked just to see water! The loving Father, who holds the clouds in his hands, sent the rain."

Acknowledgments of answers to prayer have also been received from:

THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN POLITICS

Is There a Catholic Lobby?

From the Christian Standard, Cincinnati, Ohio, August 2, 1913.

IN SEVERAL States of the Union and in Washington, D. C., there exists what practically amounts to a Catholic lobby, and it is now being openly agitated that such lobbies should be systematically maintained. The Kansas City Journal of May 19 last, under great scare headlines on the front page, reports Bishop Lillis, in an address to the United German Catholic societies at Roanoke, as advocating the maintenance of a permanent Catholic lobby at Jefferson City:

"I approve very much of your efforts to protect the interests of the church while the legislature is in session. The bankers and other interests have representation at Jefferson City. The Catholic Church is one of the largest property-holders in the State and should be represented there all the time. . . .

"I am sorry to say that there are times when the church badly needs representation in the legislature. During the last session a resolution was introduced calling for an inspection of the sisterhoods and convents. I shall dismiss this subject here with these remarks: Neither the sisterhood nor the convents depend upon the State for maintenance, or even a small appropriation. They are essentially private institutions, and therefore this resolution was the outgrowth of bigotry based upon ignorance."

You will observe the bishop's logic. Those who moved for the inspection of convents are ignorant bigots, because the convents are private institutions. This is after the manner of Rome, to insult its opponents, not to argue with them.

Why Not in America, Too?

From the New York Churchman, August 2, 1913.

THE bishop of Manchester is determined to make the church public understand what the papal decree on mixed marriages, Ne Temere, involves. He has been publicly attacked for his references to the decree, but he is in no way dismayed. He appeals to facts, and his facts are unchallenged, for the very good reason that they cannot be explained away—much less denied. He summarizes the position as follows: "Rome treats as invalid and adulterous marriages that have been lawfully contracted. Rome uses pressure to force Protestants to go through services which treat their own religious services as a mere nullity; wage-earners in Lancashire have been told that though they have been married and are living pure lives, yet they are but adulteresses or prostitutes; wives have been encouraged to leave their husbands and to take away the child from his father." Prominent Roman Catholics, it is said, are much distressed by the operation of the decree and wish to see England excluded, as Germany and Austria-Hungary have been, from its working.

Keep Them Forever Separate

From the Christian Standard, Cincinnati, July 26, 1913.

NO ONE would dare to say that General Grant was a hysterical pessimist, or actuated in the least by prejudice or bigotry. Yet this sturdy patriot, who heroically weathered the storm of the Civil War, and proved again and again his tolerant magnanimity, saw this menace to our public schools, and to the constitutional principles which they safeguard, a generation ago. In an address, in 1875, to a gathering of old soldiers, he said: "Let us guard against every enemy threatening our free institutions." "If we are to have another contest in the near future, I predict that the dividing line will not be Mason and Dixon's line, but between patriotism and intelligence on one side, and superstition, ambition and ignorance on the other. Let us all labor to add needful guaranties for the security of free thought, free speech, a free press, pure morals, unfettered religious sentiments, and equal rights and privileges to all men, irrespective of nationality, color or religion. Encourage free schools and resolve that not one dollar appropriated for their support shall be appropriated to the support of any sectarian schools." "Leave the matter of religion to the family altar, the church and the private school, supported entirely by private contributions. Keep the church and the state forever separate."

"America" Not Unpatriotic

From the "Tribune," New York, August 7, 1913

THE denunciation of the national hymn "America" as unpatriotic and unworthy, which was made at Buffalo the other day, is based upon two grounds, neither of them convincing.

The first is that the music is of English origin. That is true. But when a Holstein clergyman wrote for that same music words in honor of a Danish king, "Heil Dir im Siegeskranz" was adopted as a German national song and was published as a "Berliner Volkslied." A tune which Beethoven and Weber esteemed highly and used in several great compositions is surely not unworthy of our use.

The second is that the "land of the Pilgrim's pride" means a land of religious bigotry, blue laws, witch-burning and persecution. That is untrue. It is an ignorant confusion of the Pilgrims with the Puritans.

We don't suppose that "My Country, 'Tis of Thee," will ever supplant "The Star-spangled Banner" and "Hail, Columbia!" as official anthems. But far stronger objections than those at Buffalo must be made to it before it loses rank as one of the best loved and most worthy of American national hymns.

burden, with eight hundred students; but with the present yearly enrolment in the two schools of nearly seventeen hundred, the financial burden has been greatly augmented, and the faith and loyalty of the present board of trustees is sufficiently indicated by their raising through public appeal, in excess of all income from invested funds, $100,000 a year. One of the elements of safety, however, in this work has been the fact that so many people of moderate means contribute toward its support. Thus, during the past year, there have been approximately four thousand gifts, and with the exception of perhaps fifty of the largest, the average contribution has been less than one hundred dollars, hundreds of gifts being in sums of one dollar.

A justifiable inquiry is, whether the expenditure of so much money and labor through the last thirty years has been warranted, and whether the results demonstrate its value. There have been in the thirty years approximately twelve thousand students enrolled, and the names and addresses of ten thousand living former students are on file in the schools. Many of the girls are in homes of their own, directing in paths of Christian rectitude the lives intrusted to them. Hundreds are engaged in some form of Christian work. More than sixty Northfield girls are upon the foreign mission field, while scores are engaged at home, as ministers' assistants, parish workers, Y. W. C. A. secretaries, and helpers in other spheres of Christian service. Many have taken up business careers. The callings into which the Mount Hermon boys have entered are still more varied. There is hardly a profession in which they are not succeeding, although naturally the Christian ministry claims the largest number. There are forty-one upon the foreign mission field, while at home every phase of Christian work claims students with Northfield training. From every part of the world, as well as from every section of our own country, come most encouraging reports of success attending their labors, and indirectly the value of the training they have received in the schools.

In recent years, through the generosity of friends, the plant of these schools has been greatly extended, and there are no secondary schools in the country more splendidly equipped. But the growth and development of the work has been far more rapid than the growth of the endowment funds, and therein lies the problem of the future. The friends of the schools have sought to meet this problem by building up what may be termed a living endowment. By this is meant a host of friends who are willing to give in small sums from year to year toward the support of the work. There are thousands who remember and revere the name of Mr. Moody, and would gladly give sufficiently to meet its present needs to endow the work which he established, and to insure its continuation in the future. Five dollars a year would be equivalent to the income upon a gift of $100 towards the endowment, and $50 a year would equal the income upon $1,000 of invested funds. Mr. Moody termed these friends the "living endowment" of Northfield. The schools he founded are in need of many others who will thus enroll at the present time.

Leaving the village school at the age of thirteen, Dwight L. Moody entered the army of wage-earners, never again to enjoy the opportunity of an elementary education. When in after years he made friends who had confidence in him, and were willing to aid in his work, his heart went out to the class to which he had belonged when young, and he determined to do his utmost to afford an open door of opportunity for the youth of his country. Northfield became the concrete expression of his sympathy for boys and girls who had been handicapped, and he determined to help them to acquire, as he expressed it, "such an education as would have helped me when I was their age."

We believe there are many readers of this journal who are deeply interested in Northfield, and who would be glad to assist either through the "living endowment" plan or by direct subscription to the treasurer of the Northfield Schools at East Northfield, Mass., and thus to have a share in perpetuating the life-work of D. L. Moody, whose spirit and life are being perpetuated in hundreds of young people at Mount Hermon and Northfield.

HE YOUNG PEOPLE'S MEETINGS

TES ON THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR, EPWORTH LEAGUE AND BAPTIST YOUNG PEOPLE'S UNION TOPICS

The Christian's Faith*

AR too little is said about faith in these days. For some strange reason it seems easier to talk about almost any other subject n this, whereas it is in reality the st important of all. "We are saved faith." "This is the victory that rcometh the world, even your th." "According to your faith be unto you." "This is the work of d, that ye believe." Yet we talk ut service, and consecration, and rifice, and Bible study, and a score other excellent and necessary ngs, often without approaching one great essential—faith.

Perhaps it is not quite accurate to that faith is the most important ng of all, for the Bible, in both Old d New Testaments, puts love as the eatest thing. But the Bible also aches, particularly in the New Tesnent, that we cannot get the kind of e that counts without faith. Love the gift of God; and it is bestowed on the soul in answer to faith.

Some of the reasons why faith is so gely forgotten are quite easy to e. It is looked upon as one of the imary essentials of the Christian e, a step taken at the beginning, d after that to be taken for granted. ne writer of the Epistle to the Hews expresses this idea in the first rse of the sixth chapter. But he so makes faith the key word of that nderful climax chapter, the elevth. He has pointed out the supercelling glories of the Christian stem as compared with the Mosaic stem, showing that rest and perfecon and cleansing come not by law nd sacrifice but by the blood of rist, and then shows how faith is e connecting link that brings these ories to the believing soul. And is kind of faith is not a kind to be ft behind, but a kind that is to be ken with us out into the tasks and rifes of life. It was faith that ade those ancient heroes mighty; ith will make us mighty now.

But there is another and more ubtle reason why faith is an unpopur or forgotten subject. We like, in ur thinking and speaking, to empha ze what we are doing for God, or hat we are going to do for him, or hat we ought to do for him. Faith, n the other hand, emphasizes what od does for us.

After all, the essence of Christian octrine is humility. Pride is still the ubtlest and strongest temptation. It ssails the Christian worker at every tep. And pride is the one thing that s most apt to overthrow him and hange him from a giant to a dwarf. aith means that we are not thinking bout self but about God. Faith eans that we are not thinking about ur own cleverness or gifts or experince or skill, but about God's power. aith means not that we are expectng to do great things, but that we are xpecting God to do great things. aith means not that we are trying to ake ourselves holy and useful, but hat we are letting God make us holy nd letting him push his power out nto other lives through the channel of ur yielded hearts.

The beautiful thing about believing od is that every one can do it. If it vere a matter of climbing up or digging down (see Rom. 10: 6-9), or of uying or of learning, some one would e left out. But everybody can trust Jesus. The world and the church ave many needs to-day, but greater han all others is the need of men and women and young men and young women and boys and girls who believe God, people who are "rich in faith."

You can have all the faith you want to. Nobody can prevent your trusting God. Begin now; make up your mind that, whatever others may do, you are going to be among the people who are "full of faith." "And nothing shall be impossible unto you."

Swift and Jubilant Advance*

RALLY DAY looks both backward and forward. It reviews the past. It gathers our forces together for a brave and determined look into the future. Some of the things we see in the immediate future are thrilling. They echo the cry of the old Battle Hymn of the Republic, of which one great line has been taken for our Rally Day topic: "Be swift, my soul, to answer; be jubilant, my feet."

Dr. Parkhurst, in a recent review of Josiah Strong's new book, Our World, states that the volume "commends itself to the attention of those who are interested in the trend of present events and in the social crisis which we all somehow suspect to be approaching." That word "all" is scarcely an exaggeration. Civilization has reached a great crisis. Social wrong and injustice and oppression have more enemies and more determined enemies than ever before. Something is going to happen. It may not be very sudden. It need not be violent. But a change is going to take place in the world's plan of life.

There are two big questions that concern us to-night. What part is the Epworth League going to take in bringing about this brighter and juster day? What part am I to have in it? In this small corner there is room for only a few terse pieces of counsel.

Be frank. Do not be afraid to look at conditions squarely. Keep your soul open for truth and for the voice of justice and charity. Be brave. Speak out strongly and clearly when the time comes for your word. Work with tongue and hand and foot for the new day. Be swift. That is part of the exhortation of the topic. Do not be impatient; but do not delay. Be one of the "minute-men." Be jubilant. Believe that things are coming out right. Be glad that you have a chance to help. Be glad if there are dangers and difficulties in the way. Be glad that gladness is going to spread over wider territories and into farther and more hidden corners. Be obedient—obedient to truth. Obedient, above all, and every minute, to Jesus Christ, our Captain and our Saviour, who has led us to the present hour of revelation and conviction, and will lead us through to victory.

* "LEAGUE RALLY DAY." "Be Swift My Soul to Answer Him, Be Jubilant My Feet." Epworth League Topic for Sunday, September 7, 1913. Judges 7: 16-21; 6: 34, 35; Joel 2: 15, 28, 29.

For Colored Students

THE Slater Industrial and State Normal School for colored people at Winston-Salem, N. C., is making a noble effort to meet an offer which the State has made for the development of the work of that institution. Its present equipment is valued at $50,000, and the work it has done for the colored people of North Carolina and other States of the South is worthy of high praise. The State of North Carolina has offered $12,000 on condition that a like amount be raised by the school. The students have pledged themselves to donate the labor necessary to erect the new buildings, and white friends of the school who realize the importance of its work are giving and collecting the money. Mr. J. P. Rawley of New York is donating time and energy from his business to aid in the raising of the amount needed to close the bargain with the State.

STOPPED SHORT

Taking Tonics, and Built up on Right Food

The mistake is frequently made of trying to build up a worn-out nervous system on so-called tonics—drugs.

New material from which to rebuild wasted nerve cells, is what should be supplied, and this can be obtained only from proper food.

"Two years ago I found myself on the verge of a complete nervous collapse, due to overwork and study, and to illness in the family," writes a Wis. young mother.

"My friends became alarmed because I grew pale and thin and could not sleep nights. I took various tonics prescribed by physicians, but their effects wore off shortly after I stopped taking them. My food did not seem to nourish me and I gained no flesh nor blood.

"Reading of Grape-Nuts, I determined to stop the tonics and see what a change of diet would do. I ate Grape-Nuts four times a day with cream and drank milk also, went to bed early after eating a dish of Grape-Nuts before retiring.

"In about two weeks I was sleeping soundly. In a short time gained 20 lbs. in weight and felt like a different woman. My little daughter whom I was obliged to keep out of school last spring on account of chronic catarrh, has changed from a thin, pale nervous child to a rosy, healthy girl, and has gone back to school this fall.

"Grape-Nuts and fresh air were the only agents used to accomplish the happy results."

GOLDEN FRUIT

From a painting by Hugo Vogel

The night is perfect and the scene on the lawn under the swinging lanterns is a gay one. The girls are wearing their most charming white dresses, while the men with their light summer clothes are equally in the spirit of the occasion.

A silent but largely contributing factor to the brilliance of the scene is Ivory Soap. Those delicate white garments would not look so pretty but for this mild, pure cleanser. In keeping better-than-ordinary fabrics not only clean but as white, sweet-smelling, soft and unworn as when new, nothing is to be compared with Ivory Soap. You know the reason:

Ivory contains no free alkali—it cannot harm the most delicate silks, linens and laces. It contains no coloring matter—it cannot stain or discolor the whitest of white goods. It contains no inferior ingredients—it cannot leave a strong odor. Ivory is nothing but pure soap, and that of the highest quality which can be made.

Remember these general directions and you should be able to keep your white clothes spotless, sweet and none the worse for repeated washings: 1st—Wash one piece at a time. 2nd—Use lukewarm water. 3rd—Wash by working garment up and down in suds; do not rub garment on a washboard nor rub soap on the garment. 4th—Use Ivory Soap—nothing else.

THE EXPERIENCES OF A TRAVELER IN PANAMA SIXTY YEARS AGO CONTRASTED WITH THE PRESENT DEVELOPMENT

THE MODERN CITY OF PANAMA AT THE PACIFIC END OF THE CANAL

T WOULD be difficult to imagine a sharper contrast than that presented by the Canal ne of to-day and the same rip of country sixty years o. To-day a mighty canal, e world's most spectacur engineering feat, is aring completion, where xty years ago there was tle but virgin forest. Part the Panama Canal is mpleted; its waters stand ady for the commerce hose demands called them to being. The work on the nfinished portion is being shed toward completion. or months the water has en gathering in the artifial Gatun Lake and, as has lready been announced, ill flood the last section of ne giant cut on October 10. few months later the ugest vessels afloat may ass from a modern city at ne Atlantic end of the cal to a modern city on the acific. How different this ill be from the passage of he Isthmus of Panama in 853 is shown in the follow-ng story from an old diary.

Mr. Joseph Mansfield Long, a government official f Washington, D. C., sends us this extract from his ather's diary, saying:

In connection with a government contract, my ather, Jonathan D. Long, went to San Francisco n 1853. The shorter route across the plains was hen very uncertain and dangerous, and governnent employees usually went by way of the isthmus. The journey consisted of a steamer trip to Aspinvall, now Colon, then by the partially completed ailroad to Barbacoas through country now overlowed by the artificial Gatun Lake, a short river rip, and finally a long day's journey on foot or by nule over the old trail from Cruces to Panama, where a steamer was taken for San Francisco. The route closely conformed to the line of the present excavations for the canal, and the following acount, taken from an old diary recently discovered, s a graphic representation of the difficulties experienced by early travelers:

Arrived at Aspinwall (Colon) at 3 o'clock this morning (Monday, July 17). Got my luggage aboard the cars at once. For breakfast had some curious dishes, of which I ate with a good appetite. We started at 9 o'clock on the train. The scenery is beautiful, many flowers in bloom and tropical fruits growing on the trees, some of the latter having vines growing down from the ends of the branches. Many of these would take root at the end, others would swing loose, which made them look like the wreck of a ship with the masts standing and the rigging flying loose. The cars are to carry us to Barbacoas for eight dollars.

There we took boats for Cruces. We made a bargain with the captain of a small boat to take six of us and no more for two dollars apiece, and he was to start as soon as he got our luggage on board. This done, we took our seats for the ride, and in a few minutes the captain appeared with a trunk on his shoulder, followed by two more passengers, a man and a woman. We were not going to stand that, and so found another man and making the same bargain with him started him off as soon as we got aboard. It has been a trick with the natives to overload the boats and when they come to the rapids upset them, let the passengers drown and take possession of the baggage—so it was told us by some old Californians that were in our party, and we were guarding against that.

We stopped at Gorgona and made a dinner from some bread and sardines bought there. We got to Cruces at about half past eight o'clock and left our baggage at the transportation office, to be put through to Panama in two days for 11 cents a pound.

Cruces is a dreary-looking place. The huts are made of poles set in the ground and thatched with palm leaf. The natives are a savage-looking set, but are very civil to us so far. We enjoyed the ride on the river very much. We are to sleep on cots set in the dining-room at a house kept by a Jamaica man who speaks very good English. I have been to church twice to-day, once at Gorgona and once at Cruces. At Tivoli I went to a fandango in the evening and saw the natives dance, Sunday being a holiday with them.

Next morning started at eight o'clock for the isthmus on foot. A short distance out we came to a mudhole and I had a good mind to go back and get a mule, but a little farther on we struck a narrow pass where it was difficult for a man to walk down and so much more to ride down that I was glad I was afoot. And so it was all the way through—first a mudhole with mud to your knees and then a narrow pass. These passes are paths worn in the rocks in some places five to eight feet deep, with just room for one man or mule to squeeze through. They are from fifty to two hundred feet long. Before entering one, they stop and holloa as loud as they can, and then if no answer comes back they conclude that the way is clear. This precaution is taken to prevent trouble, as if two mules meet in the passage one or the other must back out, and it sometimes leads to unpleasant discussions as to which shall be the one.

We had now gotten fairly started and went through this first pass without any trouble. There were five of us in company on the walk across. We found refreshment shanties all along the route kept by persons who could speak a little English. You could get a cup of coffee for a dime, a piece of pie or cake for a dime, a cigar costs the same, in fact the dime seems to be the prevailing coin on the isthmus. After traveling till we began to feel tired we came to the Seven Mile House, got some coffee and something to eat, rested a little and started on. Two of our party jogged on ahead, two lagged behind, while I went alone. Sometimes I would meet two or three of the natives with their long knives, which might make one a little fearful, but no one offered to meddle with me. These knives are called by the natives machetes, and are carried by a long strap over the shoulder and under the arm, almost reaching the ground. They use them for all purposes—fight with them, cut up their food, split kindling, chop down poles for a house, nearly everything.

Farther on I came to the "Halfway House," and debated whether I should rest again. I was surprised that we should be anywhere near halfway through our journey yet. Near the house was a bad mudhole, and while I hesitated a woman came along on a mule and fell down, either through her inexperience or the mule's obstinacy, I don't know which. We pulled her out and the mule likewise. Two or three more came through it in bad shape. After getting out of the mud they took sticks and scraped each other off as well as they could, seeming to enjoy the ridiculousness of it as much as any of us. Getting more mules, they went ahead in good spirits, although many more such places were before them to be crossed before they got to their journey's end.

I waited till the rest of the party came up and then started on. After traveling two or three miles we came to another "Halfway House." We now knew the first one was a fraud, and sent back word to the others not to stop there. But we rested here, got dinner, and continued our tramp. We were quite cheerful, as we had traveled half the distance, according to the sign on the house, and were not very tired yet. We passed by several other booths without stopping, and four or five miles farther on, when we thought we must be nearing Panama, came finally to the true "Halfway House"! I must acknowledge I now began to feel tired, and so did the rest. We had been as shrewd as any Yankees could be and had not been cheated by anything except these treacherous signs. We sat on the bank a while and watched the last sign, to see if it would not change to something more agreeable. After a while the landlord came over to us and asked us if we wouldn't come in and have something to eat. We asked him the distance to Panama, and he said, eleven miles, and no less. We were so tired now that we felt as if we had done a hard day's work. Finally we concluded that if we had eleven miles more to walk we would call the dinner we ate a lunch, and get dinner of him. He promised us some Yankee baked beans, chicken stew, etc., for a dollar apiece. We asked him whether we could get to Panama that night, and he advised us not to start till after sunset, when it would be cooler.

We ate dinner with him and at this place had an addition to our number of a man who had two mules, one to ride on and the other to carry his luggage. The one he rode had laid down with him three times, so he gave a native three dollars to drive his baggage in, while he walked with us. The road was good for a short distance, and we had just concluded we should get along nicely when we came to a very bad mudhole with loose stones at the bottom which would slip from under your feet. One of our number fell down and hurt his knee and another's boots hurt him so he could hardly walk. Just then we came to a house kept by a native who wanted to lodge us. Some of our party wanted to stop, but I said I would not if one man would go ahead with me, and one said he would. He was the man that had hired the two mules. Finally, however, we all agreed to stick together and go through that night, and so we did. It was now dark, but the moon came up and we went on quite cheerfully.

Soon we came to a river that we were to cross by wading. The only way we could keep our path was by heading for an opening in the woods on the other side. But after we had taken up the path again we found we were wrong, as it brought us back to the river. So we divided, some of the party going up the river and some down, with the understanding that whoever found the path was to "holloa" until the rest came. We soon heard the "holloa" and started on the new path, not sure at first that we were right, but it finally proved so. We stumbled along, looking no doubt like drunken men, some on one side of the path, some on the other. We were too tired to talk. Once in a while some one would try to get up a laugh when one made a misstep, but it was hollow with little heart to it.

AN HISTORIC MOMENT, WHEN THE STEAM SHOV WORKING FROM THE ATLANTIC AND PACIFI ENDS OF THE CANAL MET ON THE AFTERNOON OF MAY 20, 1913

et us review in broad outline the salient features of his remarkable faith; no such theology had ever appeared in the world before. Aton, the sun, ather, "the heat which is in Aton," was the true god. He centered the eyes is followers upon the sun's disc, and then taught them of that force which the author of the dazzling orb to which they rendered homage, and of its gy as typified in its lifegiving heat. Akhnaton defined Aton as the form- less essence, the binding force "which runs through all things and doth all unite." "Like a flash of blinding light in the night time, Aton stands out for a moment amid the black Egyptian darkness, and disappears once more—the first signal to this world of the future religion of the West."

Akhnaton was the first apostle of the simple life, for he searched for God not in cloud and darkness, the roaring of the whirlwind or the smoke of battle, but in the little things of life, in the rustling of the leaves, among the tiny chicks just hatched from the shell, amidst the flowers and trees and growing things. "Joy," "happiness," "truth," "gentleness," "love" were watchwords of his faith. His Aton was the tender, loving Father of all people, ever-present, ever-mindful of his creatures, taking heed that not even a sparrow fell to the ground without his knowledge. "Thou fillest the two lands of Egypt with thy love," wrote Akhnaton many a century before the Hebrew Psalmist sang of God: "Like as a father pitieth his children, even so is the Lord merciful." The compassionate hand of Aton was outstretched in mercy to mankind; it reached down to the beasts of the field; it protected the little flowers and tiny insects. No man ever more clearly attributed to God unspeakable goodness and boundless loving-kindness. Aton was the Father of all mankind, the first deity not in any sense national or tribal.

No graven image of Aton was ever chiseled. He was not "great above all other gods," but was "the living Aton, besides whom there is no other."

Most important of all was sincerity, honesty, truth. A tomb inscription of one of his followers reads thus: "I have set truth in my inward parts, and falsehood is my loathing; for I know that the king rejoiceth in truth."

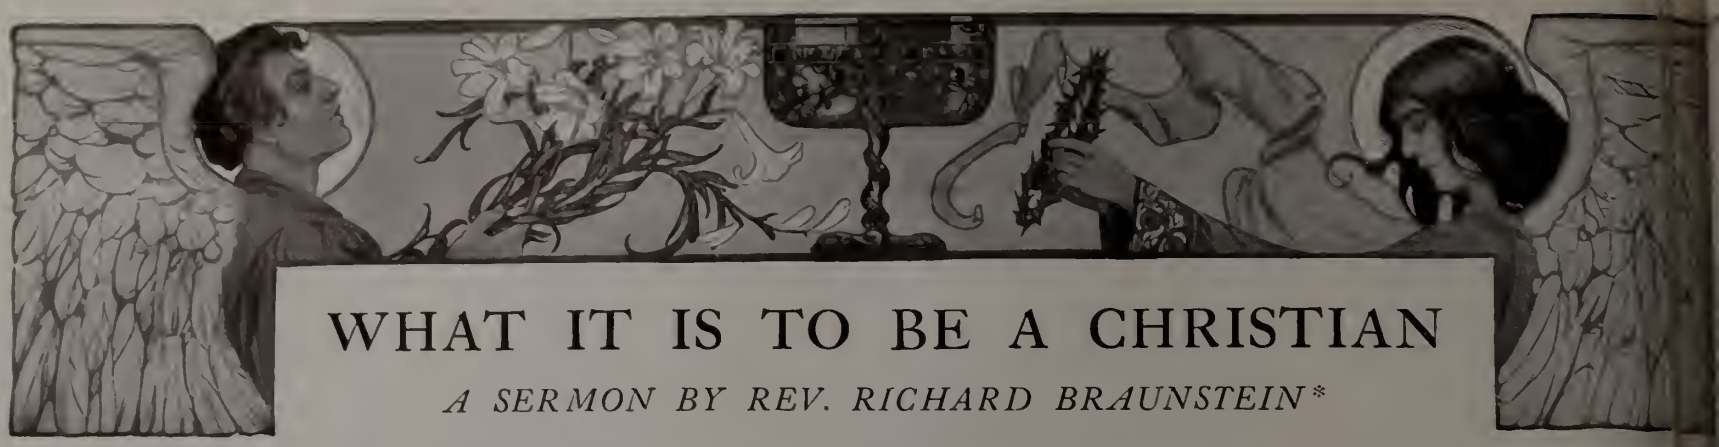
Of special emphasis, both because of its result upon the new religion and to Akhnaton personally, was the fact that Aton was "the Lord of peace," utterly opposed to bloodshed and strife. "In an age of military renown, when the sword and buckler, the plumed helmet and shirt of mail glittered in every street and upon every highway," Akhnaton preached from a throne the doctrine of the brotherhood of man and dreamed of universal peace.

Akhnaton loved his wife and daughters with a tender, abiding affection, and endeavored to elevate the position of women and the sacredness of the family. Always in public the queen was at his side, and around his feet his children romped and played. Contrary to all precedent, his wife is represented in his reliefs as of the same size as himself.

While Akhnaton was thus endeavoring to inculcate into his people thoughts they could not comprehend and ideals too lofty for their view, the old cults of the gods whom he had banished into outer darkness were deadly hostile. His doctrines were not as readily accepted as he had hoped. The foreign provinces were in open revolt. He was the recipient of insulting letters from princes whom, by the lifting of his finger, he could have blotted out of existence. His friends pleaded, prayed for help. Those faithful to him, shut up, besieged in his Syrian cities, cried out to him for deliverance, and died because it was withheld. How the young Pharaoh must have suffered; how his heart surely ached! Yet he remained true in deed and spirit to his creed and refused to offend his God by offering battle. In consequence his foreign possessions were lopped off and utterly lost.

Strenuous opposition to the new religion now permeated to all classes and ranks. What counted a creed, what mattered all the gods when Egypt's proud empire was breaking up? Akhnaton saw before his eyes signs which could only be interpreted as pointing to his absolute undoing. The misery of failure was his, the blackness of despair, around him the darkness of coming death. His feeble frame was overwhelmed, and simultaneously with the fall of his empire, Akhnaton died. "Thus," writes the historian, "disappeared the most remarkable figure in early Oriental history; thus died such a spirit as the world had never seen before."

A few years ago Mr. Davis of Providence, R. I., the celebrated American Egyptologist, discovered in one of the old tomb shafts at Thebes the mummified body of Akhnaton, which now rests in the Egyptian Museum at Cairo.



WHAT IT IS TO BE A CHRISTIAN

*A SERMON BY REV. RICHARD BRAUNSTEIN

TEXT: "And who then is willing to consecrate his service this day unto the Lord?" I Chron. 29: 5

CONSECRATION is a word which religious people are fond of using, but it might be well employed by all who care to win success in life, for the secret of life is in it. It means consecration of all energy upon a single object, by which our talents, work and time are kept from distraction by a score of ends and saved from dissipation and waste among numberless frivolities. There may be consecration to bad purposes and the greed of a Shylock or the ambition of a Napoleon, absorbing their whole natures, meets with success here. "Verily, I say unto you, they have their reward."

The world always renders a spontaneous and instinctive admiration even for selfish and wicked men who stake their all on a venture, do their best, strain every nerve, and bring up every reserve force; men who exert their whole consummate genius in the determination to win their place and carry their point.

The Strength of Consecration

Browning, the most Christian poet of the nineteenth century, in his poem, "The Statue and the Bust," rebukes the cowardice and inefficiency even of a bad man who failed in his wicked schemes through lack of boldness and resolution. Weakness makes even badness detestable.

That is, the man who is weak, hesitating and pusillanimous when his heart is set upon the commission of evil, would be equally ineffectual should he try to do good. The vice tests him the same as the virtue would. "To be weak is to be miserable." So Browning continues:

> Let man contend to the uttermost
> For his life's set prize, be it what it will.

And to those on the side of virtue who might join issue with him concerning this dangerous sounding doctrine, he put the question: "How strive you?" and intimates that his fable is peculiarly for their instruction. Certainly, we may learn much from the children of this world who, in their generation, are wiser than the children of light. How eagerly in this intense world do men seek for wealth, or political preferment, and the plaudits of their fellows! Their ambition, zeal, economy of time, restless, tireless energy, and devotion of day and night, leaving no stone unturned and no means untried, which may lead to success—all stand as a rebuke to the listlessness and apathy with which some Christians seek their spiritual culture. Would that we might turn all the fierce, turbulent, rushing energy of our century sweeping on like a mighty, resistless flood into the channels of Christian growth and activity! We are doing it measurably, but we must quicken our pace and double our zeal if we would keep religiously abreast of the world, whose times and tides, more truly now than ever before, wait for no man.

Do men entertain only the consuming aim in life to glorify our Father in heaven? Are men trying to realize his truth and righteousness and business in life? Are men seeking first the kingdom of God and his righteousness? This is consecration—to take the vow upon you; it is not necessarily an ecstasy, much less a dreamy meditation or piece of idle mysticism. It is of the will, a purpose, an ambition, and a settled determination to subordinate all things to the supreme end of a religious conception and fulfilment of life.

And it is consistent with all proper lower objects to be attained in life—all things that belong to our natural lives. It is not an impracticable thing and does not necessitate our going out of the world, but takes up into its mighty sweep every other good thing and project and deepens and ennobles life by making it all culminate in the highest ideal. It is the narrowing of the stream to increase its current and force.

Consecration—utter self-committal, absolute self-surrender, is the only way of peace. It is the only way to win the respect of the crowd and the admiration of the world that despises fast-and-loose methods.

It is always in our power to compel the world's reverence. Even the world admires faithfulness and whole-heartedness. All compromise is failure. Agnosticism paralyzes. Doubt and vacillation bring no victories. It is by what we believe, cherish, stand by, live for, die for, that we triumph. If one is to be a Christian he must be one. He must not mince matters. He must be willing to be changed himself, instead of having his fortune and condition changed. If a man is to be a Christian, it is necessary that he change his viewpoint as well as his environment. The one miracle that Christ could not do was to give to bad men the effects of goodness or to commandment-breaking men the rewards of righteousness. But this he did do, and this he does to-day: if men are willing, he can change bad men into good and sinners into saints. By consecration it is possible to be an out and out Christian. It is impossible to be loyal and efficient and yet live an anonymous believer—timid, apologetic, fearful of confession, ashamed of one's vow, half-way in service, praying to God for mercy, and serving the devil. We shall overcome the world only as we throw ourselves into Christian work with all the glow and fervor of youth and enthusiasm, and have Pentecostal fires blazing in brain and heart. All over the world are earnest men and women, consecrated characters, making plain their answer to the oft-repeated question, "What is religion?" It is such characters as these that take away the milk-sop, pretense-of-religion kind of life. Like Jesus, their Master, they are in earnest; they are busy about their Father's business; they are turning the world upside down; they are spiritual pathfinders, showing prodigal, erring, rebel hearts the way home to God's throne, which is mercy and not marble, which is love and not wrath, which is peace and rest and not chaos.

Consecration's Progress

By their consecration they stand, asserting righteousness, living their principles in all walks of life. They carry their religion into the home, school, social life and marketplace. They are living epistles, known and read of all men. The world, reading their lives, desires to be better, and becomes acquainted with God. The multitude beholding their devotion comes to the knowledge of the truth and realizes that to follow the Christ is the life worth while. They are rich in good works, standing like drawn swords unsheathed for conflict with all things that are not good and pure and right.

Such a person will not lend himself, will not be a cipher in a crowd, an atom in a conflict, but will speak out what he believes to be right. Such a person is one who, by consecration, will win before God and man and be instrumental in building character and making citizenship for heaven.

True consecration is progressive. Progression is a pot full of energy and activity that in order to be of use and achieve perfection must be kept boiling continually. There should be no such thing as a passive religion. It must be active or die, and consecration will keep it alive. It will fan the flame. It will set hearts on fire, and thaw cold motives and give them the new song—the kind that twice-born men alone can sing; the song that has lifted on its wings of melody countless saints who from their labors now do rest; the new song that makes a sin-sick, weary earth praise God and acknowledge his Son as Saviour.

Consecration is not an afterthought, nor a postscript, foot-note or addendum; it is the vital part of religion; it is its life's blood. Everybody knows the chemical analysis of stagnant water. It is full of all manner of squirming animalcules, visible and invisible, of no earthly use to anybody or anything but swarms of flies or musty glossaries. Consecration in religion means life, work, action; it means a live man and a live church; it means a live prayer-meeting; it means resurrection, and clothes the old immortal theme in new glory; it means integrity, charity, unselfishness, sacrifices, service; it means God first, then honor, sincerity, truthfulness, purity, and a white soul; it means every attribute of Christ's character. And let any one follow any other line than that of consecration and sc later the pockmarks show themselves and t pear the scars of stoicism. True, consecr ligion, the kind the church of God needs world is waiting for, is no holiday play. It great indefatigability. Indefatigability n go; it is a very practical essential in the ing of Christian character; it is the vise th its object; it is the magnet that attracts, glue that holds the weaker parts together.

The world applauds the indefatigable ref politicians, explorers and scientists. But al else, give us the indefatigable Christians! who stand the test; those who hold fast; th never let go; those whose religion makes th ter, happier, gladder, freer; those who joy to-morrow, next week, next year, forever; religion is never mournful, never lugubri funereal; who criticize only themselves a their neighbors.

"Here Am I, Send Me"

After all, give us a religion that makes u not sad; a religion that the chirpings of th in the grasses, or twittering in the tree-to with bursting throats whirling in mid-air back to the heart in happiest notes of joy, ri liquid and clear, like crystal drops over peb silver, rather than a religion that can recogni notes of a mourning dove with all its opp forebodings.

The tyranny of sin determines the plan by w it must be conquered. The radical selfishne sin can be overcome by altruism, which is the site to selfishness. DAILY MEDITATION

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR

BY REV. J. H. JOWETT, D.D.

SUNDAY, September 7. Luke 10: 21-28. The secret of life is to love the Lord our God, and our neighbors as ourselves. But how are we to love the Lord? We cannot manufacture love. We cannot love to order. We cannot by an act of will command its appearing. No, not these ways is love created. Love is not a work, it is a fruit. It grows suitable soils, and it is our part to prepare the soils. When the conditions are congenial, love appears, just as the crocus and the snowdrop appear in the congenial air of the spring.

What, then, can we do? We can seek the Lord's society. We can think about him. We can read about him. We can fill our imaginations with the grace of his life and service. We can be much with him, talking to him in prayer, singing to him in praise, telling him our yearnings, and confessing to him our defeats. And love will be quietly born. For this is how love is born between heart and heart. Two people are "much together," and love is born! And when we are much with the Lord, we are with One who already loves us with an everlasting love. We are with One who yearns for our love and who seeks in every way to win it. "We love him because he first loved us."

And when we truly love God, every other kind of holy love will follow. Loving him we shall love our neighbors. Given the fountain the rivers are sure.

MONDAY, September 8. Exodus 20: 12-21. "Honor thy father and mother." I am afraid we are losing this noble grace. Life is becoming more and more discourteous, and flippant, and shallow. We have "no time for decorations"! It is "not the day for filigree"! If the pillar has strength, it can do without the lily-work! And so life is becoming more crude, and abrupt, and we are in peril of confusing plainness with simplicity. The old-fashioned stateliness is going. The old-world courtesy has almost gone, and we are making a fetish of a freedom which is devoid of grace.

"Honor thy father and mother." "Hallowed be Thy name." Perhaps we are losing the former because we are losing the latter. Courtesy always withers when reverence dies. Courtesy feeds upon reverence. Impoverish the one and we starve the other. And so we are to bring back our lost courtesies by first of all restoring our lost reverence. If we are flippant with God, a thousand other flippancies will spring to birth. And thus the home must seek its restorations in the sanctuary. Establish reverence in the holy place and courteous relations will appear in the home and in the market. If we truly revere the Lord, we shall truly "honor all men."

TUESDAY, September 9. John 14: 15-24. "He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me." Yes, but how can I keep them? Some one sent me a bulb which requires a certain kind of soil, but he also sent me the soil in which to grow it. He sent instructions, but he also sent power. And when I am bidden to keep a commandment I feel as though I have received the bulb but not the soil! But is this God's way of dealing with his people? I will read on if perchance I may find the gift of the soil.

"He that abideth in me . . . the same bringeth forth much fruit." That is the gift I seek. For the keeping of his commandments the Lord provides himself. I am not called upon to raise fruits out of the soil of my own will, out of my own infirmity of aspiration or desire. I can rest everything in God! I can "abide in him," and I may have the holy energies of the Godhead to produce in me the fruits of a holy and obedient life. The good Lord provides both the bulb and the soil.

It is the tragedy of life that we forget this, and seek to make a soil-bed of our own. And thus do we suffer the calamity of fruitless labor, the heavy drudgery of tasks beyond our strength. "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

WEDNESDAY, September 10. Leviticus 19: 11-18. "Thou shalt not bear any grudge." How searching is that demand upon the soul! My forgiveness of my brother is to be complete. No sullenness is to remain, no sulky temper which so easily gives birth to thunder and lightning. There is to be no painful aloofness, no assumption of a superiority which rains contempt upon the offender. When I forgive I am not to carry any powder forward on the journey. I am to empty out all my explosives, all my ammunition of anger and revenge. I am not to "bear any grudge."

I cannot meet this demand. It is altogether beyond me. I might utter words of forgiveness, but I cannot reveal a clear, bright, blue sky without a touch of storm brewing anywhere. But the Lord of grace can do it for me. He can change my weather. He can create a new climate. He can "renew a right spirit within me," and in that holy atmosphere nothing shall live which seeks to poison and destroy. Grudges shall die "like cloud-spots in the dawn." Revenge, that awful creation of the unclean, feverish soul, shall give place to good-will, the strong genial presence which makes its home in the new heart.

THURSDAY, September 11. Matthew 19: 16-22. The rich young ruler consecrated a part, but was unwilling to consecrate the whole. He hallowed the inch but not the mile. He would go part of the way but not to the end. And the peril is upon us all. We give ourselves to the Lord but we reserve some liberties. We offer him our house, but we mark some rooms "private." And that word "private," denying the Lord admission, crucifies him afresh. He has no joy in the house so long as any rooms are withheld.

Mr. F. B. Meyer has told us how his early Christian life was marred, and his ministry paralyzed, just because he had kept back one key from the bunch of keys he had given to the Lord. Every key save one! The key of one room kept for personal use, and the Lord shut out. And the effects of the incomplete consecration were found in lack of power, lack of assurance, lack of joy and peace.

The "joy of the Lord" begins when we hand over the last key. We sit with Christ on his throne as soon as we have surrendered all our crowns, and made him sole and only ruler of our life and its possessions. The last touch of consecration lands us in the very heart of God's eternal peace.

FRIDAY, September 12. Psalm 78: 1-8. "We will not hide them from their children." Our yesterdays are to be the teachers of our children. We are to take them over our road, and show them the pitfalls where we stumbled, and the snares that lured us away. And we are to show them how we found the springs of grace, and how the Lord made himself known to us in daily providence and care. We are to relate his exploits, "his wonderful dealings with the children of men." We must make our life witness of God to our children, and when their minds roam over our road they must see it radiant with the grace and mercy of the Lord.

The best inheritance I can give my child is a steadfast witness of my knowledge of God. The testimony of a light that never failed may give him the needful wisdom when his own way becomes troubled with clouds and darkness. And what a story it is, this story of the deeds of our gracious God! It is full of quickening for weary and desponding souls. It is a perfect reservoir of inspiration for those whose desire has failed, and in whose lives the wells of impulse have become dry. Let us bring forward yesterday's wealth to enrich the life of to-day. "Do ye not remember the miracle of the loaves?"

SATURDAY, September 13. Deuteronomy 4: 5-13. "Lest thou forget!" That is surely the worst affront we can put upon anybody! We may oppose a man and hinder him in his work. Or we may directly injure him. Or we may ignore him, and treat him as nothing. Or we may forget him! Opposition, injury, contempt, neglect, forgetfulness! Surely this is a descending scale, and the last is the worst. And yet we can forget the Lord God! We can forget all his benefits. We can easily put him out of mind. We can live as though he were dead. "My children have forgotten me!"

What shall we do to escape this great disaster? "Take heed to thyself." To take heed is to be at the helm and not asleep in the cabin. It is to steer and not to drift. It is to keep our eyes on the compass, and our hands on the wheel. It is to know where we are going! We never deliberately forget our Lord; we carelessly drift into it. "Take heed!"

"And keep thy soul diligently." Gardens run to seed, and ill weeds grow apace. The fair things are crowded out, and the weeds reign everywhere. It is ever so with my soul. If I neglect it, the flowers of holy desire and devotion will be choked by weeds of worldliness. God will be crowded out, and the garden of the soul will become a wilderness of neglect and sin. "Keep thy soul diligently."

These Daily Meditations will appear in each issue through 1913

MESSAGES FROM PRESENT-DAY POETS

ULD YOU ONLY COME BACK!

OULD you only come back, little fellow, to me, n the land where your spirit forever is free, might muss up my collar, and rumple my shirt, ou might dent every floor with the point of your top,— though your small fingers might fill me with dirt, should nevermore peevishly tell you to stop!

ld you only come back, little fellow, to me—ld you heed when I call you, and hearken the plea,— might load down your pockets with rocks every day—ou might spatter your best Sunday garments, my lad;
And though you should throw all my trinkets away,
I should strive to be kind, and should scorn to "get mad."

Would you only come back, little fellow, to me.
From that Home where you romp with the angels in glee,
You might scratch up the furniture, mark on the wall,
And deface every volume you found in my den.
You might litter the parlor and shout in the hall,
But I never should scold you, ah, never again.

Could you only come back, little fellow, to me—
Could you kneel as you used to, once more at my knee—
I should hold your heart close, to atone for my loss,
And should bid you to pray the dear God, who is good,
To forgive your poor daddy for having been cross;—
And I feel if you asked it, my boy, that he would!

THE HARVEST

CHRISTIAN brother, sow the seed;
Sow it wheresoe'er you go.
Oh, how many souls have need
Of the harvest you may grow!
Scatter good seed everywhere;
Follow it with fervent prayer.

Some good seed, in fallow ground,
Will produce a hundred fold;
In some fields much less is found,
But the gain is purest gold.
Sow good seed where'er you can;
Honor God by helping man.

Helping those whom we can aid
Is the sowing of the seed;
Hold not back from any grade,
High or low, if such have need.
Sowing thus brings greatest gain;
Helping hands toil not in vain.

Noble deeds a harvest win,
Worthy of the highest aim;
Those who battle hard with sin
Help to banish crime and shame.
Let each word and action tell
For the King we love so well.

Jesus! Saviour! King of kings!
Rightfully his reign we own;
His good Spirit ever brings Blessings where his Word is sown.
Great the harvesting shall be,
Now and in eternity.

A WEEK IN THE WORLD'S NEWS

Huerta Rejects Peace Proposals

THE diplomatic negotiations of Mr. John Lind, President Wilson's representative in Mexico City, with Provisional President Huerta received a severe jolt on August 20 when Mexico's chief executive informed the State Department at Washington that he would not entertain the proposals set forth by Mr. Lind. A number of interviews had taken place between Mr. Lind and General Huerta and the situation seemed most encouraging, when suddenly word reached Washington through a news agency that Mexico had published an ultimatum, giving the United States twenty-four hours in which to recognize the present administration. No action has been taken which would justify the supposition that this report was true, though one of the most recent despatches states that Mr. Lind's interviews with the reporters were evidently intended to give the impression that the original report was unfounded, without involving an actual statement to that effect. No retraction has been made by officials of the Mexican Government.

In spite of official assertions in Washington that the developments showed slight improvement in the Mexican situation, diplomatic circles take a serious view of the whole matter. Some of the foreign diplomats who observe the whole drama from the viewpoint of outsiders believe that little has been achieved except hopelss entanglement. A despatch from Mexico City states that the Mexican Government has decided not to make public the text of its reply to Mr. Lind's proposals, and has expressed the hope that the same attitude would be observed in Washington. So far this hope has been fulfilled, and the only statement has been an unofficial one made through the reporters and which was telegraphed to the New York Times in the following words:

President Huerta of Mexico has taken the ground that the course of the Wilson administration in its endeavor to bring about a restoration of order in the Southern republic is not in accord with the sentiment of the United States Congress and the American people. He has intimated baldly that President Wilson's refusal to recognize the Huerta government is not a popular policy in the United States, and he evidently has determined to stand pat on his rejection of the proposals laid before him by President Wilson's representative. General Huerta has indicated an honest or pretended belief that any measure of reprisal against Mexico undertaken by the President would meet a rebuff at the hands of Congress.

It was emphasized by Mr. Lind in his communication to the State Department that President Huerta had been extremely cordial during the interview and had shown an entire willingness to discuss and give consideration to the arguments of the presidential emissary in behalf of the program of President Wilson. It is gathered, however, from what was said by officials to-night, that Huerta regards the recognition of his government by the United States as a condition precedent to a formal consideration by the Mexican administration of the suggestion of American mediation which Mr. Lind put forward.

Shortage of the Corn Crop

FIGURES recently published show that the annual corn crop of the United States is almost a half a billion bushels short of the anticipated amount. As an incident of this sort is very apt to be made the basis of cries of "hard times" by those whose interests are served by the creation of such an impression the New York Times on August 18 wisely commented on the event as follows:

It is useless and foolish to minimize the loss. It is the part of wisdom to appreciate its exact worth and meaning. The loss is reckoned from an unprecedented total, leaving a remnant not far from an average and large for most years. The loss of corn is like any other loss, it is serious rather in its relations than in its absolute total. The loss of whatever amount of corn is less important than the loss of the same amount of any other grain, wheat especially. It is so because there is a larger supply of both old and new corn from which to make the subtractions.

The comparative stability of the security market under a loss which once would have caused a small spasm in stocks cannot have escaped attention. It is due to the fact that our manufactures are displacing our crops in our exports. Within ten years our exports of manufactures have increased $719,000,000, and are now nearly half our total exports. Our crops have been above the average recently, but including the exports of crops and all other articles than manufactures the decade's increase is but $317,000,000. It is as wrong to forget the increasing importance of manufactures, a permanent factor in our economic conditions, as it is to emphasize the loss of even a half billion bushels of corn in a single year.

Peace Congress at The Hague

FROM the 19th to the 23d of August the twentieth universal Peace Congress was in session in Knight's Hall, The Hague, Holland. The Congress, which was under the patronage of Prince Henry of the Netherlands, carried on discussions of international law, the events of the year connected with peace and war, the possibility of the enforcement of international law by means of an international police force, limitation of armaments and the place of the public press in the propaganda for permanent peace. A reception was given on the evening of the 19th by the municipality of The Hague. Nearly a thousand delegates were present and heard the speech of the burgomaster, who advised prudence and moderation in their deliberations.

Investment Bankers' Convention

THE Second Annual Convention of the Investment Bankers' Association of America, it is announced, will be held on October 28, 29 and 30 next, at the Blackstone Hotel, Chicago. This will be the largest gathering of investment bankers ever held, and representatives from about five hundred of the leading investment banking houses in the United States and Canada will attend. The seventy-five houses that comprise the Chicago membership in the association are making elaborate plans for this year's meeting. L. B. Franklin of the Guaranty Trust Company, New York City, is directing arrangements for the East, and reports that a large contingent from that section will be present. Herbert Witherspoon, of the Spokane and Eastern Trust Company, Spokane, Wash., is arranging for a large representation from the Pacific Coast membership. Several of the leading financial men of the country have been secured to address the various sessions of the convention and comprehensive plans for the entertainment of the delegates are in preparation.

Investigating the Balkan Atrocities

THE Division of Intercourse and Education of the Carnegie Endowment Fund for international peace has instituted a full inquiry into the state of affairs and the truth of the statements of recent atrocities in the Balkan Peninsula. President Nicholas Murray Butler of Columbia University, who is chairman of this division of the Carnegie Endowment Fund, states that a "special commission of inquiry was being sent to the Balkan Peninsula to make personal investigation and report for the information of the public opinion of the world on three points: "First, the outbreak of hostilities between the allies at the conclusion of the war with Turkey. Second, the truth or falsity of outrages reported to have been committed by the combatants, particularly the mutilation of captives, outrages on women and destruction of private property. Third, the economic waste caused by this war between the allies, and its cost. The feeling in this matter was brought about by a statement printed in this country on the authority of the King of the Hellenes."

The committee consists of the following prominent gentlemen:

Dr. H. N. Brailsford, who has written extensive reviews on Balkan and Macedonian questions, representing Great Britain; Professor Samuel Train Dutton, of Columbia University, representing the United States; Justin Godart, member of the Chamber of Deputies, representing France; Professor Paul M. ACATION BIBLE SCHOOLS OF 1913

ETWEEN one and two thousand children gathered in the Sixty-ninth Regiment Armory, New York City, at ten o'clock in the morning of August 15 to participate in the ncement exercises of the Daily Vacation Bible of the Greater New York district. It was commencement program, although some of nts went rather far off the beaten track of rdinary and stale affairs as the regulation ncement. There were races and other athbings by the boys of different schools, fancy by boys and om five schools, aid to the indrill by the chilf Gregg Chapel , Brooklyn, nic exercises by rgartners, be- the more sober of hymns, a ure lesson, and dress. Not the important demration of the ng was the sa- the flag, which how the work Vacation Bible l Association is up not only to study, industry athletics, but to d old-fashioned ican patriotism. Robert G. Bonational director e association, is e pioneer. He is nly a man with dea, but a man faith and energy kill enough to work his idea out. It was only e years ago that the idea came to him. Obng summer conditions on the East Side in New , he saw that there were idle children and idle hes, and he knew that in the city and elsee there were idle college students who would lad of an opportunity to put in a summer of -down work, provided that work would count for the things for which they cared. As an experiment, five church buildings were opened for daily vacation Bible schools, in which manual work, organized play and Bible study went hand in hand. The work has grown from that small beginning until, in 1913, there were 216 schools in 34 cities and towns, with 50,551 pupils, and employing 921 teachers, representing 28 colleges. Besides the contributions that have been sent in by people who believe in the movement and want to help it along, the sum of $300 was raised this summer by the children themselves to extend the work next year. In New York City alone there were this season 31 schools in which 6,009 children were enrolled.

SALUTING THE FLAG AT THE CLOSING EXERCISES OF THE DAILY VACATION BIBLE SCHOOLS IN THE SIXTY-NINTH REGIMENT ARMORY, NEW YORK CITY

It is easy to become enthusiastic about this good work. It goes far toward solving a number of problems that have long caused much perplexity. The problem of the idle child on the city streets is no easy one. With the restraints of school discipline and school tasks lifted, it is much easier to fall into mischief than to be good. Then, too, the problem of getting the Bible into the minds of our school children is one that is baffling the wits of religious leaders. Further, there is the problem of the cold, grim church, dull and forbidding, and shut during the sunny summer days. It has been an easy matter for children to come to think of the church as a place in which it was difficult for childhood to feel at home. The Daily Vacation Bible School answers all these problems at once. It throws the churches open to weekday sunshine and weekday childhood; it gives the children a chance to study their Bibles under regulations something like those of their public school life and at the same time to the accompaniment of a kind of cheer and play that are out of place in the Sunday school; it takes them off of the street and keeps them interested for a good many weekday hours in wholesome work and study and recreation.

Mr. Robert E. Speer is the national president of the association; Mr. J. Adams Brown, national treasurer; Mr. Alfred P. Seaman, chairman of the board of directors, and Mr. Robert G. Boville, national director. Mr. John Wanamaker is also keenly interested in the movement. At the opening of the season he made an address to the workers of the association, in which he said: "I congratulate you on your services. You are giving to the world a practical demonstration that the church is not only a place of worship on Sundays, but is to be used all the week in service to humanity."

IS THE COUNTRY CHURCH DECLINING?

BY PASTOR D. H. STEFFENS

A RECENT book on The Country Church,* issued by the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, is again giving occasion for the writing of editorials scare headlines on "the Decline of the Rural rch." This publication, which purports to be a ntific study of the subject, covering a period of nty years in two typical counties—the one in mont, the other in New York—was prepared Mr. C. O. Gill and Mr. Gifford Pinchot, two men se studies and conclusions are bound to comd respectful consideration. A widely circulated icultural journal in an editorial résumé of these lies sums up its conclusions in the one sweeping tence: "All the figures show a declining institu."

Ve have heard this before. Since the publication he report of President Roosevelt's Country Life nmission, a voluminous literature on the subject the country church has made its appearance, a y complete bibliography of which is given by rge Frederick Wells in Vol. XI of the Annals of American Academy of Political and Social ence. Mr. Wells is the assistant to the executive retary of the Federal Council of the Churches of rist in America. It need not be said that he is in lest sympathy with his subject and quite hopeful the adequate solution of any problems confront- the rural church "through the application of the ntific method to the study of rural religious conons and problems. It may be stated as a rule t the rural problem approaches solution, from standpoint at least, only in so far as use is made he scientific method."

The general tone of these various publications is so hopeful. Most of them simply assume that rural church is a declining institution, and then on to discuss ways and means for its reorganizaon such lines as may perhaps promote its social iency and usefulness as an instrument for the terment of the conditions surrounding country . As a rule, these discussions lead to recommenions looking toward the co-ordination and federation, under leadership of the church, of the various forces which make for rural improvement, supplemented by non-resident forces or the employment of sociological experts.

Any hesitation to accept the first premise of this argument, presented as the result of intensive study according to scientific methods, would seem to be a somewhat presumptuous undertaking. Nevertheless, I must confess that I have never yet been able to persuade myself that the rural church is either a declining or a passing institution. The experience of a pastorate in city and country, both East and West, extending over a quarter of a century, during which time it has been my good fortune to be in constant touch with our native-born and immigrant population, as organized into rural churches, make it impossible for me to do so. Moreover, I have not yet lost confidence in the promise of Him who gave his people assurance of the permanence and perpetuity of the Gospel kingdom he came to establish. If this line of argument is waived in this discussion, it is not to be so understood as if there were in the mind of the writer any doubt of its validity and force. It is still the best of all arguments, for to-day, as on the day when it was first uttered, the promise, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world," is the hope of Christ's disciples and an answer to the charge that his church, whether it be in the city or in the country, is a passing institution.

It is waived merely because it seems desirable to take a ground similar to that ordinarily taken by the exponents of the scientific method, with whom it is to be feared a Scriptural quotation would hardly pass muster as an argument.

Before examining the conclusions regarding the rural church reached by the employment of the scientific method of investigation, it may be well to frankly admit the entire truth of one point brought out in this study: "The more numerous the churches the greater the loss in attendance." The system of denominationalism is therefore the greatest weakness of Protestant Christianity in America. "By the system of denominationalism," says Dr. Krauth, "we mean the system which theoretically or practically rests upon the supposition that two or more Christian bodies can, without imputation either of fundamental errors or schism on either part, have conflicting names, creeds, altars, pulpits, discipline; that they can occupy and struggle for a common territory, and yet keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace; can have doctrines and sacraments so diverse as to necessitate the formation of distinct communions, and yet be in the unity of full Christian fraternity."

This is the generally accepted theory. Accordingly, it is maintained that "there are conditions in some places which make it desirable to have more than one church. There are differences of disposition, temperament or social relations which make it impossible for one church to influence some people in the community who would not be affected by another denomination." (The Day of the Country Church. J. O. Ashenhurst.) If this is correct it would hold good in Maryland, where the landholding classes as a rule belonged to the Episcopal Church, while their indentured servants were invariably to be found in the church of some other denomination. With this result: We to this day have two hundred years of inherited prejudices and misunderstandings to reckon with in the organization, even of a farmers' club. It is therefore gratifying to find that the study made by Mr. Gill and Mr. Pinchot endorses the position of those churches which have always frankly maintained that the American system of denominationalism is a source of weakness rather than of strength, and that the organization of separate churches in a given community upon the flimsy ground of "differences of disposition, temperament or social relations" is always an evil, leading not only to a decline in church attendance, but ultimately to a decline in church morals, which is the inevitable result of emphasizing things accidental and external, rather than things essential. "Real morality must have its root in real faith. If the doctrine of a church be good, fidelity to it makes the doctrine a mightier force." It is the weakness of the denominational system that it ignores doctrines to emphasize morals.

Huerta's Answer

IN THE center of the Mexican vortex, in Huerta's own capital, surrounded by distrustful faces on every side, stands the clear-eyed, cool-headed, unafraid Minnesotan, John Lind. Failure was written large everywhere even before his arrival; but the ominous outlook gave him no uneasiness. He went on in the face of warnings that would have dismayed most men; but the grim threats of Huerta, the abuse of the Mexican press, the rumors of expulsion and of an impending ultimatum from the palace, were alike disregarded. Plain, straightforward John Lind quietly stepped along. He walked the streets of the capital unmolested; he visited the Foreign Office; he was received by Huerta with true Spanish cordiality. And he delivered his message, embodying the suggestions of President Wilson, which President Huerta politely but firmly rejected. He would neither resign nor pledge himself not to be a candidate again; he would not entertain the proposition for a cessation of hostilities. To his comprehensive refusal he added a request for the withdrawal of our battleships and for formal recognition; and expressed the conviction that President Wilson in his attitude toward Mexico was not supported by Congress or the majority of the American people.

The result is not regarded as ending the negotiations, however. While the extreme demands have been rejected, as is not unusual in diplomacy, there are other points to be followed to advantage. An essential thing is to convince Huerta that this government seeks the welfare of Mexico and is actuated by no selfish or aggressive desire. Besides, other Powers are interested in restoring order in the disturbed republic, and this fact, taken in connection with the financial crisis in that country, may greatly aid our friendly efforts for peace. Huerta can, if he will, become a real benefactor to his country and win more honor by following wise and friendly counsel than by adopting any other course.

Governors in Overalls

TWO governors led 250,000 men in an attack on muddy roads a few days ago. The watchword of the day was "pulling Missouri out of the mud." The thermometer stood at one hundred degrees, but Governor Major took a hand in the labor, operating a steam grader, and later inspecting many miles of the improved roads. Governor Hodges of Kansas stood by Governor Major in his work, and at the end of the day announced that he would soon issue a proclamation in his own State for two "good-road days," on which all able-bodied men will be expected to turn out and labor on the highways.

This is Americanism at its best. The governor of a State would rank as a king in Europe. But the American idea of a governor is that of a citizen who helps his fellow citizens with their daily work. Governor Major has set a good example to our American executives. And he has demonstrated how much can be done if men will get together and take hold vigorously of a job that needs doing. The governor estimates that the work done gratuitously on this day by Missouri citizens would have cost the State $1,500,000 if it had been paid for.

The good roads movement is remaking American geography. Missouri is taking a turn now at showing other people what to do instead of waiting to be shown. Incidentally, the event illustrates again how work can be turned into fun. Everybody had a good time, the women turning out to provide meals for the men, and the children sharing in the merriment.

The Business Outlook

THERE is a class of people who, like good old Aunt Samantha's sister, are constitutionally disposed to gloom. They need more cheering up than most folks. If a thunder-storm comes along, they doubt whether it's ever going to clear; and if the weather be fair, they shake their heads and pronounce it a "storm-breeder." They carry this pessimism into business and see in every little trifling incident a token of trade depression—an infallible sign of "more and worse to follow." They won't open their eyes and look where the sun is shining on fields waving with crops ripe to the harvest and signs of God's abundant bounty everywhere visible. They simply cling to the notion that things are going wrong and refuse to be comforted. Our contemporary, the New York Times, in a recent issue collated and presented an array of statistics concerning the business outlook which should reassure all who have indulged the apprehension that the course of legislation in Congress might operate injuriously to the country's interests. It has drawn its information from the best trade sources throughout the country, and all report business good and steadily growing better. The textile trade outlook is excellent; the woolen trade is reducing prices but not wages; the linen trade prospects are also very good. Crops, according to an examination just concluded by a leading Chicago bank—the Continental and Commercial—are phenomenal, wheat showing 9,000,000 bushels more than last year, and 170,000,000 over the domestic need. Corn, even though it suffered through drought, will be more than an average crop, and there is a big reserve from last year besides. The hay crop will be worth $1,000,000,000. Then our foreign trade is already $421,000,000 in excess of 1912, and of exports alone the farmers will receive over $180,000,000, nearly double the amount of a year ago. These are only a few of the figures, but they show the general unmistakable evidences of substantial business prosperity all along the line. The year promises to be a record one in all branches of business. We commend the showing to the doubting ones. Let them look up and take courage.

The Christ Likeness in the Heart

THERE is no defacement possible in this poor humanity of ours which is necessarily final. All the stains may be erased, all the false superscriptions may be removed, and, fairer than before, the likeness of God may be found stamped on every one of us. Not here, where the transformation is never perfect, but yonder, seeing Him as he is, our whole body, soul and spirit shall be changed into the likeness of the King in his glory.

In the famous Mosque of St. Sophia at Constantinople, which was originally a Christian church, the guide points out to the traveler a place where there is a hidden face of Christ, portrayed by some early Christian artist. When the Mohammedan conquerer possessed himself of that noble temple he ordered all Christian symbols to be effaced, and this beautiful head of Christ was covered over with canvas smoothly pressed down and adhering to the surface of the picture. But by gazing steadily at the canvas the visitor can assure himself that there is a Christian painting behind it.

In most of us the Christ likeness is only faintly visible. It is the grief and pain of our sou the enemy is not utterly driven out, and sti vails to hide in us the image of Him we love B by and by his own hand shall strip away t vestige of the sin that hides God's glory in th and the resplendent image shall be seen dimmed and eternal beauty.

Mr. Bryan's View of It

IN HIS own journal, The Commoner, Sec Bryan prints a personal reply to the critic have taken him to task for devoting his vacat lecturing while grave problems demanded his ence in Washington. His explanation is cl teristically frank. The real question in his he urges, was not whether a cabinet officer live on $12,000 a year, but "whether he coul the expenses of official life to his other expense meet them all out of his salary." He then pro to explain that his obligations to church, ch education and insurance aggregate $6,800 y and his personal income is insufficient to meet the bulk of his property being non-productive became necessary, therefore, to continue his ing and lecturing to meet these charges, in that his official salary might be devoted to me the expenditures attached to his cabinet post even to supplement it, where it was inadequa meet the large outlays incident to much enter ing. "I have as much reason not to neglect p duty as one can have," he writes, "and those are fairminded ought to assume, until they evidence to the contrary, that my vacation p will be so chosen as not to sacrifice official d A public man's expenditures grow with his inc and Mr. Bryan's have grown. He has plann forego for the next four years any addition t accumulations, and he does not regard this as a rifice since it is done in the line of public ser He has made no complaint of inadequate cal salaries, but he believes the American people not think the worse of him because he prefe earn his living as he has done in the past. A which is doubtless true, but Mr. Bryan has o looked the fact that, in an emergency such as which recently confronted our government, the ple naturally expect that an official occupying exalted a post would have brushed all other co erations aside, at whatever cost, that he might undivided attention to the nation's business. T think well of Mr. Bryan, but they will think better of him if he is found at the post of duty w the hour strikes, instead of being off on a thr harvesting tour in the lecture field.

Thaw's Fight for Freedom

IT IS often asked whether there is not one law the rich and another for the poor. While i true that wealthy criminals are occasionally ov taken of justice, still the facility with which rich are enabled to evade the law is passing int proverb. A case in point is that of Thaw, slayer of Stanford White, who lately escaped fr the Matteawan State Asylum in New York and t to Canada, where he was captured and held for portation as an undesirable alien. During short interval between Thaw's flight and his arr lawyers in various States were openly canvass the question whether there was any statute un which he could be arrested and held on Ameri soil, a majority of them seeming to think that the statute books contained no provision for the rest of a fugitive lunatic, Thaw, outside of N York at least, might go free. Canadian offici however, had no such qualms and insisted on th right to deport, the only question being whet the fugitive should be returned to New York, V mont or New Hampshire. High-priced counsel we engaged and hurried to fight Thaw's battle in t Canadian courts in the hope to prevent his deport tion. New York demanded his return that might be recommitted to the sylum and pla out of the way of doing further harm. Dread such a sequel to his adventure, Thaw has enga alienists to prove that, being no longer insane, the would be nothing on which to hold him, and ther fore he should be liberated. Society could then c template the pleasing picture of a degenerate large, with ample funds and with homicidal tende cies that are liable to break out unexpectedly at a time. Such a result might speak loudly for t cleverness of the lawyers and the persuasive powe of wealth, but it would say very little for t majesty of law or the common sense of our court

MEMORIAL in celebration of the departure of the Pilgrim Fathers from Southampton for America was unveiled at Southampton August 15 by Walter Hines Page, nited States ambassador. These Pil- s repeated the sentiments of an earlier pilgrim g out under divine direction:

Egyptian Cotton in America

XCELLENT results are being obtained in the growing of long staple Egyptian cotton in the t River Valley of Arizona. Under the direction the Department of Agriculture in this country, industry has come to include over four thousand es in planted cotton, yielding an average net fit of $100 an acre. While the severe drought oughout the entire West has made inroads on corn and other crops, the Arizona cotton has spered to such a degree that a ginning plant l an oil mill are to be established by the time the p is ready. The sub-committee of the American mission, which has been making a study of cot- growing and cotton marketing in Egypt, shows t not only can American methods, applied to the sing of Egyptian cotton, reduce the cost approxitely fifty per cent., but that our progressive farmers, although handicapped by the quality of our soil as compared with that of the delta of the Nile, can bring our long staple cotton yield per acre up to that of Egypt. Long staple cotton brings from twenty-one to twenty-five cents a pound on the spot as against nine to eleven cents a pound for the short staple variety. The long cotton just introduced into Arizona is raised by irrigation in Egypt, and our farmers are going to employ the same process. From time immemorial Egypt has raised her crops by irrigation, and it is thus referred to in the Old Testament:

For the land, whither thou goest in to possess it, is not as the land of Egypt, from whence ye came out, where thou sowedst thy seed, and wateredst it with thy foot, as a garden of herbs: but the land, whither ye go to possess it, is a land of hills and valleys, and drinketh water of the rain of heaven. (Deut. 11: 10, 11.)

Orville Wright's Aero Boat

ORVILLE WRIGHT, inventor of the aeroplane, has just perfected a flying boat, which he believes will be an important factor in the development of the United States postal service. The invention is the result of two hard years of experimenting. Its normal speed will be sixty-seven miles an hour, or a little over a mile a minute. Mr. Wright expects his flying boat to be used practically in carrying mail despatches, etc., over inaccessible inland waterways, such as are found in many regions of the West, in Alaska, and along the coast. The inventor has paid especial attention to the worthiness of his new machine as to both water and air. It is with considerable pride that this new machine is hailed, as our country, which gave to the world the first heavier-than-air flying machine, is being outstripped by some other nations in advanced experimentation and discovery in the realm of aerial navigation. The cry of the soul, tempest-tossed with sorrow and sin, calls for the wings of a bird to master the gravitation of the earth and the currents of air. It is this:

Oh that I had wings like a dove! for then would I fly away, and be at rest. (Ps. 55: 6.)

Almost Killed by Yellow-Jackets

CLINGING desperately with one hand to a slender steel rod, and with the other fighting a swarm of yellow-jackets, Forest N. Tickner of Lansing, Mich., narrowly escaped death the other day when he disturbed the nest of the insects in the dome of the State capitol, 275 feet in the air. Tickner was engaged to paint the dome. As he ascended the outside of the steel shell, the yellow-jackets attacked him, and though in intense pain, he fought his way back to the window and safety. There are few boys who do not know what it means to disturb a hornets' or yellow-jackets' nest. We cannot dig so deep or climb so high that we will not find perils, enemies to fight us in body, mind, or soul in our plans. It requires the nerve, the level-headedness, the determination, and the activity of this painter to succeed against these painful foes. Swarms of hornets were the armies which drove out the enemies of the children of Israel.

And I will send hornets before thee, which shall drive out the Hivite, the Canaanite, and the Hittite, from before thee. (Ex. 23: 28.)

THE GREAT INTERNATIONAL RALLY AT THE RECENT WORLD'S SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION IN ZÜRICH, SWITZERLAND

ONE of the most spectacular features of the recent Sunday School Convention at Zürich is shown in the above photograph. Massed under a great globe which represented the earth, delegates from fifty countries were photographed bearing shields showing whence they came and surrounded by the flags of many of the countries represented. As our special correspondents at the convention have already reported, all of these countries had the stories of their Sunday school work and general situation placed before the convention some time during its sessions.

In Quicksand Sixteen Hours

IMBEDDED waist-deep in the quicksands along the west bank of the Schuylkill River, Peter Francis, twenty years old, was rescued by Edward Allison, the steward of a boat club, after he had been held in the mire from three o'clock in the afternoon of August 11 till 7.30 o'clock the next morning. How the youth managed to keep alive is more than the surgeons at the hospital could explain. As it was, he was partly paralyzed and could only speak in monosyllables. He could not give an intelligent account of how he got into the river. The theory of the police is that he was walking along the bank and slipped off a rock into the mire. He was within sight of thousands of pedestrians all the afternoon, crossing the bridge above him, and he called and called for help till his voice and strength were exhausted and no one came to his relief. While rowing down the river, Allison saw what he thought to be the body of a dead man, and going to it discovered the young man buried in the mire, nearly dead. He got men to help dig Francis out, and had him taken in an ambulance to the hospital. There are so many walking along the banks of life's river who step into the quicksands and become buried in them. This is peculiarly so with the young men of our time. The blessed instrumentalities for their rescue should receive the earnest co-operation and generous support of good people everywhere. The rescue of the young man from the sand suggests the spiritual salvation of those buried in the mire of sin as thus expressed by the Psalmist:

He brought me up also out of a horrible pit, out of the miry clay, and set my feet upon a rock, and established my goings. (Ps. 40: 2.)

Fifty Years Blindness Cured

MRS. MARY J. WELSH became blind when a girl sixteen years of age, and remained in total blindness for fifty years, when an operation in the Wesley Hospital of Chicago the other day restored her sight, and she returned to her home in Hillsdale, Mich., to look with supreme joy and gratitude upon the faces of her eight "babies," now grown up. Her husband being an invalid, Mrs. Welsh was compelled to support the family for many years, which she did by taking in washing. It is not necessary to look into tragic story, or into history, or to the world's great battlefield, to find heroines. This is one, the woman who, under the handicap of total blindness, supported a sick husband and provided for her family by the severest physical labor, and raises them for God and their fellow men. The woman cured by the marvels of modern surgery was in a condition to repeat the words of the blind man whom Christ healed:

One thing I know, that, whereas I was blind, now I see. (John 9: 25.)

GENEROUS GIFTS TO WORTHY CAUSES

HARDLY a week passes in which THE CHRISTIAN HERALD does not record some instance of noble generosity in the field of philanthropy or Christian work, on the part of its devoted readers. Two of the most recent cases are given below.

A lady in Pennsylvania (Mrs. J. A.) wrote, requesting the names of "ten different missions or schools, and also the names of leper colonies in foreign countries, stating which you think most worthy of help. I want to give something to these funds. My husband died nearly two years ago and left me enough to live on comfortably, and I think I can give this much in memory of him. I know he would have been pleased to have me give it to a good cause."

Within a few days, a list was sent as requested, and on August 9, the donor sent a bank draft for $1,500 on the Girard National Bank of Philadelphia, enclosed in a letter in which she wrote: "I have selected ten and will give $150 to each one. Will you kindly send me a reply and tell me if there is any expense in turning this over to the different missions?"

The list which she returned approved bore the following names, and within twenty-four hours after its receipt by the CHRISTIAN HERALD checks were on the way to each of the ten beneficiaries with instructions to send acknowledgments to the donor.

Miss Mary Reed, India. (Work among lepers)	$150.00
Rev. H. Berhard, Leper Home, Surinam, Dutch Guiana.	150.00
Jerusalem Leper Mission, Palestine	150.00
Rev. R. A. Hume, Ahmednagar, India, Industrial Orphanage	150.00
Rev. R. H. Bender, San Salvador, Central America	150.00
Bishop J. C. Hartzell, Inhambane, E. Africa	150.00
Mrs. Mary Winsor, Sirur, India	150.00
Rev. Wilfred Grenfell, Labrador Mission	150.00
Miss Anna E. Hall, Garraway Mission, Cape Palmas, Africa	150.00
China Orphan Fund	150.00
Total	$1,500.00

Mrs. J. A. was informed by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD that this journal makes remittances of this character for its readers without charge, and that the beneficiaries receive the gifts undiminished.

Another case of more than usual interest was presented in a letter from a reader in a Western State, who desires to remain unknown. He wrote enclosing a draft for $113.20, and explaining that his gift was in redemption of a pledge he had made to give such an offering if his prayers to be extricated from a business difficulty were accepted. He prayed in faith and hope for a long time; but at last the answer came from an unexpected quarter. He desired that a considerable portion of his gift should go to foreign missions—including Reformed and Presbyterian missions—and at least a small portion of it to our Children's Home at Mont-Lawn. A list was compiled in accordance with his instructions and submitted for his consideration, which his representative returned, on July 30, approved, and checks were drawn and promptly forwarded to the following:

Reformed Church Foreign Missionary Board, New York City	$15.20
Presbyterian Foreign Missionary Board, New York City.	12.00
Mrs. Elizabeth F. Brewster, Missionary, Hinghua, China.	12.00
Rev. T. J. Bach, Missionary, Maracaibo, Venezuela	12.00
China Orphan Fund	14.00
Rev. R. H. Bender, Missionary, San Salvador	12.00
Rev. B. Lenz, Missionary, Makkovik, Labrador	12.00
Bowery Mission, New York City	12.00
CHRISTIAN HERALD Children's Home, Nyack, N. Y.	12.00
Total	$113.20

Our Relief Work in the Balkans

After several months of energetic relief work conducted in the face of many difficulties and dangers, the CHRISTIAN HERALD Balkan Relief Committee now finds itself nearing the close of its labors. At a meeting of the committee held in Sofia in the beginning of July, the question of further service by the committee was discussed. Concerning this meeting, Pastor D. N. Furnajieff, the chairman, sends this report to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for the information of the contributors to the Relief Fund:

"Our committee was unanimous in these points:

"1. The work of our relief committee is not finished—i. e., the need for relief is still a crying need and will be such for some time to come yet. The thousands of orphans, as our gracious queen stated some time ago in her message to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, are still to be provided for. Therefore, undertaking orphan work, even on a limited scale, means taking up a great work for building up character and the future of the nation. So this proposal, in the opinion of our committee, is both justified and demanded by the necessity of the case.

"2. As to the orphans, the committee thinks they should be gathered from the whole needy field and without discrimination between nationality or religion. We have studied the situation so[n] both as to cost and climate of existing orph[anages] and are inclined to place our orphans in Mr. [Samako]moff's orphanage at Samakov.

"3. As to cost of yearly support per cap[ita] are calculating on the most economic basis p[ossible]. From this point of view Samakov is the pl[ace] us. The cost per annum will be $60 a ye[ar] each child.

"4. Our plan is so to devote the unexpend[ed] ance of the fund exclusively for orphan relie[f] within the space of ten years a certain num[ber] orphans will be cared for, and at the end [of] time this available balance of the fund wil[l] ended its work and itself as well. There will financial responsibility for the maintenance of orphans upon THE CHRISTIAN HERALD or its ers. However, any freewill offerings for thi[s] purpose will be gratefully received.

"5. The committee regards this plan a [the] crowning part of all its work, and the nam[e] these orphans 'CHRISTIAN HERALD Children' natural and legitimate product of the situatio[n].

"At the close of the session the following r[e]tions were unanimously adopted, namely:

"Whereas, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of New [York] readily and kindly made the appeal and open[ed] its pages for subscriptions to relieve the suff[erers] from the Balkan War; and

"Whereas, The readers and friends of the [pa]paper responded so promptly and generously [that] we were enabled to relieve thousands and thous[ands] of sufferers; and

"Whereas, Now the opportunity offers [itself] and we can take up orphan relief, which has [the] human and divine approval and benediction,

"Resolved, That we, the CHRISTIAN HERALD [Re]lief Committee of Sofia, hereby tender a most he[arty] vote of thanks to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of [New] York and its generous contributors, who made [the] first relief work and now the projected orphan [work] possible, and that, in recognition of this, these [or]phans will be known as 'CHRISTIAN HERALD [Chil]dren.'

"D. N. FURNAJIEFF, Chairman.
"D. ATANASOFF, Secretary-Treasurer.

There have been important changes in Bulg[aria] since the foregoing was written. Conditions [may] soon prove favorable, however, for the carrying [out] of the orphanage work planned by the committee.

"MOTHER TAKES A HOLIDAY"*

BY DAVID LYALL

A Story Complete in This Issue

MORDECAI ("Mordy" for short) exhibited the symptoms of uneasiness usual in an intelligent family mongrel when the members of his household began to take an acute interest in the boxroom. No wag of Mordy-for-short's tail ever lightened the gloom of that loathsome vicinity; he would lie for hours in the cul-de-sac leading from the nursery landing to the door of the attic in which were piled the large and varied assortment of receptacles used by the family to convey their belongings to summer quarters.

With his snub nose upon his limp paws, his body supine, in his liquid eyes a vast melancholy, Mordy watched the proceedings, generally spasmodic, which characterized visitors to the boxroom.

There was an appalling lack of variety about the proceedings, a sickening repetition. It began in the early days of July, when mother would pay surreptitious visits at unholy hours to detect whether any of the boxes required hospital treatment.

The next stage was the packing of the linen and extra silver required by a large and exacting family in a house where such things were not "all found." Mother undertook this task, as she undertook all others, cheerfully, though with the very occasional accompaniment of a sigh. If Mordecai loathed the annual inspection and upheaval in the Barrington boxroom, it was nothing to the loathing with which his mistress regarded it. She was mortally sick of it, and had been convinced for a surprising number of years that there is something fundamentally wrong with the whole system of British holiday-making. The conviction in no way helped the situation; the only thing that ever helped was her sense of humor, which had mercifully never deserted her through a long, blameless, and singularly over-burdened life.

She was the mother of seven grown-up children, and wife to one, and she had spoiled them all, and she knew it right down to the toes of the worn little shoes which were so often rubbed with much serving.

She occasionally wondered what was the matter with them all, and why each one desired nothing on earth save his or her own complete enjoyment. Mother was the unfortunate channed through which all must flow, sooner or later. Her tireless activities must not be allowed to slacken for a moment. It was "Mater this" and "Mater that" until there came a breathless July afternoon when she suddenly realized that she could not go on.

She overheard, on her way to the very boxroom loathed of Mordecai, a scrap of conversation between the two elder girls which set her teeth on edge.

"It's a pity the mater makes such a fuss. But have you made out that list, Aggie? She'll ask for it sure thing at teatime."

The list referred to was the number of articles of attire the girls wished to take, and into what box they wished them packed.

"No, I haven't, and I'm not going to. I tell you what, Jean, it would do the mater quite a lot of good to get a taste of the simpler life. It takes the gilt off the holiday gingerbread to have to cut it out in slabs. Stuff a few things into a bag, go down to a station, and take the first train for anywhere, that's the ideal way to take a holiday. All this planning and sorting out things makes me deadly sick."

"If you suggested that to mother she'd have several kinds of fits," said Jean, in a queer, dry voice. "She simply loves tying on labels and tags and writing down things in books. And if the proper pickles were forgotten or the kind of nightshirt the pater thinks necessary for the seaside it would be the deluge."

"It would. She's spoiled us, Jean, out and out; but I suppose I'll have to go and do something in the way of a list. Inhuman fag, I call it, all the same."

Mother trod on Mordy-for-short's tail as she hustled into the boxroom, and did not even wait [to] apologize. He did not growl, though if any ot[her] foot had intruded on his august majesty he wo[uld] not have let it off.

He had overheard, too, and no doubt understo[od]. She was a long time in the boxroom this time, s[o] Mordecai, grown impatient, pushed open the d[oor] with his nose and looked in. She was sitting o[n] trunk, looking straight before her, with an expr[es]sion on her face he had never seen there befo[re]. His comment was to sidle up and push his cold n[ose] into her hand. She let that hand drop rather sp[as]modically on his head, and suddenly bent and kis[sed] him.

"You and I, Mordy-for-short, are going to ha[ve] a holiday."

The words were Greek, but the meaning w[as] plain. He and she together were going to [do] things, the gates of paradise were not to be clo[sed] altogether, nor was he to be left to the tender b[ut] limited mercies of Eliza Tidd, some time cook [in] Linden Gardens, now married to a tram conduct[or] and always available as caretaker in the month [of] August.

Nobody except Mordy-for-short knew of the co[n]templated mutiny, and he was far too wise to s[ay] anything, even if his honor had not been involve[d]. He was included in the plot, that was all he kne[w] or cared about.

The boxes were duly labeled and packed to th[e] music of the usual family jars. Even fathe[r] joined in this time, being put out because the b[ig] member of the usual foursome had suddenly struck and said he was going to Switzerland. This la[st] apparently was mother's fault, too. She took a with surprising meekness—nay, with a light an[d] airy manner which was peculiarly aggravatin[g]. She abated not one jot or tittle of her preparation[s], however, and at the appointed day everything wa[s] ready and removed by the Carter Paterson van he[r] postcard had summoned.

ILWAUKEE'S NEWSBOY CONGRESSMEN

Inciden-, provision ius made for self-instruc-of these fu-citizens in machinery representa-democracy, it is ex-ted that they in this way ome familiar h the duties responsibilities of American citizenship years before y are called upon to exercise them.

The Newsboys' Republic of Milwaukee is thoroughly anized in all branches of government—executive, leg-ative and judicial. It has a certain legal status, inas-ch as its existence under supervision of the Industrial mmission of Wisconsin is provided for by statute. Con-uently, the decisions of the Newsboys' Trial Board, which ndles all violations of the street trade laws, are thor-ghly binding when they have received the approval of the nmission. In this way the actual enforcement of what really a portion of the State legislation governing child or is left in the hands of juveniles.

To gain these ends the city of Milwaukee has been divided o six "States." These States are represented, according population, by from ten to thirty representatives in Con-ess—there being a total of 116. These congressmen are osen at a regularly called election from boys, who, in eir districts, possess street trade permits granted by the dustrial Commission of the State. All bills for the en-rcement and regulation of the State laws governing reet trades originate in the House of Representatives. e Senate consists of four senators from each of the six ates. These are appointed by the president of the re-blic, and consist largely of men known to be interested the welfare of boys and who in the course of their busi-ss activities come more or less in close personal contact ith citizens of this novel republic. The duties of the sen-e have to do largely with the approval of legislation acted in the house and the endorsement of presidential appointees. There is also a supreme court, a trial court, and other officers necessary to a republican form of government.

As stated, the object of the Newsboys' Republic is in part the enforcement of laws governing the street trades. Accordingly, each newsboy citizen wears a distinctive badge when on duty, and carries complaint blanks which are used in reporting any individual who violates the street trade laws in his section of the city. These complaints are filed with the board before which the defendant is brought up for trial. Over 150 such reported violations have been passed upon by this body since the first of January.

Under the laws now operative in Wisconsin no boy under twelve years of age may sell papers; none under fourteen may sell merchandise or be a bootblack. All boys employed in any of these trades must attend school and may not work at these pursuits during school hours. They may not sell before 5 A.M. nor after 6.30 P.M. in winter and 7.30 P.M. in summer. Of course, violations of these laws—which are really child-labor laws—have not been infrequent, but it is the verdict of one of the leading lawyers of Milwaukee that the Newsboys' Trial Board has invariably been able to handle such violations in a more effective manner than the regular courts.

The city of Milwaukee has taken the Newsboys' Republic seriously and is doing all it can to further its success. It opens its palatial city hall once a month for the meeting of congress, at which time the members of this branch of the government conduct the affairs of state with as much sincerity as the members of any common council or State legislature. The inauguration of officers last winter was a big event, being held in the great Pabst Theater, at which time Governor McGovern and Mayor Bading were among the speakers of the evening.

This novel experiment in self-government is now well on toward the close of its first year of successful operation. The "Independent Party" is in power. Already it is evident that it is possible in this way as in no other to enforce not only the letter of the street trade laws, but also to bring a wholesome respect for the spirit of the law. This last is perhaps the more important of the two and the more to be desired. Perry O. Powell, supervisor of street trades and an efficient social worker, has been a leader in inaugurating this new work and is largely responsible thus far for securing the interest and co-operation of the newsboys. He is also chief justice of the supreme court of the republic.

"YE TOWN CRIER"

"COME to the town hall! All come to the town hall to-night, where a memorial service will celebrate the sailing of the Mayflower. Come all to the town all!" With this strong call in the lusty voice of Walter T. Smith, the townspeople and visitors of Provincetown, Mass., were informed of the celebrating of the 293d anniversary of the sailing of the Pilgrims to these shores. At the memorial service, which had a large attendance, eloquent speakers extolled the character and purpose of the Pilgrims, whose boat was "loaded down with its cargo of convictions, courage, conscientiousness and the spirit of Christ." In Provincetown was born the first descendant of the Mayflower people; here died the beautiful young wife of Governor Bradford at twenty-three years of age. Here in the cabin of the Mayflower was signed the famous "compact." Here ex-President Roosevelt laid the cornerstone, and President Taft dedicated the Pilgrim monument, 240 feet high. Here in seven years will be held a national celebration of the 300th anniversary of the voyage of the Mayflower.

WALTER T. SMITH
For Twenty Years Town Crier of Provincetown, Mass.

It is said that, on a quiet night, people can hear the voice of Provincetown's town crier all along the shore and out into the middle of the harbor. He has "cried" for the old town for twenty years. He cries for auctions, public gatherings, associations, revivals and church services. He is remunerated by the town and by people who use his unique and telling mode of advertisement for a variety of purposes.

LOVE WORKETH NO ILL TO HIS NEIGHBOR*

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

"SIX days shalt thou labor." There begin duties to man in the Decalogue with a law for the whole week as to labor and rest. It is surprising that for centuries the fourth commandment has been discussed as if it was a law for one day only, and a negative one at that. Very few have grasped its first requirement as did the employer who dismissed a lazy employee for "breaking the fourth commandment." The shirker exclaimed: "Why, I always rest on Sunday." "Yes," said his master, "and all the other days too." The very first duty of man to man is to work six days in the week. No king or millionaire or society woman is exempted. The matter does not turn on whether one needs wages. The world is entitled to useful work from every man and woman that God has made. During childhood the six days' activity should be of study and play. But all adults in health are in duty bound to devote their energies to some regular task six days in the week. Miss Grace Dodge, devoting herself daily without salary, and much of her wealth also, to improving the condition of working girls, said: "I have been paid in advance." There are many men in Europe who thus work freely and regularly as philanthropists, including numerous "honorary secretaries" and directors of charitable and reformatory organizations and unsalaried members of Parliament and mayors and aldermen. The command does not read: "When you need wages or salary you shall labor." The law "Six days shalt thou labor" is as universal as "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself," and indeed the prohibition of idleness for tramp and "gentleman" alike is the very first specification under the second great commandment, in which duties to man are summed up.

"The seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord." It is putting into Scripture what is not there when Saturdarians quote "seventh day" in the commandment as if it read "seventh day of the week." It is the seventh day after the six days of work that were previously specified. Sunday rest is a literal obedience to the commandment. This is constitutional law, requiring a whole community to work six days and then rest one. The Jews' Sabbath was on Saturday, but the word Sabbath is no more tied up to one day of the week than Christmas. Nor can any one tell which day of our modern week is the lineal successor of the original Sabbath of Eden. There is no proof that the week has come down in unbroken succession through all the idolatrous days between Adam and Abraham. God does not make anything uncertain a condition of salvation. We keep the fourth commandment both in the letter and in the spirit when we work faithfully six days at our regular task from Monday morning to Saturday night and devote Sunday, which may be called the seventh day of the Christian week, to worship and rest and altruistic service.

"In it thou shalt not do any work." This is interpreted by the previous words, "Six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work"; and by Isa. 58: 13, 14, "Not doing thine own ways"; and by the words of Jesus, "My Father worketh hitherto and I work," meaning that divine work may go on all the week, and that it is only selfish work or work for gain—"thy work," "thine own ways"—that is to stop one day to give divine work, which is much crowded aside on other days, one good chance. The words of Isaiah also show that it is not alone selfish work but selfish pleasure also that must stop: "not doing thine own ways, nor finding thine own pleasure," which includes Sunday amusements no less than Sunday work.

"Thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter." Many nominally Christian parents are exercising no restraint upon the Sunday play of their children and young people. Isaiah indeed bids us make the day a "delight," but it can be done while still making the day different from other days. It is often mere laziness that prevents a father or mother from making the Sabbath at once a glad and sacred duty. If in the case of very young children there must be some variety of play, it should be Bible play, kept for that day.

"Nor thy manservant, nor thy maidservant." A crowd of church members going to the post office for their mail before the law stopped most of the needless Sunday work that used to be put on postal employees, were handed a card silently by a Y. M. C. A. secretary containing the fourth commandment. They were startled to be thus reminded that one "manservant" that they were depriving of Sabbath rest was their letter-carrier.

"Honor thy father and thy mother." It is recorded of a certain great philosopher that a friend who went to visit him met the philosopher's little daughter before he met the philosopher himself. Knowing that the father was such a deeply learned man, he thought that the little girl must have learned something very deep from such a father, and he said to her: "What is your father teaching you?" The little maid looked at him with her clear blue eyes, and said: "Obedience." It is the great lesson for childhood in the home, to learn to obey parents as a preparation to obey God and the laws of the State. How many heartbreaks children would save themselves if they obeyed God by obeying their parents!

"Thou shalt do no murder." This command does not forbid all killing, but only intentional destruction of human life, including, as Jesus taught, the hatred that would kill another if it dared. But the growth of the humane spirit, through the influence of Christianity, is inclining an increasing number to avoid needless killing, even in hunting, and all needless pain to living creatures, even the lowliest.

"Thou shalt not commit adultery." In this day of conventions about almost everything else, it is surprising there are not many great mass meetings of fathers and mothers in every city to take united action for the protection of the children against the foul periodicals and books and pictures displayed so freely in defiance of law. Only a very small part of what needs to be done in youth for the safeguarding of after years can be accomplished by mere exhortation in the pulpit and the home. The streets are full of traps for the young that earnest effort might smash.

"Thou shalt not steal." Only a fair exchange is no robbery. There are only two honest ways to get property: One is by gift from one who has a right to give, and the other is by earning it, by rendering an equivalent in goods or services. Gambling, in all its forms, is stealing, because it is not a fair exchange. Borrowing money or incurring debt without good reason to believe it can be paid is one of the meanest, as it is also one of the commonest, forms of stealing. Overcharging for goods or underpaying in wages is also theft. Jesus rendered the eighth command broadly: "Defraud not." Many who would not defraud a neighbor will defraud the government or any corporation. It was recently reported that a preacher's comment on Rom. 12: 1, "A true Christian will not even evade his dog tax," caused twenty of his congregation to pay their dog tax the next day. He who cheats anybody, cheats himself most of all.

"Thou shalt not bear false witness." This forbids all evil speaking. Over and over again we need to be reminded to put every evil word we hear of others through three sieves before repeating it: Is it true? Is it kind? Is it necessary? An old lady who was never known to speak an unkind word of any one was exhorting her grandchildren, when one of them said: "But, grandma, dear, you could never say a good word about the devil." The old lady thought a minute and replied: "If we were only half as industrious as he, it would be well for us."

"Thou shalt not covet." Except the first commandment, all thus far have enjoined or forbidden outward acts of word and deed. The tenth goes to the root of the matter. To put God first will prevent idolatry, image worship, profaning of God's name and day. And so if covetousness be kept out of the heart, then we shall also escape the evil deeds that grow out of a bad heart. Covetousness is the heart-sin especially condemned, not only in the Decalogue, but also in the preaching of Christ—a sin that no one confesses, and yet probably the commonest of sins. Except hypocrisy, largely an outgrowth of it, there is nothing Christ so sternly rebukes as covetousness.

OUR SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS' ROUND TABLE

—Our "Round Table" readers having written us to "watch out" to get them good suggestions in the European tour, we send additional matter from authors of the two sessions on Sunday-school and Home and Young People's work at the 13th Presbyterian Alliance Congress at Aberdeen, Scotland. Dr J. A. Worden, in presenting the Sunday school report for the "Western Section," representing the United States and Canada, made the following valuable statements and suggestions: By far the most valuable help to the churches comes from Christian homes. Loss of parental control in these days is partly due to those social changes which have made the old patriarchal supervision and the primitive home but not invented the new method of control by friendship with the children and tactful suggestion. The maintenance of authority to discipline, the reverent home use due to the holy spirit of consecrating boys and girls, are very important to their life. There was hardly a home within reach of the poor to direct them in these delicate and vital problems of family training. The church furnished the dominant membership of Sunday schools of many denominations in the United States, due to powerful competition of other Sunday attractions which Christian men had allowed to grow up—indeed, professedly Christians had sometimes promoted them.

—Dr. W. G. Jordan, of Canada, following up the report, said that while many new agencies were at work for the young, the home was as important, as pre-eminent as ever. Other agencies might supplement it, but must not be regarded as substitutes for it. "The family is the highest product of Christian civilization." Religious life in the home has been one of the most permanent means of maintaining Christianity in the home. It is significant that this great emphasis on the home preceded direct discussion of the Sunday school and Young People's Societies under the grand division of the church's "Care of Young People." It means that other agencies must not displace the responsibility.

—Dr. J. A. Hunter, of Philadelphia, regretted that in discussions of Sunday schools it is generally assumed that they are only for boys and girls. He wished to remind the Alliance that in the United States classes of men were multiplying. The recent leakage of boys from sixteen upward he anticipated would be stopped now that great classes of strong men sat between the boys and the door, suggesting the manliness of Bible study and a Christian life. Dr. Robertson, of Minneapolis, declared that the great problem was to bring the Sunday school into the church, and the church into the Sunday school. This was shown by Rev. W. D. Rowlands to have been accomplished most perfectly in Wales. He had in his Sunday school a class of women all over eighty years of age. They had been in the Sunday school ever since they could walk and talk. Lest a too favorable view should be given of Welsh Sunday schools, another speaker said at another time that Welsh Presbyterian churches were sharing the usual experience of a decrease in Sunday school membership, and he attributed it to (1) inefficient teaching; (2) unconverted teachers; (3) lack of the evangelistic spirit.

. E. M., New Baltimore, Mich. Our Bible class teacher, quoting Heb. 9: 22, "Without the shedding of blood there is no remission of sins," insisted that there is no other possible means of salvation. Do not some passages, like John 3: 17, John 8: 11, 12, promise salvation without reference to such a sacrifice?

The thought of a sacrifice for sin underlies e whole message of the Bible. The fact that me promises do not specifically refer to this es not violate in any way the broad, general rinciple. The Bible as a whole states the ethod by which God undertakes to save peo- e from sin. The Old Testament, in law and ceremony and prophecy, looks forward to a great sacrifice that is to be made, of which the sacrifice of animals is but a type. The Epistles of the New Testament explain how the sacrifice of Christ may be applied by faith to the human soul. The Gospels tell the story of the life of the Saviour and give with great detail and fulness the account of his sacrificial death. He himself said distinctly of his death (Matt. 26: 28), "This is my blood of the new testament, which is shed for many for the remission of sins." Read with special care the 9th and 10th chapters of Hebrews, the 5th and 6th chapters of Romans, I John 1: 7 and the many other passages which state clearly that salvation from sin is wrought by the sacrifice of Christ. The fact of the atonement underlies all the promises of Scripture. It seems idle, as well as dangerous, to speculate whether there may be or might have been some other way of salvation. This way fits in with our knowledge of nature and of life, and has been testified to by multitudes of redeemed souls. We know that through the blood of Christ salvation from sin can be found; we certainly do not know that it can be found in any other way.

J. J. V., Durham, Texas. Gen. 4: 7 was a favorite text with Spurgeon, "Sin lieth at thy door." Cain's sin began as all other sins begin, with disobedience to God. Some people will tell you that "it does not matter how you worship God as long as you are sincere;" but there are right worship and wrong worship and only the right, given in the right spirit, is acceptable. Cain saw that Abel's perfect obedience was accepted, and he was angry and jealous. God is not unjust. Sin does not come upon a man unawares; there is a sentinel to warn of its approach. If it be indulged at the first advances and if the warnings be unheeded, serious danger follows. If, knowing the right, Cain sinned in the face of such knowledge, the sin would lie at his door, i. e., he would be held accountable for it.

G. L. G., Elmira, N. Y. 1. The passage in John 3: 13 is to be taken in connection with the immediately preceding verse. Jesus had told his hearers of earthly things and they believed not. Would they believe if he told them of heavenly things? Yet such knowledge of heavenly things could come only from One who had himself been in heaven, since no other hath ascended, to return with such knowledge, and none could know these things save he that hath descended, even the Son. Many ancient authorities omit the last four words of the verse: "Who is in heaven," regarding them as a later interpolation, unnecessary and tending to confuse the text. 2. In Acts 2: 27, the word "hell" is preferably rendered "hades," the grave, or realm of the dead.

M. R. D., Goldsboro, Md. 1. The particular sin referred to in Matt. 12: 31, 32, is held by Weiss and other commentators to have been the sin of attributing the works of the Holy Spirit in driving out devils, etc., to Satanic agencies. This interpretation is borne out by verses 24, 25 and 26 of the same chapter. 2. Write to Whittaker, publisher, New York, for the book you mention.

K. H. S., Harvard, Neb. The language of I Tim. 2: 11-15 and I Cor. 14: 34, 35 is frequently quoted by the opponents of woman suffrage. Unquestionably the attitude of the church in Pauline times was clear and emphatic on the subject. The apostle evidently was of the opinion that there were callings for which a woman was unfitted by nature, that she had a well-defined sphere which she could fill with grace and satisfaction. We cannot reconcile this view with present-day ideas. It may be, however, that there was a necessity for such teaching at that time, especially in Corinth, where a certain class of women (non-Christians) was very much in evidence. Paul naturally desired that Christian women should be in marked contrast with the conduct of the pagan women. In this view his rules might have an application more local than general.

S. S., St. Vincent, Calif. Please explain what it means to love God. Does it mean the same kind of love we have for our parents and children?

The duty and privilege of loving God become clear and simple when we think of Christ. Aside from him the human conceptions of God are so hazy that it is difficult to realize just what it would mean to love him. But friendship for Christ can be very real and precious. This is a definite part of God's whole wonderful plan. He came to earth in the person of Jesus and won just a few friends. These men and women loved him ardently, tremendously. They loved him as a companion and friend. When he had gone away they loved him with just the same definiteness and intensity and felt that he was still with them. Paul, who had never seen him in the flesh, loved him with just the same passion and fervor as did Peter and John, who had seen him. And all these early Christians knew that in loving Jesus they were loving God. As Professor Herrmann of Marburg says: "In their minds all difference between Christ and God himself vanished." He was God; they knew it. And as they loved him and labored for him and went toward death for him, they knew that they were fulfilling the old command, that had been so strange and difficult before, to love the Lord their God with all their heart and with all their soul and with all their mind and with all their strength. This same experience is possible to-day for every believer. Christ can be to every one of us that ever present Friend in whose companionship we delight and for whom we live and would be willing to die.

Subscriber, Schenectady, N. Y. Rev. 13: 18 is interpreted as meaning that spiritual wisdom, not the wisdom of man, is required to solve the "mystery of iniquity." Many books have been written on the subject and many attempts made to solve it. Irenæus held that the mysterious number was contained in the Greek letters of Lateinos; others, including Bunsen, claimed to find it in the Hebrew letters of Balaam, and still others believe it the symbolical number of a world given over to judgment.

Rev. C. W. Dobbs, Key West, Fla., writes apropos of the criticism of the national hymn America, "I have frequently asked the people to sing the lines as follows:—

"Land where our fathers died,
Land of the freemen's pride,
From every mountain side
Let Freedom ring."

"So amended," he adds, "the hymn can be considered as truly national and unobjectionable, though even then the criticism of the poetry may continue."

"SILK, SATIN, CALICO, RAGS!"

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER, JR.

IN THE fairy tale, the beggar girl always makes a decided furore when she goes about "clad in silks of varied luster and in ropes of pearls." In real life, the princes usually follow in the train of the girl who attracts attention because of her beauty and her clothes, and it is true, in a measure, that in the crowded social gathering the girl dressed in the most daring fashion has a more enjoyable time than the bashful young lady in white muslin, who sits near the wall. All this is true, and yet I once heard a very clever speaker say: "The girl that a man marries is not the girl who is the most popular at a dance." Have you ever stopped to think of that? Two young men at a large reception were talking about one of the young ladies, in a marvelous dress of green and gold and ermine. One of them said: "Isn't she wonderful in that dress?"

Margaret E. Sangster, Jr.

"Yes,' said the other frowningly, "but—well, when I see her in a dress like that, I wonder how many weeks' salary that gown would cost. And then I begin to wonder how she would look in a gingham dress and a white apron. Yes, I like Louise, but I think I will be content to stay in her train of admirers!"

The Rev. John Gunn of Chicago has a great many things to say on this subject. He has started a movement to introduce the young people of his church who have no opportunity of making each other's acquaintance in a conventional way. He says:

"Girls are sharply criticized for their luxury and love of dress. Much of that criticism is harsh and unjust. In many instances, matrimonial reluctance on the part of the young men is due to selfishness and an aversion to the saving and privation which marriage on a small salary entails. Such young men will have to be brought back to the ideals of a pure and honest love."

In a woman's dress the things to be considered are attractiveness, modesty, comfort, protection and health. In some instances, modern style is not only gaudy and sensual, extravagant and wasteful, but physically injurious. The improper dress of women is a barrier to matrimony. Men are beginning to find this out, and they are getting to be sensible enough to take it into account when they come to consider getting married. If there is a "husband famine," as Rev. Mr. Gunn says he thinks already exists, the men are not altogether to blame. There is some foundation for their complaint against the modern woman. On the other hand, as the Chicago pastor points out, we hear complaints from young women that the girl who is good and charming, but nowise forward, has little chance against the girl who is gay and unscrupulous. This is not true, of course, where sensible men are concerned; it is true, however, in the case of men with shallow ideals. If the ultra-smart girls would oniy "stop, look, and listen," they would see a great deal of common sense in these quiet words of Pastor Gunn.

Talking not long ago with a rather serious-minded young friend, our conversation got around to the subject of ideals. "I think," said my friend earnestly, "that on the whole, marriage for the average person is too expensive a proposition to consider. Things are different now from what they were a generation ago. For instance, I make a pretty good salary, but what girl would think it was enough to live on? If I make an ordinary call and find a young lady in a dress such as I could not buy with a month's salary, I could not feel justified in visiting there often. Girls nowadays expect to begin married life on the same scale that they were living on with their parents. They don't seem to realize that the homes they leave are the result of long years of hard work and struggle, while their husbands are just beginning! It is not mere prettiness or finery that is admirable in girls, but something very different," he added thoughtfully.

Yes, it is something very different; a certain charm in the smile, a certain tenderness in the look, and an expression that makes the plainest face radiant. And when a man sees that expression, I hardly think he stops to notice whether the girl is dressed in royal purple or checked gingham.

ANSWERED PRAYERS

"THE Answered Prayer Column has strengthened our faith in God. We called on him in financial straits and deep affliction. He sent the Comforter to cheer and sustain us, and marvelously helped our household. A Constant Reader, Philadelphia." M. J. T. writes from Amelia, Ohio: "I wish to acknowledge God's goodness in answering my prayer in behalf of my daughter in getting a school. God led and opened up the way. I thank him for the many prayers he has answered for me."

Two young ladies, twin sisters, write from Round Mountain, Calif.: "We are glad of the privilege of testifying to the answer of prayer for full salvation, healing of our bodies and of loved ones, conversion of dear ones and friends. As public school teachers we should dread to face the responsibilities of our work without feeling constantly the sacred presence of the Holy Spirit."

Mrs. W. M. B., of Gloversville, N. Y., writes: "I want to acknowledge God's goodness in answering prayer by restoring my husband after many weeks of suffering and a serious operation." L. L. H. writes from Kellyton, Ala.: "My Saviour has answered many prayers which brought sweet comfort, peace and joy. But the two greatest of all his blessings are the salvation of my soul and the restoration and preservation of my precious mother—the guardian angel of my life."

A grateful reader from Texas writes: "Will you allow me space in the columns of your paper to tell of God's great goodness in hearing and answering my prayers for a dear old father, who was seriously injured by a binder running over him? Being notified by phone of the accident, my first thought was to pray. And I prayed while preparing to go, prayed all the way (a distance of five miles), prayed until we knew he was recovering. And then I thanked God from the innermost depths of my heart for his great condescension in answering my prayer. I wish to add that before we reached his bedside, I felt a sweet relief from my fears for his life and truly believed he would get well, and he has."

Acknowledgments of answers to prayer have also been received from:

; THE COUNTRY CHURCH DECLINING?

as is shown by this latest study the country church, "in small com- nities having only one church the s in attendance was markedly less in in like communities having two more churches," then it is undoubt- y true that the ideal community s one church and one minister; and, us add, that it places equal empha- upon doctrines and morals, prin- les and their application."

The Lutherans have long known s to be true and acted accordingly. e charge of narrowness and exclu- eness was freely brought against em wherever they attempted to in- t upon doctrinal earnestness and to ganize in compact communities. hile they smarted under these accu- tions, they nevertheless persisted in course which they believed to be de- nded of them by the Word of God. hile not surprising, it is none the s gratifying to find that their po- ion is endorsed by the findings of o impartial observers who ap- oached this question from the angle unbiased scientific investigation.

The correctness of several other nclusions presented as the result of is study may not be so readily ad- itted. The scientific method, as I derstand it, peremptorily demands the first condition of all sound in- stigation that no fact be overlooked hich may have even the remotest earing upon the subject under con- deration. To overlook such a fact eans to incur the risk of a false de- uction. We must therefore ask: ave all the facts in this study of the o counties been given proper con- deration? Are we justified in con- dering these two counties, the one in ermont, the other in New York, typi- l of the country at large? Are we stified in drawing conclusions from ese two counties and applying them agricultural communities in gen- al?

Surely, neither of these counties is ypical, let us say, of Carver County, Minnesota, of Adams County, Indi- na, or of the Saginaw Valley, Michi- an, which are compactly settled by he descendants of German immi- rants. In Carver County, Minnesota, he Missouri Synod of the Lutheran Church has twelve strong congrega- ions, none of which show any decline n membership or tendency on the art of their people to leave the farm or the city. The same thing may be aid of the so-called Franconian colo- ies in the Saginaw Valley, Michigan, nd the Plattdeutsch farmers of Ad- ms County, Indiana. True, the two ounties studied by Mr. Gill and Mr. Pinchot are occupied by a Protestant opulation of nearly pure native tock. A comparison with conditions resented in a territory occupied by eople of German or Scandinavian de- cent is therefore excluded. If that s admitted, then it must also be ad- nitted that the conditions in these wo counties are by no means typical f rural America at large; but apply nly to a certain type of rural com- nunity. If that is admitted, we may well ask ourselves what becomes of he scientific method, which studies two counties, assumes them to be typi- al and then goes on to generalize and write calamity scarehead jeremiads on "The Decline of the Rural Church?"

The scientific method also demands, after all the facts have been collected and arranged, that extreme caution be exercised in drawing conclusions from these facts. For instance, when it is stated as a sign of decline that, while the membership of the Protestant churches in these two counties is of pure native stock, almost one-third of the ministers are foreign-born or of foreign-born parentage, I am by no means ready to accept this conclusion. It may just as well be an indication of strength. It may with equal right be interpreted to show that the Protest- ant churches of these old communi- ties, although weakened by the loss of their virile young manhood, which either laid the foundations for the building of the church in the pio- neer West or strengthened the city churches of the East, yet had suffi- cient religious energy to bring the immigrant's children into their Sun- day schools and theological seminaries with such success that they could ac- ceptably fill positions which should otherwise have been held as places of honor by their own children. If we had all the facts in the case, it might well appear that the infusion of this new blood into these old churches added an element of strength which they otherwise might not have pos- sessed. To speak of this as a loss rather than a gain, a sign of weak- ness rather than of strength, is there- fore a somewhat careless inference, inspired not so much by scientific ex- actness as by an unconscious bias in favor of a certain type of civilization or certain social ideals. When it is pointed out that in both these coun- ties country churches are less liber- ally supported than they were twenty years ago, it may well be that the ex- planation is to be sought in the ineffi- cient agricultural methods so often pursued by our population of pure na- tive stock, rather than in any lack of efficiency or faithfulness on the part of the rural church, which is not now and never was commissioned to teach agriculture. Reckless soil exploita- tion has been the besetting sin, if not crime against posterity, of the Ameri- can farmer. As he began to reap the fruits of what agricultural writers call "the grasshopper method of farming," he usually sought to stop the leak by economizing at the very point where he could least afford to be parsimonious, in his support of church and school. Having robbed the soil, he proceeded to rob his children. He was thus entirely consistent. But, if this fact proves the rural church to be a passing institution, it also proves the country school to be a passing institution, something which is not quite so readily admitted by writers on this subject. The remedy is in- creased agricultural efficiency pro- moted through increased efficiency in the direction of vocational training on the part of the country school. In- stead of being content with having persuaded the community to make pro- vision for the teaching of physiology in our public schools, let the rural church go on to urge the combination of culture courses with practical farm and household work. As this is done, it will be found not that the country church needs reorganization, but that increased agricultural efficiency will provide it with the means to do those things for which it is organized. It may then be barely possible that our editorial writers will cease to speak of the rural church as a declining or passing institution.

I also fail to see how the fact that ministers' salaries when measured by purchasing power have shown a marked decrease warrants the deduc- tion made from it as to the state of the country church. The same thing must be said of all salaries. In no case have they kept pace with the in- creased cost of living. And yet no man will use this fact to prove that banking or the United States Govern- ment is a declining institution. Why, then, should it be thus used with re- spect to the country church? Surely no more need be said to prove that sci- entific methods, which I understand to mean the painstaking collation of all vital facts and extreme caution in making deductions, may be exceed- ingly unscientific and unreliable.

But it is not that of which we were speaking. It is the decline of the country church. One question re- mains unanswered: How do men come to speak of it in this manner?

That the church as organized on the lines and in the spirit of the de- nominational system has its very great weaknesses cannot be gainsaid. Not the least of these is the revival system of evangelism with its lack of emphasis upon thorough religious instruction, especially of the church's youth, its disregard of sound doctrine and of the regular use of the means of grace, and its intolerance of all discipline and churchly order in the interest of denominational growth. Another is its unfortunate attitude toward immigration. This is usually much more noticeable in the country than in the city. Surely a church which is so utterly out of sympathy with the "foreigner" that it can look upon his presence as "a real peril," and openly say that "his industry, frugality, honesty, and intensive farming cannot atone for the decline of moral fiber which results from his influence on American social life," is lamentably lacking in the first of Christian virtues, charity. I have some knowledge of our immigration problems. I have spent a good part of my life among "the strangers within our gates" whose "industry, frugality, honesty and intensive farming" have made the most prosperous and progressive States of our country what they are to-day. I have yet to learn that the immigrant is in any way benefited by an unsympathetic, uncharitable attempt to make him suddenly forget the inherited customs and social usages of his former home, with all their restraining force, in order to taste to the full a liberty which, in the hands of our own people, often becomes a license. To question the evangelical Protestantism of a Pole or Slav immigrant, who has kept the faith under centuries of oppression, because his social usages and customs differ from ours, and to insist that "he is an asset and a possibility in our national life only if his character can be affected thoroughly by American evangelical Christianity" is neither a charitable nor a helpful attitude for any church to take.

IS THE COUNTRY CHURCH DECLINING?

But these weaknesses, serious as they may be, neither explain nor justify the sweeping assertion that the country church is a declining institution.

Is not this the true explanation? Earnest men and women, seeking to remedy some economic, social or moral evil, and oppressed with the impotence of their own unaided efforts, seek an effective instrument for the carrying out of their plans. Here is the church, an institution established for service, which has endured for twenty centuries. Surely, it ought to take up this matter. Why not appeal to the church?

Very few people have any appreciation of the number of such appeals coming to the average city minister. If I were to read from my pulpit all the announcements which come to my study table every week, there would be no time left for preaching the Word. If I were to join all the movements, organizations, leagues and alliances which would enlist my support and perform the duties allotted to me, I would have no time to visit my sick. Surely, my first duty is to my church.

I therefore feel that this present investigation of the country church in an effort to better the conditions surrounding life in the open country is a mistake. Not that these conditions need no betterment. There can be no question as to that. But the most effective medium for the attainment of this result—agricultural efficiency, organization and co-operation—is the country school rather than the country church. As I understand the spirit of evangelical Protestantism, its proper office with respect to these things is inspirational rather than institutional. Let us beware lest we forget this truth. When we forget that, we shall have forgotten four hundred years of history. Then the Protestant Church will indeed be a declining institution.

other went down a day in front, usual, to get ready the rooms. was a proceeding which occaed no comment. And the family eeded joyously on the evening of second day of August to begin the thly orgy of summer sport and ess.

he house which mother had taken r many toilsome journeys to that other resorts was one in a row ng the sea-front, on which its gargate opened. When the fly rumup to the door, and father took is Panama and wiped his heated head previous to his usual alterion with the fly-man, Phyllis, the emaid, appeared on the step with dd smile on her face. But mother not visible.

"Where's your mistress?" bawled ter across the flagged passage. "k her to give me change for half own."

"She isn't 'ere, sir. She's gone y," answered Phyllis, and appred as if she enjoyed the flinging the bomb. "Drove to Seaham ction in that werry fly to catch two-ten."

hey all flocked into the house in sternation, and glared at one aner.

"Didn't she say anything to you, ?" inquired Mr. Barrington, in his t commanding manner.

"No, sir, but she lef' a note. It's the dinin'-room mantelpiece. Tea's dy, sir; shall I bring it in?"

Ir. Barrington stalked to the din-room and retrieved the note from mantelpiece. When he had perused he flung it down indignantly.

"Your mother, my dears, appears have gone suddenly out of her nd."

ean pounced upon the sheet as it tered to the threadbare carpet, l she read it aloud.

"My dears," it began, "I find I'm tired for Bore-on-Sea this year, l that I must have a little rest. I n't mention it before because of fuss. Please don't make any s now, because you won't find . I've made all my arrangements have a nice quiet holiday. Proba- I shall spend a good part of it in l. It will be quite good for you all get a rest from me. Jean can do housekeeping. It will be excellent her. Hoping you will all have asant holiday, and I will be sure to ready to go home when you are.—ther."

They glared at one another, but nody said a word. Father walked out to the little backyard and stared out him rather helplessly. There is something inside of him, inside of em all, indeed, which made them sperately uncomfortable. But nothg could be done. Mother had cast em off. The Universal Provider d Immemorial Scapegoat was in en revolt. And nothing could be ne! That was the worst of it, nothg could be done!

They considered themselves a brainy owd, but apparently nobody had any ain to spare for the solution of that rticular problem, and nobody had a ngle suggestion to make for retrievg mother.

It was not a thing they could talk uch about. To start to make inuiries of friends would be simply to ve the show away. They decided to old their tongues, and go on as if othing had happened.

In a certain London house which id never appeared roomier or more elightful, Mordy-for-short came to s own.

Before he had recovered from the smal shock of the departing baggage art and the accompanying flies, the dored of his soul came back smiling, little tremulous, to be rapturously elcomed by him and by Eliza Tidd.

"Now, Eliza, I'm going to bed, and ou don't come near me or even knock t the door till I give you leave. For the first time in my life I'll have my sleep out."

Eliza was immensely amused, fully understanding, and discreet as the grave. She had not been cook-general in the Barrington household for nine years for nothing, and when the innocent plot was confided to her she entered into it heart and soul.

"Mam, if anybody gits it hout of me it'll be over me dead body. An' ef any of 'em comes back, we'll 'ide yer. My, wot fun!"

She went to bed at nine o'clock that evening, and did not awake till ten next morning. When she did awake, she simply went over to the window, looked out on the square drowsing in the sun, and crept back to bed.

She had slept a round of the clock, but she was still tired, body and soul, how tired she hardly knew. Eliza, on the watch, heard her, and was promptly at her bedside with a cup of tea.

"Thank you, Eliza, but I'm not getting up. Bring me a newspaper or a book, and don't ask me what I want to eat, there's a dear!"

"I won't ast you nuthin', mam, so 'elp me bob," said Eliza, as she dashed something from her eyes. For the face of her old mistress was tired and old at the moment, and she remembered her in the joy of her youth.

It was the third day before she felt that she wanted to get up and go out.

"Now I'm going to see London, Eliza, and have the time of my life. I want to be quiet, and not talk to anybody for days and days on end. I do believe my tongue is the tiredest bit of me, because of the questions it's had to answer for fifty years."

If there had been any very observant and constant traveler over certain omnibus routes during that particularly benign August, they might have seen on many occasions a small, neat, well-dressed woman with a sunshiny face and keen, quiet eyes that occasionally gleamed with fun when they alighted on a bit of the comedy of the streets. One day she appeared before the vision of a plain-looking, middle-aged gentleman, who immediately grew visibly excited and ran after the omnibus, without, however, catching it up. Never had the driver and conductor been more conspicuously unseeing. They had obviously entered into a non-seeing conspiracy.

About half past seven that evening Septimus Barrington fitted his latch-key in his own door in Linden Gardens, and admitted himself, quite in the usual way. He was greeted by a particularly appetizing smell, and when he stalked into the dining-room beheld a lunch cloth laid on one end of the table and his wife sitting there with her bonnet on, discussing a mutton cutlet with tomatoes and green peas.

She nodded cheerfully to him.

"Hulloa, Septimus. I suppose you've had to come up on business. You've caught me neatly, but it doesn't matter, for next week would see it out. Sit down and have a cutlet. There is one to spare. You remember Eliza's cutlets? Well, she hasn't gone off a bit. This one's done to a turn."

Septimus Barrington frowned deeply and closed the door.

"I only want to ask you one question, Theresa. Have you or have you not gone out of your mind?"

"I haven't. I have a sound mind in a sound body, and, what I haven't had for years, a rested one. How are they all? I hope Bore-on-Sea came up to expectations."

"It was positively loathsome, and you knew it was going to be loathsome. Why did you do it, Theresa? Do you think now that it was the sort of thing a decent middle-aged woman, the mother of a family, should have done?"

"It was the only way; I wanted to rest, and I have taken it. I've enjoyed every minute of it, and it has done me worlds of good. Don't I look ten years younger?"

SCHOOLBOYS IN TRANSIT

WHEN grandpa started out to school
Each morning, long ago,
He tramped along the country road
With younger folk in tow;
A-whistling in his simple glee,
He walked a mile or two or three.

Now daddy, not so long ago,
When he was a little tike,
With auntie on the handlebars
Rode schoolward on a "bike";
A-spinning down the village street,
As gay a sight as you could meet.

When I am starting out to school,
Although it isn't far,
I'm bundled carefully and sent
In a whizzing motor-car;
The grandson of my grandpa, I Think of my grandpa's days and sigh.

I see the past and then I see
The future just as plain,
When in his turn my boy shall sail
To school by aeroplane.
Be it afoot, awheel, awing,
To go to school seems quite the thing!

Septimus admitted it grudgingly.

"I might be a Bluebeard or an ogre, Theresa, and the children selfish monsters to hear you speak! All you had to say was that you needed a holiday."

"I've been trying to say it for twelve years," she answered, with a twinkle in her eye. "But tell me how they got on."

"They didn't get on at all. We're all to pieces. We've quarreled every day of our lives, and there hasn't been one bite of food fit to eat in the house. The servants are both going."

"I'll bring them back," she answered serenely. "Do sit down, dear, and have a bite of dinner; then if you are very good, I'll let you stop the night."

She laughed, but as she rose to get an extra knife and fork from the drawer something bright and warm trembled on her eyelash.

Mother's holiday was over, five days earlier than she had expected. But she didn't mind. She knew from the expression in her husband's eye that she would get another one long before she felt herself again in desperate need.

ARE WE LOOKING FOR HIS RETURN?

MORE LETTERS FROM CHRISTIAN HERALD READERS ON THE MOMENTOUS QUESTION

SIN increasing, crime prevailing,
Tell us that the end is near!
Selfishness abounding,
Gold the idol everywhere,
Crowds the mammon god surrounding,
Tell us that the end is near.
Formal godliness increasing,
Power denied and forms held dear;
Rites, so popular and pleasing,
Tell us that the end is near.
Lawlessness, so vastly spreading;
Void of reverence, awe or fear—
Never once His vengeance dreading—
Tell us that the end is near.

No Lack of Religion in the World, But It Has Fallen Into False Doctrines

I HAVE been interested in reading the replies to the question: "Is the world ready for His return?" I think that we might give the answer "No," or he would be here, as everything is done in "the fulness of time." There can be no doubt of the correctness of the suggestions of J. McC., that the world is "materially advancing, but spiritually declining," and that, too, in the face of all the church work that is being carried on. We must take the words of the Scriptures before the opinions of self-satisfied men.

The New Testament prophecies do not indicate a want of religion in the latter days, but that the world will have fallen into false doctrines. Paul wrote to Timothy that "the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears; and they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables." (II Tim. 4: 3, 4.) And in Revelation, John sees the religious peoples of the world compared to a gaudily betrinketed woman, holding in her hand a cup of abominable liquor, with which she has made "the inhabitants of the world drunk." (Rev. 17: 1-2.) The judgment of this institution is foretold in chapter 18, verse 21, "And a mighty angel took up a stone like a great mill-stone, and cast it into the sea, saying, Thus with violence shall that great city Babylon be thrown down, and shall be found no more at all."

No, the earth is not ready, for, like the Amorites of old, its "iniquity is not yet full." When it is so he will return, and then let men beware! And, in the meantime, the watchmen should be sounding the warning, "Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues." (Rev. 18: 4.) JAMES T. IRWIN.

The World and the Church Too Indifferent to Think of His Return

"IS the world ready for His return?" No. And never will be. Not one-twentieth part of mankind has been brought to a knowledge of the Saviour yet, and the greater majority of his professed followers are indifferent about his return. They are so taken up with the affairs of this life they do not want him to return, for it would upset all their plans for their future. The great buildings of steel and concrete indicate what is uppermost in the minds of the people. As the Psalmist says, Ps. 49: 11, "Their inward thought is, that their houses shall continue forever, and their dwelling places to all generations; they call their lands after their own names."

"If Jesus came to-day would he be glad or grieved with the progress of his church?" Grieved. True, the church has made some advancement, but with the fabulous amount of money in the hands of his people, and the wonderful opportunities at her door, the church is on the decline. As our Lord looked down the centuries with prophetic eye, and saw the abounding iniquity that would mark the closing days of this dispensation, we are not surprised that he asked "When the son of man cometh, will he find faith in the earth?" Paul in II Thes. 2: 3, says: "Let no man deceive you by any means; for that day shall not come except there come a falling away first." It has been God's desire that the church should live on the very tiptoe of expectation, looking for the return of her Lord. The apostles did so and so should we. I know of no greater truth in all the Word of God that ought to be put before the people than this blessed truth of the personal return of the Lord.

Would He Find the Wickedness of To-day Like That of Antediluvian Times?

I THINK he would find just what he expected, and so clearly prophesied while on earth. When the disciples came to him privately, saying: "Tell us, when shall these things be? and what shall be the sign of thy coming?" his answer was a prophecy of the things that are coming to pass to-day in the world. (Matt. 24: 38, 39.) To better understand what Jesus here meant, let us turn to what God said in regard to the conditions existing in the days of Noah before the flood. (Gen. 6: 12, 13.) It is difficult to get the people of any age to see themselves as they really are. The antediluvians had wholly departed from God, and as God said of them, "Every imagination of the thoughts of man's heart was only evil continually." Yet they heeded not the warnings of righteous Noah and perished.

From a recent issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, I quote as follows: "It is a most distressing thing to note that labor leaders and labor organizations occasionally make defiant boasts of their disbelief in God. At one or two recent labor demonstrations a banner was displayed bearing the dreadful words: 'No God, No Master.'"

The antediluvians heeded not the warnings of Noah and perished in the flood. Israel turned a deaf ear to the prophets of the Lord, and went into captivity. The Jews rejected Christ Jesus as their King, and were cast out. Will the people of these latter days do likewise, and meet a like fate?

Christ Jesus comes at the darkest hour, the midnight, of this world. "And at midnight there was a cry made, Behold, the bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him."

Oh, let us be like the wise virgins, with oil in our vessels, with our lamps ready, to go in with the bridegroom to the marriage. (Rev. 19: 9.) W. R. ADAMS.

Larned, Kan.

DO YOU KNOW YOUR BIBLE?

IF the friend who wrote a fault-finding letter could be present when the problems of our big Bible Class are being considered, he would be convinced that we try in every case to be most painstakingly fair. He thinks the fact that names are sometimes added to an Honor Roll after its first publication indicates unfairness. It indicates just the other thing. It means that if we see that another passage answers our question as well as the one we gave, we go over the letters again and add to the Honor Roll those who gave this answer. Answers are based on the Authorized Version. Some of the misunderstandings have arisen by the use of the Revised Versions.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S MEETINGS

NOTES ON THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR, EPWORTH LEAGUE AND BAPTIST YOUNG PEOPLE'S UNION TOPICS

Favorite Verses*

THIS favorite passage starts off like another commencement of the Bible. The Old Testament begins: "In the beginning ...d." The first words of the Gospel John are: "In the beginning was ...e Word."

These verses from John's Gospel ...ntain some wonderful statements ...out Christ. He is called the Word. ... that term we are to understand ...at Christ is the message of God to ...en, rather that he is God in his man...ard expression. All that God is in ...lation to men he is through Christ. ...n him dwelleth all the fulness of the ...odhead bodily." (Col. 2: 9.) Most ...stinct of all is the saying of Jesus ...mself to Philip: "He that hath seen ...e hath seen the Father."

So the first step in this great narra...ve written by the apostle John about ...s friend Jesus is the statement that ... was eternal and divine. He de...ares that all creation was wrought ...rough his agency. He declares that ...fe had its source in him and that the ...fe which he himself possesses is the ...ght of men. That light shone out in ...e darkness and the darkness could ...ot overtake nor conquer nor put it ...it. The word in the fifth verse ...anslated "comprehended" in the ...uthorized Version is made "appre...ended" in the Revised Versions. It is ...e same word used by the Saviour ...imself about darkness in John 12: 35 ...nd translated in the Revised Versions ...overtake."

This is the first picture that we have, then. The picture of a great Personality who was the expression of God, the bestower of life and of a light that no darkness could quench. There is a sudden transition from this sublime and mystical description to a very commonplace and ordinary remark: "There was a man." This statement is made more natural and familiar by the statement of the man's name: "There was a man whose name was John." But between these two ends of this sentence there is a phrase which makes it worthy of the place it holds in the midst of these great sayings. This man, John, was "sent from God." Christ was to be the link between God and man; John was to be the forerunner and the announcer of the Christ. He "came for a witness, to bear witness of the Light, that all men through him might believe."

In this word "believe," John takes another great step in the progress of his Gospel. It is one of the keywords of his book. He sums up the purpose of his writing in a verse near the end: "These (things) are written that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, and that believing ye might have life through his name." He closes as he begins: with the thought of a faith that will lead us to life.

His introduction goes on to describe in sad and simple words the fact of the Saviour's rejection: "He was in the world, and the world was made by him, and the world knew him not. He came unto his own, and his own received him not." Then he leaps forward to the joyous declaration: "But as many as received him, to them gave he the right to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name." He adds another great thought, which is amplified in the later chapters of his Gospel: "Born of God." One more great word occurs in this brief introduction to John's Gospel. It is the word "glory." That is a beautiful word. It should be oftener in the minds and upon the lips of God's people, because the great glory which Christ had he has promised to us. In his high-priestly prayer he said (John 17: 22): "The glory which thou gavest me I have given them."

No wonder these are "favorite verses." Glance again at the wonderful words: Life, light, believe, sons of God, glory!

School and College Night*

A NUMBER of things should be considered on School and College Night. We should consider what school and college can do for us; we should consider what we can do for school and college.

The Christian student must approach the whole matter of his studies in an entirely different spirit and from an entirely different point of view from that of the worldly student. The Christian faces the problem, for instance, of whether or not he shall "go on to college" with the question: "Which plan will enable me to do most for Christ?" Sometimes the leading will be very clear to go to college; sometimes duty makes it necessary to stay home. One positive thing should be said in passing. It is never necessary for any earnest young person to stay away from college through lack of funds unless he has others dependent upon him. Any young man or woman with grit can pay his or her way through a college course.

Then all through your student life you will be thinking of those two things: "What can I get from my school or college advantages that will make me a more efficient worker for Christ?" and "What can I do for my fellow-students and associates to bring them to Christ and to help them in his service?"

Many great religious movements have begun among students. Much of the inspiration and vigor of present-day Christianity centers in and issues from the schools and colleges. Learn all you can. Do not be a prig or a crank. Prove again that an out-and-out Christian may be the most popular and best-loved student in the place. In social matters, in athletics, in the classroom, be straight and clean and kind and merry and industrious, so that when others wonder what makes you so attractive they will realize that the answer is—Christ.

Christian Culture Courses*

THE year for Christian Culture Courses begins October 1. Three courses are offered: Bible readers; sacred literature; conquest missionary course. Christian Culture Day should be a time of inspiration and decision. A good program is furnished gratuitously by the American Baptist Publication Society at 1701 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia. Interest in the meeting should not be allowed to subside until the plans for the year's courses are fixed, classes organized, and individual students enrolled.

The Bible Readers' Course is arranged by Professor Ira M. Price and provides for daily readings, which will cover the Old Testament once and the New Testament four times in four years. The Sacred Literature Course for this year is "A Re-Statement of Baptist Principles," prepared by Dr. Philip L. Jones. The topics discussed are: The Soul's Direct Relation to God; Faith, the Key to the Kingdom; Jesus Christ's Supreme Headship; The Church a Spiritual Democracy; The Ordinances of the Church and Their Symbolism; Obedience to Jesus Christ the Test of Discipleship; The Absolute Severance of Church and State; Individual Freedom Essential to Progress; Love, Not Law, the Binding Factor; A Redemptive Service the Church's Supreme End. The Conquest Missionary Course is prepared by Mrs. W. J. Sly. Its subjects are assigned as the topics for the regular union devotional meetings held on the last Sunday of each month.

THE LIGHT OF OTHER DAYS

A PICTURE hangs upon the wall,
On which in thoughtful mood we gaze.
To far off scenes it gives a call.
To childhood days, when we were small.
On many scenes it throws its rays,
We call it "Light of Other Days."
How much of life we now recall—
Of days when we were children all.

A table holds an open book,
On which a candlestick is placed,
With "tallow-dip" of ancient look,
Which once was seen in many a nook.
Its outline now is seldom traced;
Its memory almost effaced.
So weak, so feeble was its ray,
The snuffers often came in play.

And that was once the hazy light
By which to read, by which to toil,
When daylight rays had taken flight,
When came the darkness of the night.
That was the light the eyes to spoil,
From such a light we now recoil.
Too dim for work, too dim for play,
That light of old has had its day.

And yet, from such a light, the rays
Have penetrated far and wide.
Our ancestors—we give them praise
For work well done, in many ways.
Though dim and poor the light supplied,
Their monumental works abide.
And so, with pleasure and with praise,
We greet the "Light of Other Days."

PRESIDENT WILSON READING HIS MESSAGE ON MEXICO TO THE MEMBERS OF CONGRESS

Copyright, International News Service

AVERTING A MEXICAN CRISIS

IT IS many years since the government of the United States has found itself in a situation so pregnant with the possibilities of international complications as that which the administration Washington faced late in August. The exge of diplomatic communications between ident Wilson through his special representa- Mr. John Lind and Foreign Minister Gamboa exico had reached a point where it seemed that the admission of failure or the declaration of was left to President Wilson.

r several days the President had been at work the message which he had intended to read to nt session of Congress on August 26. The re- of a further communication from General rta's government caused the postponement of delivery of the message until August 27. Acpanying President Wilson's message was the y of the Huerta government to proposals set forth through Mr. l. This reply was written by eign Minister Gamboa, addressed pecial Envoy Lind, and rejected rely and in rather curt terms the erican proposals. Mr. Gamboa's munication was not read by the sident, but was furnished to Cons as a printed document. Without once referring to Mr. Lind by ne, it addressed him repeatedly "Mr. Confidential Agent." The re tenor of the letter was intered as intentionally ironical.

eñor Gamboa suggested an alterive policy for the United States, chief features of which were:

eception of a Mexican ambassain Washington.

hat the United States send a new passador to Mexico without reints.

trict observance of the neutrallaws and "see to it that no mate- or monetary assistance is given the rebels."

Unconditional recognition of the erta government.

he event which took place in the pitol on August 27 is unparalleled the nation's history in more than entury. No other President since orge Washington has appeared before Congress on a matter pertaining to the relations of this government with a foreign nation. At one o'clock President Wilson stood at the clerk's desk in the House chamber and read his address in the easy conversational tone with which he usually speaks in public. He outlined the position which this government should take with regard to Mexico and concluded his address with the prediction that "the steady pressure of moral force will, before many days, break the barriers of pride and prejudice down, and we shall triumph as Mexico's friends sooner than we could triumph as her enemies. And how much more handsomely, with how much higher and finer satisfaction of conscience and of honor."

The President first referred to the general conditions existing in Mexico. In this connection he said:

"We are glad to call ourselves the friends of Mexico, and we shall, I hope, have many an occasion, in happier times as well as in these days of trouble and confusion, to show that our friendship is genuine and disinterested, capable of sacrifice and every generous manifestation.

"The peace, prosperity and contentment of Mexico mean more, much more to us than merely an enlarged field for our commerce and enterprise. They mean an enlargement of the field of self-government and the realization of the hopes and rights of a nation with whose best aspirations, so long suppressed and disappointed, we deeply sympathize. We shall yet prove to the Mexican people that we know how to serve them without first thinking how we shall serve ourselves."

He continued, saying that after months full of peril and anxiety, conditions have not improved, in fact, had grown worse, and "the pacification of the country by the authorities at the capital had evidently become impossible by any other means than force." He stated that the Huerta government had not made good its claims, and that "war and disorder, devastation and confusion seemed to threaten to become the settled fortune of the distracted country." Reference was then made to Mr. Lind and his despatch to Mexico. Here the President said:

"We are seeking to counsel Mexico for her own good and in the interest of her own peace, and not for any other purpose whatever. The government of the Unted States would deem itself discredited if it had any selfish or ulterior purpose in transactions where the peace, happiness and prosperity of a whole people are involved. It is acting as its friendship for Mexico, not as any selfish interest, dictates.

"The present situation in Mexico is incompatible with the fulfilment of international obligations on the part of Mexico, with the civilized development of Mexico herself, and with the maintenance of tolerable political and economic conditions in Central America. It is upon no

GOVERNOR MAJOR ON THE ROAD IN MISSOURI

GOVERNOR HODGES OF KANSAS LENDING A HAND

"PULLING MISSOURI OUT OF THE MUD"

UNDER the slogan, "Pull Missouri out of the mud," 250,000 men spent August 20 and 21 in work upon the highways of that State. Governor Elliot W. Major had, some weeks before, proclaimed those days "good roads" days and urged every able-bodied man in the State to turn out and lend a hand. From distant sections came predictions of dismal failure and the echoes of loud laughter from the engineering profession. Now it is all over and the predictors are discreetly silent, and you can't find even a smile, except on the face of Missouri.

The whole State took to the idea like a country community to a barn-raising. Doctors, lawyers, and clergymen, bankers, merchants, clerks, farmers, day laborers, union laborers and convicts worked shoulder to shoulder for those two days. The Missouri Federation of Women's Clubs backed the movement by adding picnic features to the occasion. Lunches were served to all the workers, governors and convicts, and all between them.

Clad in khaki overalls, Governor Major of Missouri and Governor Hodges of Kansas put in the two full days' work. Both swung pick and shovel till they had blistered their hands, then took turns at guiding road-grading machines. Governor Major did a little of everything, including the touching off of dynamite charges.

The result of Missouri's good roads picnic is likely to be felt all over America, for when totaled into figures they are astonishing. In a signed statement, Governor Major estimates the work done at 500,000 days or $1,000,000 worth of improvement. He continues:

"The work done by a large number of splendid road equipments, some of which can do as much as twenty-five teams can do in a week, plus graveling and grading with teams, etc., plus the free material furnished by the counties and contributed by various establishments for concrete bridges, culverts, etc., can safely be estimated at $300,000. One first-class road equipment can grade and level five to ten miles of dirt road in a day.

"The amount of cash contributed by the citizens of the various counties and the cities can conservatively be estimated at $200,000. Thus the actual work placed upon the roads, plus material and cash, will safely make a grand total of $1,500,000.

"One of the great features is the fact that a 'good roads' spirit has been kindled in Missouri which will bring rich fruitage throughout many years and will not abate until Missouri has a system of good roads unequaled by any other State in the Union. The results are such that there is no horizon which can bound the present and future benefits.

"The 'good roads days' have been such a splendid success that I expect to make the same two [illegible] 'good roads days' in 1914, and will call upo[n] governor of each State in the republic to [k]e those days 'good roads days' in each commonw[ea]l The spirit is abroad in the land, and the gove[rn]ors will unquestionably join in the movement, a[nd] this way we shall have two good roads days [a] will be nation-wide."

"It has been one of the great days of my [li]fe," said Governor Major at the end of the first [da]y. "As a boy I traveled over nothing but bad r[oa]ds. I made up my mind then that if I ever got a ch[an]ce I would do all I could for better highways. [Th]e governor of Arkansas has advised me he ha[s] set aside September 2 and 3 for road work, and [I] am happy at the results."

"I intend to fix two road days when I re[a]ch home," said Governor Hodges. "It is remarkable how many have responded to Governor Ma[jo]r's proclamation."

When the last of the workers knocked off, Go[v]ernor Hodges grasped the Missouri executive's h[an]d. "It's over, governor, and I congratulate you [on] the State of Missouri," said he.

"And I thank you and the people of Kansas [for] letting you come down to help us," responded Governor Major, who later celebrated the event w[ith a] dinner in honor of the Kansas executive.

AVERTING A MEXICAN CRISIS

common occasion, therefore, that the United States offers her counsel and assistance. All America cries out for a settlement.

"A satisfactory settlement seems to be conditioned on:

"(a) Immediate cessation of fighting throughout Mexico, a definite armistice solemnly entered into and scrupulously observed;

"(b) Security given for an early and free election in which all will agree to take part:

"(c) The consent of General Huerta to bind himself not to be a candidate for election as president of the republic at this election and

"(d) The agreement of all parties to abide by the results of the election and co-operate in the most loyal way in organizing and supporting the new administration.

"The government of the United States will be glad to play any part in this settlement or in its carrying out which it can play honorably and consistently with international right. It pledges itself to recognize and in every way possible and proper to assist the administration chosen and set up in Mexico in the way and on the conditions suggested."

Referring to the likelihood of continued internal disorder in Mexico, the President touched on the increased danger to the non-combatants. Here he said:

"The position of outsiders is always particularly trying and full of hazard where there is civil strife, and a whole country is upset. We should earnestly urge all Americans to leave Mexico at once, and should assist them to get away in every way possible—not because we would mean to slacken in the least our efforts to safeguard their lives and their interests, but because it is imperative that they should take no unnecessary risks when it is physically possible for them to leave the country.

"We should let every one who assumes to exercise authority in any part of Mexico know in the most unequivocal way that we shall vigilantly watch the fortunes of those Americans who cannot get away, and shall hold those responsible for their sufferings and losses to a definite reckoning. That can be and will be made plain beyond the possibility of a misunderstanding."

FEDERICO GAMBOA
Mexican Secretary of Foreign Affairs

Just before closing the address the President [ou]tlined the neutral policy which it is his intention [to] follow. His words in this connection were:

"I shall follow the best practice of nations in [the] matter of neutrality by forbidding the exportation of arms or munitions of war of any kind from the United States to any part of the republic of Mexico—a policy suggested by several interesting precedents and certainly dictated by many manifest considerations of practical expediency. We cannot in the circumstances be the partisans of either party to the contest that now distracts Mexico, or constitute ourselves the virtual umpire between them."

After the receipt of Señor Gamboa's last note Mr. Lind, seeing that his mission was ended, had been advised to return from Mexico City. Following these instructions he had proceeded to Vera Cruz, but even while President Wilson was addressing Congress Mr. Lind was receiving a note which the Mexican Foreign Minister had rushed to him and a new status of the Mexican problem was developed. It was announced that Mr. Lind's departure from Mexico would be postponed and that a further attempt would be made to reach a conclusion which would bring about permanent peace in Mexico. So far as could be learned, up to the date of preparation of this issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for printing, Mr. Lind virtually has assented to the Mexican Government's announcement that constitutional elections for president and congress will be held on October 26, and in so doing has withdrawn for future consideration President Wilson's request that security be given "for an early and free election, in which all agree to take part."

To a repetition of Mr. Lind's proposal that President Huerta shall give assurances that he will not be a candidate for re-election, Señor Gamboa has responded that the Mexican constitution provides for the elimination of Huerta from the contest if he maintains the provisional presidency up to election day.

FRANCIS BURTON HARRISON, the Congressional representative of the Twelfth New York District, has been appointed to succeed W. Cameron Forbes as governor general of the Philippine Islands. Mr. Harrison's appointment came as a ..se to government circles in Washington, as his nomination for the post ..uggested only a few days before it was sent to the Senate by President Wilson, and there immediately and unanimously confirmed. Mr. Harrison stands high in the House and is regarded as one of the leaders in tariff matters. He is thoroughly familiar with Philippine affairs, as he made the trip to the islands a number of years ago with Mr. Taft when the latter was secretary of war, and has taken a deep interest in the affairs and problems of the islands ever since. As President Wilson was especially anxious, on account of the deadlock between the executive officials and the Philippine Assembly over questions of appropriations, that the new governor general should be at his post when the Assembly meets in October, Mr. Harrison left almost immediately for Manila. No definite statement of policy for the Philippines has been made public in connection with the new appointment. At the White House it was simply said that Mr. Harrison would carry out Democratic platform pledges. These, according to the declarations of the Baltimore Convention, will operate for ultimate Philippine independence.

SHORT, president of the Northwestern State Bank, Orange City, Iowa, calls attention to a statement in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of August 13 to the effect that at crop-moving time the farmer is badly used by money-lenders. "I ..ve been in the banking business for more than twenty-nine years and have ..ver known of such conditions as stated by you. It is a fact that nearly every ..rmer in the Middle West transacts his financial business with his local bank, ..d it is also a fact that there would be less opportunity to take advantage of ..n during crop-moving time than any other period of the year. It is also a ..ct that any banker who made a practice of extortion would very soon have ..business left him." We are not aware that any such charge has been made against any bank, even by implication—certainly not in the columns of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. The charge, however, was made in a statement by Senator Tillman on July 31 that the money-lenders of the East had control of the situation; that Southern banks were unable to get money from New York at any price or on any collateral, and that only Congress could give relief. This statement was issued immediately before the announcement of the Treasury policy, which afforded through the banks the relief needed.

Greetings from the President

DURING the month of September and mostly between the 10th and the 15th over nine million boys will return to the school classrooms of the United States. To these boys, through Boys' Life, the official organ of the Boy Scouts of America, President Wilson sends his greetings. From the White House he dates a telegram which reads: "My warmest greetings to the boys on their return to school. May the year bring them every good thing and strengthen them in all the ideals of their service. It is a pleasure to me to be their chief because I know that good citizens without number will come out of their ranks to counsel and serve the country we love."

Explorers Saved from Starvation

FROM Christchurch, New Zealand, the news was lately received that relief arrived in the nick of time to save the lives of Dr. Douglas Mawson, the Australian antarctic explorer, and his five companions, who were left on Macquarie Island, in the Antarctic Ocean, last March, when the remaining twenty-four members of Dr. Mawson's expedition returned to Tasmania on board the Aurora from their south polar trip. The six men were believed to have ample provisions to last them until the antarctic spring, but the commander of the government steamer recently sent to their relief reports that the explorers had exhausted all their supplies and that the men had been living for some time on the hearts and tongues of sea elephants. All were in a very weak condition when the relief ship reached them.

House of Governors in Session

THE fifth annual conference of the House of Governors was opened in Colorado Springs, Colo., by Governor F. E. McGovern of Wisconsin, who introduced Governor Tasker L. Oddie of Nevada as temporary chairman. Governor E. M. Ammons of Colorado, in his address of welcome, emphasized the importance of the conference as the most satisfactory way of dealing with questions directly affecting the States. Governor William Spry of Utah responded for the governors. Franklin K. Lane, secretary of the interior, in an address to the governors, outlined the policy of his department toward Western land settlement.

The report of the American Commission on Rural Credits was presented to the conference by Gordon Jones of Denver. In this, the first general report upon the extensive European investigation made by the commission under joint authority of Congress, the governments of twenty-nine States, and the Southern Commercial Congress, Chairman Fletcher recommended increased activity by the States in the extension of rural credits and co-operative farming enterprises. The report made it clear that emphatic recommendations would be made for a system of rural banking through which farmers could secure better loans, and through which they could finance their own co-operative producing, buying, and selling organizations.

A Week-End Trip to America

THE Right Honorable Viscount Haldane, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, recently established a remarkable record for a short trip to America. On August 29 Lord Haldane arrived in New York on the Lusitania. That first day was spent in sightseeing in New York. On Saturday Lord Haldane, with his party, went to West Point, where they witnessed a review and were joined by Mr. Charles J. Doherty, Canadian minister of justice, and Sir Lomer Guoin, premier of Quebec. After a semi-official dinner in Albany, the party left for Montreal. Sunday morning was spent quietly, driving about Montreal, and in the afternoon Lord Haldane was entertained at tea by the Montreal Hunt Club and the judges of the District of Montreal. At eight P.M. on Sunday Frank B. Kellogg, president of the American Bar Association, gave a dinner at the Ritz-Carlton in honor of the Lord Chancellor.

VISCOUNT HALDANE

Monday, the opening day of the American Bar Association's meeting, was the central day of the reception of the distinguished visitor. In the morning Premier Borden delivered a formal address of welcome, and in the afternoon at three o'clock, Lord Haldane delivered the address he had come from England to deliver to America's lawyers. After this there was a special convocation at McGill University to confer the degree of doctor of civil law upon Viscount Haldane. Chief Justice White of the United States Supreme Court, former President William H. Taft, Maitre Labori, president of the French Bar Association; Frank B. Kellogg, president of the American Bar Association; the Right Honorable R. L. Borden, Charles J. Doherty, Elihu Root, Alton B. Parker and Joseph Choate.

A dinner was given at the Ritz-Carlton on Monday evening by the minister of justice in honor of Lord Haldane. On Tuesday the visiting jurist and his party returned to New York to embark for the return voyage to England.

Viscount Haldane was accompanied by his sister, Miss Elizabeth Haldane, and Sir Kenneth Muir MacKenzie.

SOUL-HUSBANDRY

*A SERMON BY REV. NEWELL DWIGHT HILLIS, D.D.

TEXT: "And seeing a fig-tree afar off having leaves, he came, . . and he found nothing but leaves." Mark 11: 13.

THESE words about the failure of figs mean little to us; they meant much, however, to the pilgrims of the olden time. For India, the failure of rice means the starvation of millions. For Palestine, the failure of figs threatened all trade and travel. Our commerce is by car and ship, and provisioning the traveler is easy. With them, commerce was by means of a caravan, and provisioning was difficult. What little wealth Palestine had was through exchange with Egypt, and a wide desert separated the two lands. Once each week the camels bowed to receive their bales of goods with the leathern water-bottles, and, what was most important of all, a sack of dried figs. Every one of the resting-places was known for its grove of fig-trees. One grove had no less than six thousand trees in the orchards. When, then, Christ saw that the boughs held leaves but no figs, he saw prefigured a peril that threatened the caravans and the wealth of the people. Jesus, however, expanded the thought, and beheld the world as an Eden, an earth-garden, in which God had planted men as trees. Good men stood forth as trees planted by the rivers of water, every one bringing forth his fruit in his season. Evil men stood forth with dry branches and bare boughs. The scribes were fruitless trees, in that they had knowledge and yet with words darkened counsel. The Pharisees also had their forms, but no rich godliness. They, too, were trees with leaves, but no fruit. The rulers had right feelings, but wrong actions. What a word of judgment is this: "They cumber the ground. Hew them down and cast them into the fire, that they may be burned."

Christianity and Culture

Over against these trees with leaves and no clusters stands John's vision of the new Eden, restored to earth. He saw the whole earth full of pleasant shade and fruitful avenues. As far as eye could see valleys were covered with corn until they laughed and sang. Up the hillsides climbed the orchards, reddening the land with the glow of clustered food. Mountains and peaks also were covered with vines, as with folds of green velvet, rich as the cloth of God. Through that glorious scene goes the river of the water of life, clear as crystal, and on the banks thereof the tree of life. And what words shall describe that tree? It bears fruit every month, nor does any winter separate the fruits of the summer. Its very leaves are medicinal, and heal the wounds of the nations. It is a tree that has gathered into itself "life with all that is best in the soul," all those fruits named truth, justice, honor, simplicity, mercy, humility, goodness and love. The roots of the tree may be in earth, but its fruit is ripened in heaven. In the cool of the day, one like unto the Son of God walks under the trees, and keeps his tryst with man. Plato has his dream of the Republic, to be set up in a city; More has his dream where there shall be abundance of food and raiment; William Morris has his dream, where there shall be enough of work, with tools to spare; but all these are partial dreams, and representing the temperament of the dreamer. John's dream of the new social order is of the lost paradise recovered, an earth-garden that has become an Eden, full of happiness and all sweet delights.

Culture without obedience is a tree that bears no fruit. By culture, Matthew Arnold says, we understand familiarity with the best that has been said and done and thought, plus the power to enjoy and use all the treasures in land and sea and sky. Cordial, therefore, are the relations between culture and religion. This is the dictum of Christianity. "Wisdom is better than rubies, and knowledge is more precious than fine gold. With all thy getting of office and honor, fail not to get wisdom." We need not say that Christianity produced civilization, but we must say that Christianity has created the genial atmosphere that makes possible the fruits of civilization. Christianity has lingered long in the gallery with the artists, but it has never had any affiliation with the barroom. It has been a warm friend of the lecture hall, but it has been an enemy of every evil resort. It has always kept good company; it has always stood for culture. To cultivate the intellect it has founded schools, to cultivate the imagination it has strengthened literature and the arts. The Golden Rule has worked powerfully upon that type of manhood called hero, martyr and patriot. But there is a culture that stops short of obedience and the surrender of the will to the laws of God, just as there are trees that blossom, but fall short of bringing forth fruit.

History is full of the examples of scholars in whom conscience was atrophied. Solomon was the wisest man of his day, but also the wickedest. Alcibiades was the most brilliant pupil of Socrates, but he was also a scoundrel and a traitor. Lorenzo di Medici was a poet, an orator, a soldier, a man of letters, the most cultured man of his day; he also told lies, poisoned his enemies, murdered his friends, and finally destroyed liberty. He wore his intellectual riches over a corrupt heart, as Naaman wore a purple robe over a leprous body. Culture may be only skin deep, just as the guides on Vesuvius tell the tourist that the grass and the soil are only spade deep. Without are the oranges, the vines, the rich blossoms, but all the time there is an undernote of rumbling, and here and there is a crack that emits hot steam, and hard by is a boiling spring. Travelers are always conscious that beneath their feet lies a lake of fire that any moment may break out, to bury some hamlet or vineyard. The apostle of modern culture has told us that we have underemphasized culture. He thinks that the golden age will come to any city that has noble halls for music, a forum for eloquence, public squares, beautiful statues, houses architecturally perfect, games, amusements, abundance, luxury. But on the slopes of Vesuvius there was once just such a city that held all these signs of outer culture, and now that that old city has been uncovered, lo! its gold was mixed with clay, its art was united to vice, its beauty was unclean. To us it seems less like an injured angel of light than a beautified demon of darkness. For knowledge must become character, culture and refinement must be transmuted into loyalty and obedience. Wisdom rises into its best estate only when it surrenders itself to God. Of a truth, culture without obedience is a tree without fruit.

Fruitless Morality

Morality without religion is another fruitless tree. The schemes of morality are many. All alike emphasize the root-virtues of conduct. Confucianism stands for morality, but it emphasizes good conduct from the viewpoint of reverence for one's ancestors. Buddhism stands for morality, but its viewpoint is that of contempt, contempt for one's self, to the end that the self may be annihilated, and the soul return to nothingness and a dreamless sleep. Judaism emphasizes morality. Job believed in right living when he called the roll of the duties toward friends, family, and his fellow sheiks, saying: "These duties have I fulfilled." In a similar mood, the rich young ruler rehearsed the list of practical duties, and exclaimed: "All these have I kept from my youth up." Important, too, are these basic moralities. They free men from outbreaking vices and crimes, they encourage the simple virtues, and hold at bay the great passions. Morality touches the body and forbids any injury to its delicate mechanism. Morality touches the neighborhood and bids the youth carry himself so as to avoid any injury to his friends. Morality touches the realm of civics, and bids a man be a patriot. Morality touches the circle of politeness and bids a man be a gentleman. But if it restrains the outer display of sin, it does not cure the source within.

Morality with ut religion is not enough. At best it forbids the stroke, but not the secret hate that prompts the blow; it forbids the outer theft, but not the inner envy and the inner burning of covetousness. It puts a padlock on the lips, but leaves hate in the heart. In the orchard is your apple-tree. What if you could sit down and converse with the tree as with a familiar friend?

Suppose the tree should say: "My roots are strong, my boughs elastic and tough, firm against the stroke of wind and storm. Look at my b[ark], how smooth and fresh; and where is there a [leaf] whose tides of sap are fuller or richer? W[hat] leaves, too, are these that I have woven out of [the] threads of sun and soil! Little wonder that [the] birds build nests in my branches, while the ca[ttle] find shade beneath my boughs." Well, this [is a] good argument—for an apple-tree—but a poor [one] for a man. The hungry farmer boy does not [look] the fence on his way to the apple-tree, looking [for] apple sap or apple boughs or apple leaves—h[e is] looking for apples. And God has built this wo[rld] not for the root moralities that support man. [In]dustry is good; it is good not to lie, and not to st[eal] and not to kill, and not to perjure; but these be[gin]nings are fundamental only. The man must go [on] from the leaf to the fruit. The fruit is truth [in] the inner parts: justice, measured by God's sta[n]dard, and mercy that tempers justice; love, [joy], peace, long-suffering gentleness, goodness, fa[ith] that trusts and will not be confounded. In A[pril] the peach orchard lends a faint pink flush to [the] distant hillside, and that stands for the moralit[ies]. In September the ripe fruit lends a golden blush [to] clustered food to the same hill; and that is the fr[uit] of religion. Great is the importance of the ro[ots] moralities, but roots and boughs imply the ripe [and] fruit. What a word is this! "He found noth[ing] but leaves." "Why cumbereth it the ground? C[ut] it down and cast it into the fire that it may [be] burned."

The Husbandry of the Soul

Consider the laws of soul-husbandry. Fi[rst] comes the law of vigilance. "Watch, and again I say unto you, watch." Guard the rich blossoms of the soul. The disciples interpreted the failure of the fig-tree by the curse and wrath of God. T[he] failure of the figs was not the fault of nature or God, but it was in the ignorance or carelessness of the husbandman. In California the orchardists have learned that the fig blossoms fall when they are not fertilized, and so have brought the fig-wasp from Sicily and recovered the riches from the trees. In Oregon the husbandman has learned how to make every blossom set into fruit. From the beginning of the spring the husbandman watches against the enemies of the apple-trees. Once every two weeks in the long summer he drives through the orchard, spraying the young apples with a liquid of lime-water with an infinitesimal part of Paris green. In July he begins to test the apples for the amount of juice they hold, and then irrigates until he has brought the fruit up to the ideal standard. When the apples are thick and ripe, he thinks that some one of his men has been careless if one apple in a hundred holds a worm-spot. You all know the result of this vigilance over blossoms and fruit.

And is there no lesson here in soul-husbandry? How carelessly do men treat the blossoms of the soul! How delicate the aspirations! How sensitive the finer feelings! Evil is an untimely frost that may settle on the deeper convictions that are all so sensitive to exposure. Men guard their fruit trees, but why be careless about the soul, that is the tree planted of God? "Watch," said Christ to his disciples. In the hour of temptation he bade them to pray as well as watch. Mountains are buttressed round about the city, and men need to buttress the soul. Let us fence the garden about, and keep the hedge with care, lest an enemy enter in and destroy the trees of the garden.

The trees in the garden also have taught us that the life is from afar. The root may be in the earth, but the perfume of the flower is from heaven. Less than one-fifth of the peach or plum represents the elements of the soil. All the rest is compacted of invisible elements of sea and air and sky. Often the life to the blossom comes from afar. In Paris there dwells a man interested in rare and exotic plants. A friend who had been in the Amazon brought him home a rare tree. In the winter he keeps it at the hothouse, but when summer comes he carries it into his garden. So beautiful is the

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR

BY REV. J. H. JOWETT, D.D.

SUNDAY, September 14. Joshua 8: 30-35. "He read all the words of the law, the blessings and the cursings." We are inclined to read only what pleases us, to hug the blessings and to ignore the warnings. We bask in the light, we close our eyes to the lightning. We recount the promises, we shut our ears to the rebukes. We love the passages which speak of our Master's gentleness, we turn away from those which reveal his severity. And all this is unwise and therefore unhealthy. We become spiritually soft and anemic. We lack moral stamina. We are incapable of noble hatred and of holy scorn. We are invertebrate, and on the evil day we are not able to stand.

We must read "all the words of the law, the blessings and the cursings." We must let the Lord brace us with his severities. We must gaze steadily upon the appalling fearfulness of sin and upon its terrific issues. At all costs we must get rid of the spurious gentleness that holds compromise with uncleanness, that effeminate affection which is destitute of holy fire. We must seek the love which burns everlastingly against all sin; we must seek the gentleness which can fiercely grip a poisonous growth and tear it out to its last hidden root. We must seek that holy love which is as a "consuming fire."

MONDAY, September 15. Exodus 32: 1-14. "He made it a molten calf; and they said, These be thy gods, O Israel!" And they worshiped the thing of their own hands. Moses was away in the clouded mount, communing with the Lord of Hosts; Aaron and the people made a golden calf and worshiped it! And the contrast is still with us. There are men and women who retire into "the secret place of the Most High," and sit with the King at his table; other people worship gold. Some seek "the unsearchable riches of Christ"; others go in constant quest of money. Some covet "the peace that passeth understanding"; others covet carnal comfort and ease. Some crave the benedictions of the New Jerusalem; others are content with "the fleshpots of Egypt." Some seek the Lord God; others worship a calf!

Where does our worship rest, and where is our homage given? At which altar can we most frequently be found? Is it the altar of ease, or the altar of service? Do we listen more to the noisy clamor of the world, or to "the still small voice" of God? Do we more eagerly seek the applause of men or the praise and benediction of God? Which do we more esteem—money or grace, a fine reputation or a holy character, human favor or the likeness of God? Are we worshiping the Lord of Hosts, or are we bowing before a calf?

TUESDAY, September 16. Exodus 32: 15-20. "The tables were the work of God, and the writing was the writing of God." When we worship a calf, we do not obliterate the commandments of God. We may violate a law; the law remains. If our disobedience destroyed the Lord's decree we need never be disturbed by any fear. But the decree abides, and we shall have to reckon with it! A violated law becomes our foe, just as a law that is respected is a stalwart friend. God's holy laws carry benedictions, but the benedictions can be changed into penalties. When we disobey a law of God, we transform the blessing into a curse. The sweet becomes the bitter; the plowshare, a sword.

This solemn choice is placed at the door of our will. Shall God's statutes become our songs or shall they pronounce our condemnation? When we honor the laws of harmony they bring us into realms of exquisite delight. When we honor the laws of health they lead us into buoyancy and freedom. And when we honor the holy commandments of God they bring us glorious liberty and into heavenly joy and peace. But if we violate them the friendly guides become our police, and they will lead us to judgment and to the pain and misery which are the issues of moral disobedience.

WEDNESDAY, September 17. Exodus 32: 30-35. "And the Lord plagued the people." They worshiped a golden calf and the Lord plagued them. And the plagues were born of his grace and mercy. The severity was the minister of his love. He sent his hornets in order that the idolatrous people might be stung back into the way of truth. His goads are not implements of cruelty; they are agents of his holiness designed and appointed to drive us from the fields of trespass into the garden of holy worship and obedience. God's most appalling severity would be to leave us alone! If he permitted us to wander on in our waywardness, unpricked by any goad, unpursued by any hound, what would become of us? Thank God! "His compassions fail not," yet they are often expressed to us in the ministry of pain. He loves us sufficiently to be severe. He will even use his holy fire to save us from our sins.

And so this is the gentleness of God's severity. Such is the mercy of the plague. God uses the ministry of calamity, and of dissatisfaction, and unrest, and pain, to detach us from our idolatry and to bring us again to the radiant home of holiness and joy and peace. His angel sometimes carries a flaming sword, but the sternness is to bring us again where we may hear the angels' song: "Peace on earth, good will toward men."

THURSDAY, September 18. Exodus 34: 1-9. "The Lord, merciful and gracious, long-suffering, and abundant in goodness and truth." What a name to proclaim to a rebellious people! It is a glory which will surely breed healthy shame. For this glory is revealed to idolaters, who have turned their backs upon Jehovah and given their devotions to a golden calf! The splendors of the Lord are unveiled, those splendors which fill the angels with deathless amazement, the wonders of God's mercy and grace, and such abundance of goodness and truth whose depths make the deepest sea appear as a shallow pool. His people worshiped an idol, and the Lord God laid bare his heart!

Ah, but these words of revelation have gained inconceivable richness since those early days. Shall we say that the words have all been reminted at the cross? Stand by the cross of Jesus and look at the word "merciful." Look into the face of the Saviour and think of the word "gracious," and, as he hangs there in the agonies of awful desolation, repeat the phrase, "abundant in goodness and truth." Yes, the old words have been reminted and have acquired an unutterably deeper value. A word used at Sinai is not the same word used at Calvary. We, too, have been idolaters, and we may be still worshiping "this world's golden store"; and the Father whom we have deserted has shown his heart at the cross.

FRIDAY, September 19. Deuteronomy 9: 7-16. "Remember, and forget not, how thou provokedst the Lord thy God." The remembrance of forgiven rebellions subdues the soul to humility and tender devotion. It quenches the kindlings of perilous pride. It stays the steps of presumption. And so it is well to have appointed seasons of remembrance when we retraverse forgotten years. I know a man who periodically and regularly goes to a certain place, the site of an awful sin, and he goes that he might repent, and even, perchance, deepen his healthy penitence and his sense of holy shame. I think he feels as David felt about the sun, which seemed to throw a solemn shadow over all his life. He wants to remember, even though the merciful God may forget.

The remembrance of forgiven sin is like a plowshare; it helps us to a deeper moral culture. The remembrance of unforgiven sin is like a sword. But, blessed be God! there is no need for us to have any unforgiven sin in our rear. "There's a wideness in God's mercy like the wideness of the sea," and if we penitently seek it, it will gather all our uncleanness into its pardoning flood. God's forgiveness transforms our remembrance, the spear becomes a pruning-hook, and the sword a plowshare, and the past becomes the minister of immortal hope.

SATURDAY, September 20. Joel 2: 12-17. "Rend your hearts and not your garments." But we are usually more inclined to deal with the garment than with the heart. We prefer an external act to an internal operation. It is easier to fast than to tear out a vice by its roots. It is easier to "say our prayers" than to repent. Yes, "outsides" are easier and cheaper than "insides." To rend a garment costs money; to rend a heart costs blood. And so we take the easier way. We offer God words and he seeks life. We offer him prayerful postures and he seeks the tears of the soul. We offer him a monetary collection, and he seeks ourselves. We rend our garments, but not our hearts.

And what is the good of rending a garment if the heart remains unrent? What is the good of saying the "general confession," and saying it even with tearful tones, if we never repent? What is the use of saying "nice" things to God if the heart is hard and feelingless as a millstone? God wants prayers that are bursting with urgent life. He wants confessions that are red with the heart's blood. "A broken and a contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not despise."

loom that he gave garden parties that men might ehold the wondrous flower. One summer's day he oticed a strange thing that set his pulses throbing: a singular fruit had begun to set. Sending or an expert, they took counsel together. They new that this was the only tree of the kind in aris, and they could not understand from whence ad come the pollen that had fertilized the plant. t length they published the story in the papers, nd that story brought the explanation. A merhant wrote that years before he had brought to arseilles a young plant from the Amazon. The ollen of that tree, nearly four hundred miles way, had been carried on the wings of the wind ver hill and vale, and found out the blossom that waited its coming.

And not otherwise is it with the soul. Because it is in His likeness, it shares with him in those attributes named reason, wisdom, goodness, holiness and love. The soul waits. Without God it can do nothing. Its life is from afar. Expectant and full of longing, it hungers and thirsts, and desires his coming. That repentant youth, lying in the desert, with a stone for his pillow, waits, and then the light comes from God. Wrestling, at last, he who was Jacob rises up, the prince of God. The child in the darkness prays and waits, and the light comes, and lo, the Spirit of God lights the candle of man, and the child Samuel becomes the wisest of the judges. First that which is natural, and afterwards that which is spiritual. Every blossom must be born again, else it will fade and fall, and leave the tree without fruit. Wait, therefore, upon God, for his coming shall save thee. Not only must man be born again, but man may be born again; leaf and blossom may turn to fruit. But the decision rests with you. You can open your heart to all the sweet influences of God, or close them until your life becomes barren and fruitless. No matter how prosperous the life is without, or how like unto those fig-trees that were rich in leaves, but had leaves alone, the end is one that appeals to the motive of fear—"It cumbers the ground. Cut it down and cast it into the fire." But, oh, blessed, thrice blessed, are they who can be likened unto "the tree of life planted by the rivers of water, who bring forth their fruit in their season," and then bear fruit every month, for they are of God, the leaves of whose influence heal the wounds of the nations.

PUTTING THE MISSISSIPPI TO WORK

IT WAS with considerable well justified pride that the city of Keokuk, Iowa, on August 26 celebrated the opening of the world's greatest power dam. With Governor George W. Clarke of Iowa to welcome the visitors to the Hawkeye State, and Mayor J. F. Elder to extend the city's greeting, the formal dedication ceremonies were conducted and the mighty structure named the Keokuk-Hamilton Dam.

A parade through the business streets and to Rand Park, where the formal exercises were held, was a feature of the day.

In the line of march were hundreds of school girls carrying floral arches. Boy Scouts bearing a replica of the dam led this division, followed by the National Guard. Governor Clarke and his staff, Lieutenant-Governor Harding, former Congressman Hepburn and many of the prominent citizens of Keokuk and Hamilton were in line. C. R. Joy, president of the Keokuk Industrial Association, presided at the ceremony of dedication. Mayor Elder extended greetings, as did Governor Clarke.

STEAMERS PASSING THROUGH THE GOVERNMENT LOCK IN THE GREAT MISSISSIPPI POWER DAM AT KEOKUK, IOWA

The gigantic engineering achievement is the result of several years of construction work. The Mississippi Power Company conducted the operations under the supervision of the United States War Department. Hugh L. Cooper, an eminent hydraulic engineer, has had charge of the work. From Hamilton, Ill., to Keokuk, Iowa, the main dam and its abutments measure 4,619 feet. The dam is located just at the foot of the Des Moines Rapids in the Mississippi at the junction of the States of Iowa, Illinois and Missouri. It floods the rapids and makes deep water navigation possible for sixty-five miles of hitherto impassable river. It is estimated that this saves the United States Government an expenditure of $5,000,000, which was contemplated for the construction of a deep water channel.

The accompanying photograph shows the huge government lock at one end of the power dam. This lock is as wide a[s] now nearing completi[on] Panama, and has a high[er] than any one on the Is[thmus] The largest dry dock loc[ated] fresh water has also bee[n] structed in connection w[ith] dam.

THE MOVEMENT TOWARD CHURCH UNION

BY H. K. CARROLL, LL.D.

H. K. Carroll, LL.D.

CHURCH history in the United States abounds in secessions, separations and divisions. In the process some new creeds, like Mormonism, and some new so-called "sacred writings," like Oahspe and The Book of Mormon, have been created; but in the main the divisions have wrought little change in faith or practice. It may be safely affirmed that no country on earth has so many separate and distinct denominations or churches as the United States. Most of the divisions have come about through differences of race and language, in interpretation of creed or principles, and in administration of discipline, and these divisions are easily classified in families or groups, as Baptists, Lutherans, Methodists, Presbyterians, etc. The members of a family or group acknowledge and cherish a common history and are naturally drawn toward one another by family likeness, family ties, and family spirit and name. Their points of agreement are more important than their points of difference.

One may or may not regard every denomination as a schism and every schism as a sin; but he must wonder if it is necessary that there should be so many kinds of Mennonites, Methodists, Baptists, Lutherans, Presbyterians, etc., and why a more marked tendency toward organic union is not manifest. Is not economy as necessary in the religious world as in industry and commerce and all lines of business? No church would admit that it gets as much money as it needs; no church would acknowledge that it is responding to all the calls and opportunities of its various agencies; no church would say that it could not accomplish much more for humanity if it had more means. Such conditions are met in the industrial and commercial world by the most rigid economies, by making large combinations to reduce rivalry and waste of effort and means. Why should not churches of the same name and the same origin, holding to the same creed and principles, with similar forms of worship, government and discipline—why should not these bodies of common heritage, spirit and purpose combine for greater efficiency and economy? They would save waste in money and energy in communities by having one strong congregation in place of two or more weak ones; one set of judicatories, benevolent societies, institutions, general officers, etc., where two or more are now required.

Where there are differences in faith, in principles, or methods of work, deemed so important that conscientious conviction stands in the way of organic union, most reasonable men will agree that continued separation is better. Convictions cannot be forced or overridden without injury to the cause sought to be served. Education in right thinking is needed in such cases, and to it the future may be safely committed. To attempt union before the conditions are ripe for it is to minister to disunion, bitter and divisive strife and litigious contention. Examples of this will readily present themselves.

But there are many who dream of much larger things than reunion of members of the same denominational group; they venture to hope and pray for a coming together in one all-inclusive world-wide organization of the severed branches of the one church of Christ. The great success of the World Missionary Conference, in which practically all the evangelical churches engaged in foreign missionary work participated in a spirit of devotion to the common cause, of hearty fraternity, comity and co-operation, suggested to the General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church the advisability of holding a conference on faith and order, with the view of finding ground upon which all can unite. Cordial invitation to co-operate in planning for such a conference has gone from the commission appointed by the convention to all "who confess our Lord Jesus Christ as God and Saviour," and the evangelical churches generally have appointed commissions to confer concerning arrangements for a worldwide gathering, and it is not at all improbable that such a conference will be held, and that it will result in a clearer understanding of the points of agreement and the points of difference, and a better knowledge of the position and purpose of each of the participating bodies.

Meantime, Christian unity is having a practical and helpful manifestation in the Federal Council of Churches, which embraces the body of evangelical Christians in the United States. Thirty-two denominations are associated, under a constitution, for general, State, and local co-operation in home missionary work, in moral reform and social service. Each church maintains and manages its own denominational interests as heretofore, but manifests its unity with other bodies by entering into fellowship and co-operation with them in those things which are of common concern. Many believe that this form of Christian unity, with its possibilities of development and adaptation, satisfies all present demands, and that the merging of all denominations under one creed and one particular form of church government is neither practicable nor desirable. They probably would not v[enture] to deny that the various bodies may, in the laps[e of] time, grow out of their differences and into s[ome] concord of thought and feeling that denominati[onal] lines may disappear; but they might be incline[d to] ask whether it is desirable that the peach, pl[um] and pear should yield their own peculiar excel[lenc]ies in a combination that must modify the origi[nal] qualities, and probably cause them to disappea[r].

Various interdenominational organizations, s[uch] as the Laymen's Missionary Movement, the C[on]ference of Foreign Missionary Societies, the S[tu]dent Volunteer Movement, and many other simi[lar] organizations sufficiently indicate that denomi[na]tional independence is not of the rigid type t[hat] prevailed fifty years ago, but welcomes co-ope[ra]tion and unity as quite consistent with loyalty [to] the particular truth which each denomination e[s]nestly holds. Hostile demonstrations between [de]nominations have practically disappeared. This [is] an epoch of peace and fraternity, and no denom[i]nation feels that it is warranted in trying to und[er]mine and overthrow any other denomination.

That the members of each particular fam[ily] group are closer to one another in their church li[fe,] sympathies, aims and methods than they are [to] bodies outside that particular group everybo[dy] knows. There is much more in common, for e[x]ample, between any two Lutheran bodies, such [as] the General Synod and the United Synod South, [or] the General Council and the Joint Synod of Oh[io] than between any of these divisions and the G[er]man Reformed Church. All Lutheran bodies ho[ld] to the Augsburg Confession, while the doctrin[al] symbol of the Reformed Church in the Unite[d] States is the Heidelberg Catechism. There a[re] other differences between the two great divisio[ns] of the German Reformation. If it be said th[at] they united in Prussia nearly a hundred years a[go] and form one body there to-day, the reply is th[at] the united body differs itself from both the el[e]ments that entered into its composition, and [the] branch of it, known as the German Evangelic[al] Synod of North America, maintains here an exis[t]ence separate from both the Lutheran and Germa[n] Reformed bodies.

1. Obviously, a union movement among the n[u]merous Lutheran divisions is the first and mo[st] natural step; but such a step would doubtless brin[g] to view differences of various kinds which close[r] contact may be trusted to remove. Many year[s] ago two conferences, called diets, were held with th[e] object of securing a better understanding an[d]

FOLLOWING THE TELEGRAPH LINES ACROSS ALASKA

THE RAILWAY WAS BLOCKED BY SNOWSLIDES

ECRETARIES of the Young Men's Christian Association comprise a class of men yielding picking for hero-hunters. following simply told story adventure and hardship s from Franklin Moses, tary in Alaska of the y branch of the Young 's Christian Association. an incident of his year's , he journeyed by dog- the twelve hundred miles n St. Michael, located y miles from the mouth of Yukon, to Valdez, at the of Prince William Sound, ying, among other things, y pounds of magazines for lonely telegraph operators linemen along the way, ing his first load at the station, and taking the k there to the next. He tes:

Having decided early in the r to make this journey, I an looking around for dogs, ch is the most important g for one to consider when ing a long journey of this d. I was very fortunate in uring a team of nine Sibe- n huskies, which took part he Alaska Sweepstakes at Nome in 1910. It is very natu- for all owners of dog-teams in Alaska to believe theirs be the best, but from comments made along the line and n my arrival at Valdez, I believe I had as fine a team of gs as ever went over the trail, and they finished their elve hundred miles' journey in as fine condition as they re in the day they began the trip.

'Many times travelers making these long journeys are thered by their dog's feet becoming sore because of the ow getting caked on their feet. Walking on this hard ll of ice and snow naturally tends to irritate. I always owed my dogs to stop and clean out their feet when they thered them. I also learned that greasing the feet well th vaseline prevented the snow from sticking to them.

"The route of travel from St. Michael is a northeasterly rection, following along the shore of Norton Sound to Una- kleet. Just before my departure a southwesterly storm had iven the ice high upon the shore, making traveling very fficult and dangerous. Great blocks of ice weighing hun- eds of tons lie broken and scattered. It is necessary for e to go over, around, and sometimes under these immense rgs, and to do this with nine dogs driven in pairs, tandem yle, with a loaded sled, is no sinecure. It had snowed eadily for three days before my leaving St. Michael, and the day of my departure the sun was hidden behind gray ouds.

"My good wife came out on the ice for a few miles for a st farewell, and as I looked across the vast extent of ice nd the distant snow-covered mountains which I knew I had cross, then pictured in my mind the long, weary miles of ravel, day after day, and leaving behind alone one who has been of so great elp to me, it surely was the hardest day for me.

"From Kaltag begins a weary trail up the Yukon for a distance of nearly 00 miles to Fort Gibbon. There are seven telegraph stations between these wo points. At most of them I found the men quite contented. The traveling ibraries which were given by Miss Helen Gould to the association to be laced at the stations had been read quite thoroughly, and I arranged for the xchange of the cabinets between the various stations. I found that each tation had received its share of the magazines which were sent in by the ssociation last summer.

"At nearly every station the men were loud in their praise of the Army Young Men's Christian Association for sending them the magazines and games. At one of the stations on the Tanana River he operator told me hat he believed he would have gone razy this winter if it had not been for hose magazines. The words of this young man were brought to me very forcibly when a few days later I earned that one of he linemen at Copper Center had committed uicide.

"It was at this ame station last year hat the operator re- eived a message that is mother back in Philadelphia was dying. He wired to the officer in charge for a furlough to go home to his mother, which was granted. Being in the spring of the year after the trails had been broken up, he attempted to reach Valdez by floating down the Gulkana River on a raft of three logs. At this time of the year, the river is at its height from the melting snows of the mountains, and rushes on to the sea over great boulders and fallen timbers, lakes and narrow cañons. He was never seen again.

"These men who are isolated at these various stations from two to four years, doing their own cooking and washing, far away from home and friends, ready at a moment's call to go forth and repair the broken telegraph line which keeps the northland in touch with the outside world, whether it be in midwinter with the thermometer at sixty below, or midsummer, when the millions of mosquitoes vie with each other to make life miserable, are noble fellows, doing a brave work. When those stations were first opened, many men lost their lives through inexperience of the conditions. In my mind these soldiers and operators deserve all the praise we can give them, and are as much heroes as though they fought on the battlefield.

"Two days' travel from Fairbanks and we come to the Big Delta River. The trail follows the river up for a distance of about eighty or ninety miles. Travelers over the trail dread this particular location. I recall the night I arrived at Donnelly's six years ago. I had left Sullivan's early in order to get into the roadhouse before dark, but owing to the short day (it being in January) and the fact that a blinding snow came up, making travel slow and uncertain, I did not reach shelter until midnight, nearly frozen and famished. I was horrified to learn that two men had been lost that day on the same trail and the body of one had been brought in.

"This year the program of a severe snowstorm was repeated. The snow was that fine icy kind that when driven by a severe wind cuts one's face until it bleeds. It is impossible to open one's eyes without some protection. To see any distance ahead is an impossibility.

"Some places on the river there were snowdrifts which had to be plowed through. Other places the river was swept clean of snow, and when the dogs and sled came upon the glassy ice, we were carried along with the wind absolutely helpless until coming onto the snow again. My good fortune in getting through this storm, finally reaching shelter after ten hours' battling with the wind and snow, was not due to my judgment as to which way to go, but to my faithful leader dog, Storm King. King is one of the few dogs that will keep traveling, facing a storm, and knows how to keep the trail. Although I made the journey across Alaska alone three times, it is not advisable to do so. The majority of lives lost from freezing and other accidents have been where the traveler was alone. I have broken through the ice on several occasions, becoming entirely submerged even when it was forty degrees below zero; have been lost for days in the woods without food or shelter, and through good fortune rather than good judgment recovered.

"I had a new experience on this journey which was not very pleasant while it lasted. Next to the last day's travel before reaching Valdez after going through Thompson Pass of the St. Elias Range, the trail follows around the mountain sides, in many places just wide enough for the sled and dogs. A misstep in some places means going to the bottom of the cañon, hundreds and hundreds of feet below. It was while traversing one of these narrow spots (the dogs were traveling a faster gait than they should have under the conditions), when turning a sharp curve my sled dashed over the embankment.

"I was standing on the runners holding the handlebars. My weight and the sled's dragged the dogs over, and away we went, sleds, dogs and myself sliding to the bottom of that cañon, where there was a swift running stream. Being early in the morning, the snow was crusted,

Losing Hold on God

OF ALL the tragedies in the world the saddest tragedy is that which takes place when a man begins to lose his grip on God. We are sad when a friend loses his fortune; we sympathize when he loses his health; we grieve when he loses a friend. But all these calamities are as nothing compared with the calamity of drifting away from God. And this tragedy is taking place about us constantly. If we do not take care, it will happen in our own hearts.

A thousand things may creep in to separate our souls from God. Invisible forces are seeking to unclasp our fingers from his patient and mighty hand. Prosperity may do it—or poverty. Perfect health—or wearying sickness. Great happiness—or great sorrow. Too much work—or too much idleness. Too much loneliness—or too many companions.

Many a man or woman whose names may or may not be still on the church books can remember a time when God seemed nearer than he is now. You are thinking of happier days, days when there was an answering glow in your heart at the thought of God. You remember hymns that you loved. You remember times and places of which it can be said concerning you, as it was said of Jacob at Peniel, "He blessed him there."

You would like to return to that old-time nearness to God, would you not? Do so. He is watching with great patience and tenderness for that first thrill of longing on your part to get back to him. Stretch out your hand; you will find it touching his, and will feel again his strengthening, cheering handclasp. Even if there are great sins to forgive, he will forgive them quickly, gladly, completely. "O Israel, return unto the Lord, for thou hast fallen by thine iniquity," cried the prophet Hosea. "Remember, therefore, from whence thou art fallen, and repent," was the message of Jesus to the Ephesian Church.

Do not refuse these kindly pleadings of your infinite Friend. Do not dismiss these wistful longings to get back to him. Follow them. They lead to the truest peace, to the most precious wealth, to the most delightful companionships, and to the most steadfast assurances of everlasting life.

The President on Mexico

REALIZING that the end of his friendly negotiations with Mexico have been reached and that Governor Lind's retirement marked the close of the unofficial efforts in that direction, President Wilson on Wednesday, August 27, personally appeared before Congress and read his special message on the Mexican situation. It was the first occasion since Washington's day when a national executive has addressed the two houses on a question affecting the foreign policy of our government. President Wilson's speech was a clear and straightforward statement of the course pursued by the administration; everything was set forth frankly down to the minutest detail. It was a course dictated by a sincere desire for "the peace, prosperity and contentment" of the people of our sister republic. It was animated by the unselfish hope of serving them "without first thinking how we might serve ourselves." Conditions had become so serious that he regarded it as a duty to make an effort at least to render assistance in restoring peace and security. He accordingly sent ex-Governor Lind as his personal representative to tender our good offices, and to suggest a course which in his opinion might be acceptable to Mexico, assuring President Huerta, however, that if he or his counselors could find a better way, we would willingly consider it. President Wilson expressed himself as satisfied that Lind performed his task in the right spirit, although his proposals were rejected. The rejection he believes to be due to the fact that the Mexican Government has been misled into believing that the American people did not support the administration in its benevolent effort. This misunderstanding still exists, and nothing can be accomplished until it is removed and Mexico is fully aware of the actual facts. This he believes will yet take place, and we must wait for it patiently. Meanwhile, he urges Americans to leave Mexico, and declares that the authorities of that republic must be held to a full accountability for any sufferings and losses our citizens there may sustain. He proposes to enforce strict neutrality, and to prohibit importation of war materials from this country by either side.

This is the substance of the message, which we give with greater detail elsewhere. It is the plain and unadorned recital of a humane and worthy effort, which meets the general approval of the country. Its very frankness and the benevolent purpose it discloses disarm criticism, even by those who may not be favorably disposed toward altruistic diplomacy. Even though it failed, it leaves the situation no worse than before, if indeed it has not cleared the atmosphere and made matters better. There is still ground for the hope that the President's friendly overtures may bear fruit, and that the nation's loyal support of all he has done may impress the Mexican mind and help to break down the barriers of misunderstanding and distrust.

Mother Influence

"THESE children had no mother," was the remark of an observer who had been attentively listening to the testimony in certain cases of wayward juveniles in the Children's Court lately. Her meaning was that the mothers had neglected to exercise the salutary influence their authority gave them in the training of their children in early youth. What a lesson to careless mothers is related in the Bible of Ahaziah, king of Judah, of whom we are told that "his mother was his counselor to do wickedly." The rule is that the mother, whatever her own character may be, does not deliberately seek to lead her children into evil ways. A beautiful instinct, even where law does not control, seems to impel her to throw about their moral being the arms of her protecting care. Still, there is cause to fear that in many instances mothers are responsible for the ungodliness of their children, in so far as they exert an influence which positively or negatively is contrary to holiness and God. Sometimes parental ambition is the misleading spirit. The mother wishes to see her daughter or her son a member of the more exclusive social set. If familiarity with such pleasures and ways of life as nobody doubts are spiritually harmful be considered essential to such popularity and fellowship—well, "young people must be young people"—and so by a mother's hand, the door is opened leading into all worldliness and forgetfulness of God. Sometimes parental fondness unbalanced by firmness is the cause of the trouble. The boy or girl never learns the lesson of self-denial for the sake of others, or for one's own good, and grows up without ever having felt that there is anything nobler to live for than the gratification of self. Habits are formed of self-indulgence, vanity, recklessness about the future, upon which follow habits more definitely vicious, and the conse is a wasted life and a hopeless death. Or, i be nothing morally corrupting and destroy the life to which the child is introduced by p influence, if it be only a life without Christ, God, without hope for eternity; if only th and the manners of sons and daughters hav cultivated for business and social success, wh soul has been neglected—alas, what shall it

"Two things a master commits to his se care," says an old writer; "the child and the clothes. It will be a poor excuse for the serv say at his master's return, 'Sir, here are child's clothes, neat and clean; but the c lost'!"

Pastor Sheldon's New Story

WHEN Pastor C. M. Sheldon's great boo His Steps, appeared sixteen years a stirred the whole country. Countless multi were led by its influence to set up for thems as a rule of conduct for every emergency, th question "What would Jesus do?" and to reg their lives accordingly.

Pastor Sheldon, who is a regular and g valued contributor to the columns of THE CHRI HERALD, during a recent visit to New York cussed with the editors of this journal the spi outlook of the American people. He regarded intense satisfaction the deep and widespread re of interest in the Lord's return. For years he been contemplating a new book on the sub taking as the central theme a revisitation b Master of the world into which he had once born as a child, and for the redemption of whi had given his life. How would he find it—bett worse? Would it be ready to acknowledge him he came, even for a brief sojourn, would he cover much to approve or to condemn? Woul find that simple faith and holy living, that b erly kindness and fraternal relationship among followers which he inculcated? Or would he co a world hostile and unwilling to welcome him; generation corrupt throughout, bound to wor ness and wholly unmindful of the life hereafte

These and many similar problems Pastor S don revolved in his mind, unaware at the time by a strange coincidence, thousands of other nest Christians had begun to discuss the s questions. Within the last few months he be writing, and the outcome of his labor is a boo which he has given the startling title:

"JESUS IS HERE!"

We have been privileged to read the MS. of work, and it is the most remarkable literary duction that has ever come into our hands. sublimest truths have often been presented in a gory. The Divine Teacher himself employed a gory and parable in his ministrations. Bunya famous story of the Christian life set the wo thinking, and does so still. In picturing the rev tation of Jesus to earth, Pastor Sheldon has ta a theme which transcends all others. He treated it with such reverent realism that one struck with the conviction that he is read the record of an event which may happen at a time, and the simple yet dramatic recital of wh holds the reader irresistibly to the end. We m Jesus in the haunts of trade, in the halls of legis tion, in the theater, in the church, among t votaries of fashion and in the houses of the po We meet him among his faithful followers w have been watching and praying and looking for reappearing, and among scoffers and skeptics w scorn him.

We recognize old friends in this wonderful sto and welcome them. And the reader too is dra unconsciously by the spell of the book, and se to become one of the participants in the stran scenes it so vividly pictures. No one will read without experiencing a sense of spiritual uplift, stirring of all the powers within him toward higher, better, happier life. It is a story that w be read with surprise and delighted appreciatio We would be glad to have it not only in the hand of every one of our readers, but in every home our land. It is Pastor Sheldon's own desire tha Jesus Is Here should be given to the world throu THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. The opening chapte will appear in our issue of October 22 and the stor will continue to run in this journal exclusively t the close.

A Thrilling Fire Rescue

NE of the most spectacular fires New York has seen in some time took place recently at shaft Number 9 of the Catskill Aqueduct. This opening is located at One Hundred and Forty-ninth Street and St. Nicholas Avenue, and over it had been built a wooden structure sixty feet high to house the necessary machinery. The fire started in the blacksmith shop and spread with astounding rapidity. In a few minutes the air-pumps had been put out of commission and there were sixty-two men penned in the tunnel at the foot of the shaft. The policemen, firemen, and employees of the aqueduct fought hard to rescue the imprisoned men, but notwithstanding their efforts there was an awful wait from 5.20 o'clock until 7.30 P.M. before the first of the men was brought to the surface. The heat from the building above the shaft was so intense that the window casings of apartment houses on both sides of St. Nicholas Avenue from One Hundred and Forty-ninth to One Hundred and Fiftieth Streets caught fire, and soon seven buildings were in flames and over one hundred families were driven into the street.

After a fight of two hours, which seemed almost days, as there was great anxiety about the imprisoned men, the work of rescue was begun. The heat of the building had burned the steel cables that worked the passenger elevator, and the electric dynamo that supplied fresh air for the men had long since broken down. These mishaps, coupled with the fact that nine hundred pounds of dynamite were stored in a magazine in the tunnel, made the situation tragically serious. But Fire Chief Kenlon met it bravely. The shaft is 450 feet deep, and has eight landings, at fifty-foot intervals. The chief had ladders dropped from landing to landing, and organizing a volunteer party of eight men, each leaving one at each landing, he himself went to the bottom and found the men and started them on their way up. One at a time they climbed up the ladders to the top, and not a man of them was lost. What threatened to be a fearful disaster turned out to be a heroic and blessed rescue. The men in the aqueduct who were drenched with the water used in extinguishing the fire at the top, when rescued, might have taken up the words of the Psalmist:

We went through fire and through water; but thou broughtest us out into a wealthy place. (Ps. 66: 12.)

Perfect Baby Wins Prize

THREE hundred infants competed in the "better babies" contest in Passaic, N. J., and Leslie Watterson, twenty-seven months old, was the only one declared to have a hundred points, and hence perfect. The mother was asked what she fed the boy, and she said: "He gets soups, fruit, vegetables, puddings, cereals. I give him little meat, and few eggs." She said she gave the baby a great deal of water, outside and inside. He goes to bed at 7 P.M. and awakens at 7.30 A.M., and has a two hours' nap every afternoon. Winter and summer he sleeps with the windows in his room wide open. Hours is a golden time for babies. The incessant care of mothers take of the body is the type of the care which God parents take of the minds and souls of their children, that they may be pure and perfect through grace, answering the command of the apostle with reference to training of children:

And bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. (Eph. 6: 4.)

Boy Lost Mother's Jewels

A WEALTHY woman of Pittsburg was dressing to go for luncheon at a hotel at Atlantic City the other day when she gave her four-year-old son her jewel case to play with. It contained $3,000 worth of diamonds, and $300 in money. The little boy walked down the stairs to the main corridor of the hotel, where his mother found him later with the case in his hands. But the diamonds and money were gone. The child said two young women looked in the case and gave him a quarter. Several arrests were made, but the jewels were not found, nor the thief or thieves apprehended. It was a careless thing to give so rich a treasure to so young a child as a plaything. How careful mothers should be in the handling of children, who are more precious jewels than those of stone that reflect the sunlight or gorgeous colors, or glance with strange interior fires! How rich is that soul that is counted one of God's jewels.

And they shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels; and I will spare them, as a man spareth his own son that serveth him. (Mal. 3: 17.)

Discovered a Safer Aeroplane

THE self-righting flying machine devised by Lieutenant J. W. Dunne, a retired officer of the British army, had a severe and satisfactory testing the other day at Villacoublay, France. The day was most unpromising for air navigation, a high, gusty wind prevailing. All the aviators on the field declined to encounter it except Major Julien Felix, of the French army, who ascended in the new safety biplane. He maneuvered in high and low altitudes in a most extraordinary manner, emerging from air pockets, eddies and squalls with no signs of capsizing or distress. Such perfect self-control did the machine possess that Major Felix took his hands from the levers and held them over his head while the airship maintained its level in the gale. The invention is shaped like an open-winged bird, but has no tail. One hundred and eighteen lives were the toll of the aeroplane in 1912, and seventy-two aviators have perished in accidents the first six months of 1913. This is a fearful percentage of the few persons that risk aerial navigation, and any invention that promises greater safety like that of Lieutenant Dunne is hailed with joy not only by aviators, but by friends of science and practical progress as well. With all of its inventions of safety the aeroplane is a long way from success as a machine for commercial purposes. But the new inventions will be made. The airship will be made safe, and those pioneers who have perished in experimentation will be counted as martyrs on the road to the mastery of the air. Men and women are like birds: they have a foot nature with which they walk the earth, and a wing nature with which they fly above it. The prophet uses a figure describing this spiritual bird nature:

They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run, and not be weary; and they shall walk, and not faint. (Isa. 40: 31.)

Fish Drowns Prominent Physician

DR. THEODORE S. VAN REIMPST, of New York City, was on his vacation in Upper Saranac Lake. He was an enthusiastic and skilful angler, and with his brother-in-law in a small boat he was in search of big fish. Suddenly the doctor had the stroke of a giant northern pike. In expert fashion the angler played his catch, and after a long struggle the fish was brought to the edge of the boat, and being too large for the net the brother-in-law undertook to spear him. The two men were at one side of the boat. Just then a passing craft caused a swell, which upset the rowboat and threw the doctor and his companion into the lake. In true sportsmanlike spirit the doctor kept the rod in his hand, hoping to save his great catch as well as himself. But the fish darted all round the angler until he had wound the line tight about his feet and legs, disabling him from swimming, and then dragged him down to the bottom of the lake to his death. His body was found two hours after with his ankles and feet tied tight with the line, from which the fish had escaped. It was a strange coincidence that about the same time Dr. Cleveland Ferris, also a well-known surgeon and investigator on the staff of the Polyclinic Hospital and for eight years one of Dr. Van Reimpst's closest friends and companions, also met his death in a most singular manner. While making his toilet the doctor caused a tiny break in the skin of his nose and through this almost invisible wound the germs of blood poisoning entered his system and caused his death. The Polyclinic Hospital will sadly miss these able surgeons and true friends. These tragedies remind us of Christ's warning:

Be ye therefore ready also: for the Son of man cometh at an hour when ye think not. (Luke 12: 40.)

Barroom in Church

THERE is a little stone church with a steeple on the East Side of New York City, which has attracted especial notice, not on account of the eloquence of the pastor nor the quality of the music, nor the make-up of the congregation, but because it had in its basement a bar where intoxicating liquors were dispensed to the members and friends of the church. This foreign congregation may have employed the bar as a social feature to accommodate those fond of liquor, or to increase the attendance on church service on Sunday or weekdays, or it may have been installed as a source of revenue. The police authorities of New York City and the excise department of the State objected seriously to such an accompaniment to the church and raided it. The members of this congregation only went a step farther than did those who a few years ago tried the experiment of a church saloon, happily with dismal failure; and only a few steps farther than the churches that resort to every conceivable device of advertising and worldliness to get a congregation, and to every form of entertainment and amusement, sometimes dangerous in their nature, to secure funds for the support of the church. These foreigners who installed the bar in their church have different ideas about drinking from those entertained by ourselves, yet they must have known that the sale of alcoholic beverages is prohibited within hundreds of feet of a church. Almost every denomination in America has positively and unequivocally declared its hostility to the liquor traffic, and that accounts for the success of the modern temperance reform. The unfortunate experience of the New York City church saloon suggests the need of a modern application of these words of the prophet:

And they shall teach my people the difference between the holy and profane, and cause them to discern between the unclean and the clean. (Ezek. 44: 23.)

DRINKING GOLD AND BITTERNESS

QUARTERLY TEMPERANCE LESSON BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

THIS temperance lesson for Sunday schools all over the world was prepared while its authors were making "A Night Tour of European Cities," with which were interspersed eight European conferences, mostly international, on alcohol, opium, and other moral issues—at all of which the reports have shown the same human wickedness and folly in our time that was manifested in the worship of the golden calf twenty-four hundred years ago.

The story does not mention wine or drunkenness, but the Lesson Committee found warrant for assigning it as a temperance lesson in the statement of Moses (Ex. 32: 6), repeated by Paul (I Cor. 10: 7), "The people sat down to eat and drink and rose up to play." An Italian painter of the sixteenth century, Carlo Portelli, in his picture of the Golden Calf, represents Moses breaking the Law at sight of the people breaking it in another sense, in more ways than one, as it is usually broken wherever idols are worshiped by additional drunkenness and licentiousness.

This gives us the first grand division of our lesson: The wickedness and folly of idolaters, especially of those whose god is appetite. The fundamental wickedness of all idolatry is that it puts something else, good or bad, in place of God in the supreme place in our minds and hearts. When God is dethroned, appetite, lust and greed take his place as an evil trinity. In India there is a goddess of murder, Kali, who is supposed to be pleased and placated when her worshipers kill anybody. Garroting, as a form of murder, originated in this horrible worship. There have been many false gods who were supposed to desire human sacrifices. The Moloch of Bible times was a metal god filled with fire, into whose hot arms fathers and mothers threw their children as sacrifices, and they fell into the flames within him. The Aztecs of Mexico, in their ancient worship of the sun, took to a high altar, still shown in the City of Mexico, a beautiful girl and suddenly cut out her heart and laid it there all throbbing as a sacrifice to their sun-god. We are citing these facts about idolatry to-day only to illustrate the equal wickedness of those in our Christian lands whose oblation is beer or whisky, which promote death and murder and all manner of evils. The central truth of the Book of Proverbs is that whatever is wrong is foolish, and whatever is right is wise. The idolater is always as foolish as he is wicked. "The saving sense of humor," which appears oftener in the Bible than most of its readers have noted, is applied to nothing more frequently than to idolaters. (I Kings 18: 27; Ps. 115.) Isaiah speaks of idol-makers who carve a god from one end of a log and burn incense to it with the other, as if there were more divinity in one end than in the other. Equally foolish is the man whose brain is ever thinking of his stomach, making drink his chief interest, and so his god. Of course we do not forget that "there is intemperance in eating," and teachers ought at proper times to show the relation of diet to devotion, for many are "overeating their prayers." The folly of drinking intoxicants, how numerous are the illustrations of it in all lands and times! Even educated men take the same drink for a "nightcap" to put them to sleep, and for an "eye-opener" to wake them up; to warm them in winter and cool them in summer. They call that a "stimulant" which puts people to sleep and name that "strong drink" which athletes must avoid. Solomon warned men that "wine is a mocker" three thousand years ago, but he plays his old tricks over and over with every new generation. Idol worshipers foolishly lay food before idols which they cannot eat, and, with like folly, people have for generations taken as "food" the alcohol that builds neither bone nor flesh nor nerve, but injures them all.

A second division of our lesson is suggested by Aaron's powdering of the gold in the calf and making the people drink it in water. It may be that the "gold cure" of drunkenness to-day is accomplished in part by a revival of this lost art of turning gold to powder and making it into a bitter draught, into which, perhaps, some alcoholic beverage may be put to give it a bad association and create distaste for it. In any case, the fact that the Israelites drank gold is a striking illustration of the economic losses of drink. We have concentrated attention successively on the wickedness and folly of the drink habit and drink traffic; now let us for a while think only of the financial wastefulness of it. The average income of an American family is about five hundred dollars, and one-fifth of that, on the average, goes for the purchase of liquor, and in nearly all other lands there is a higher average expenditure for drink out of a lower average of earnings. It is foolish even for the rich to spend money for that which does them no good, but for the poor who haven't money enough to properly feed and clothe and lodge a family to spend any of it—much less a fifth of it—on alcoholic drink is nothing less than a crime; and it is a crime that men are allowed to tempt them to such wrongdoing.

Our third division is suggested by the fact that the dissolved gold the people drank was a bitter drink. They who drink liquors drink bitterness. Solomon said so three thousand years ago, and it shows the supreme folly of the human race that they are still drinking liquors "for the joy of living" when every age has proved the truth of the saying, "At the last it biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder." Hall Caine said in our own time: "I verily believe that if strong drink could be wiped out of the earth to-night, humanity would wake in the morning with more than half its sins and sorrows gone." Consider the profound meaning of Paul's summary of the second table of the law, "Love worketh no ill to his neighbor, therefore love is the fulfilling of the law." What bitterness is there in life to which the drink evil does not contribute a large part? Sickness? drew Read said that seven out of every ten the hospitals were there because of drink. The lives of those above twenty, now l America, insurance statistics show, will t ened two hundred and fifty millions of moderate drinking, to say nothing of th ards, each one of them beloved by so Drinking liquors is drinking bitterness, w innocent must taste with the guilty.

The great need is to make known the n of science as to the serious perils of moderat ing, which at first are not apparent. shows that even a drop of alcohol will kill a lar amœba, who was a moment before swim joyfully as a boy in a swimming-hole. Bu body has so many cells that they are not a by a small portion of alcohol—only a few drink; and so the victim thinks he is suffe harm. Let us teach our friends to apply see how the alcohol in the social glass is p be a brain and nerve poison, and, as Empe liam says, the nation that uses least alco have most nerve and will win in the compet nations. Alcohol is classified now as a poi it is a poison whose very nature is to con evil effects, epecially as it kills slowly, a f at a time, seeming to give life when it is des life. Every wise man should therefore lea the great experimenters on alcohol how to and expose this "insidious poison"—to qu Frederick Treves.

More than a hundred years ago, John called liquor dealers "poisoners general," b still necessary for experimenters in Germa elsewhere to show that even as little as one of alcohol per day lessens efficiency one-ten shortens life thirteen years in thirty-one.

But it is not enough to point out the physi mental perils of drink. To insure a life-lo liverance for our boys from this danger w bring to bear on them "the power of an life." This lesson is completed in Dresde many, where we have to-day seen the home Hoffman painted his beautiful and impressive pictures, and we have also seen in the Dresd Gallery his "Christ in the Temple," worthy the companion of Raphael's Sistine Ma There is a story of Hoffman's Boy Christ th closes this lesson. It was told to the artist last years and gave him great joy. A wa boy, wilful, disobedient, ill-mannered, who ga parents and teachers great trouble, was quit denly changed to a thoughtful, kindly, helpf His mother rejoiced and wondered, and at asked her boy why he had so changed. His t too wondered and asked the same questio both he answered, "It is the Boy," explain was Jesus in the temple, a copy of Hoffman ture, that had been hung by the wise teacher wall of the school. Only the Boy of boys, th of men, can change evil to good permanen human life.

A PANORAMIC SUNDAY SCHOOL PAGEANT

A PARADE of any pretensions whatever always attracts attention because it bespeaks a number of people willing to commit themselves as championing a certain cause. A parade that is shared by no less than eighteen Sunday schools represented by nearly four thousand people and numerous magnificent allegorical and scenic floats and which is viewed by packed pavements along almost the entire marching route is bound to impress the onlookers with the character of the work being done, the personnel of the people doing it and the great unifying belief in a risen Lord. Such a parad was planned and carried out in Auburn, N. Y., June 23, 1913, having been postponed from the previous Saturday on account of inclement weather. It was as if, having stood the test of disappointment patiently and cheerfully, an especially rare, radiant day in June had been reserved as a final reward.

Auburn is fortunate in possessing a very much alive Bible School Union with Mr. E. M. Roberts as president. The union appointed a central committee which in turn gave to each of the eighteen participating churches the virtue it was to portray in the pageant and the colors to be used in the delineation. This prevented repetition and insured a harmonious color scheme.

The churches' subjects and colors were as follows:

First Baptist—Enrolment, 300; subject, Light; color, yellow.

Immanuel Baptist—Enrolment, 130; subject, Truth; color, violet.

Wall Street Methodist Episcopal—Enrolment, 246; subject, Love; color, red.

Westminster—Enrolment, 250; subject, Peace; colors, light blue, white and silver.

Orphan Asylum—Enrolment, 40; subject, Joy; colors, red and gold.

St. Peter's—Enrolment, 250; subject, Purity; color, white.

St. Lucas—Enrolment, 125; subject, Hope; color, light green.

Trinity—Enrolment, 300; subject, Loyalty; colors, red, white and blue.

Universalist—Enrolment, 85; subject, Victory; color, strong green.

First Methodist Episcopal—Enrolment, 400; subject, Progress; color, orange.

Disciples—Enrolment, 200; subject, Wisdom; colors, blue and gold.

Zion Methodist Episcopal—Enrolment, 50; subject, Patience; color, violet.

EVERY one is familiar with the lavish expenditure and the amount of energy ordinarily expended on historic and commercial parades when their originators would impress the public with the magnitude of the event or the industries represented. Auburn's parade sets a new standard for religious undertakings of this variety. It has proved the value of legitimate, well-considered display in connection with Sunday school work.

HOME, SWEET HOME

BY KATHLEEN NORRIS

Song of a thousand joys and tears,
Your notes come echoing down the years
Like the sweet sigh
Left on the sober autumn breeze,
When from her court of woods and trees,
Her lonely blossoms and her bees,
Summer goes by.

At your first note, a thousand cares
Slip from my forehead unawares.
I feel the balm
Of childhood days, I know the grace
Of many a dear forgotten face,
And many a restful woodland place
Distant and calm.

The voices of the friends I knew Sound in your measures pure and true,
As if a hand
Were gently on my spirit laid,
While flowers about a heaven made,
And I might enter unafraid
The Promised Land.

O song, what rapture did you know
As, bent above her cradle low,
A mother hushed
Her child to sleep with your sweet strain,
Or when, their life before them plain,
Some lovers sang the sweet refrain,
And smiled, and blushed?

Oft from some ingle by the fire
Old voices made the tender choir
That raised the song,
Or clinging sailors on a mast,
Seeing their hope of life slip past,
Have chos'n to sing these notes—their last,
Bravely and long.

Ring on, dear song; through all our days,
And brighten still our distant ways,
Where'er we roam,
And let our last swift seconds be,
By distant shores, by land or sea,
Made happy by the thought of thee,
Of "Home, Sweet Home"!

SMILES AND TEARS

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER, JR.

DID you ever try smiling as a cure for the blues and as a tonic for tiredness, and to banish heartaches? For a smile is an easy thing to cultivate.

I was going officeward one day in a very overcrowded trolley car. It was pouring outside and my gloves clung damply to my fingers. A stray wisp of hair was tickling my nose and my hands were too full of dripping umbrella and swaying strap to brush it away. I could feel that my forehead was wrinkled up, and my mouth drawn down. I thought of all the unpleasant things that had ever happened to me, and, glaring at the unrelenting sky, I wondered why it had to rain so hard. Then, looking along the car, I saw another girl hanging to a strap. She was ever so much wetter than I. The dampness oozed out of a crack in her worn shoe; the bare hands that gripped her umbrella and strap looked cramped and tired, and two straggly locks of hair tickled her rather small, inoffensive nose. But as I looked at her and pitied her, she glanced up and caught up my eye, and she smiled at me! Then, somehow, the rain-drops looked very bright and jewel-like, and the gray of the sky seemed warmer and more friendly. I forgot that my feet were wet and I smiled back. All that day, through the work and hurry of the hours, I carried a sunbeam hid in my heart.

I once knew a little boy who was a philosopher in his small boy way. His mother and father were dead and he lived with a rather strict aunt, who denied him a great many pleasures. One day a chum asked him to go skating. It was beautiful weather, with a cold wind that blew the snow into tiny crystals that filled the air, and ice that was like a polished diamond gleaming out an invitation to hockey sticks and skates.

The small boy went home and asked his aunt if he might go skating. (I was calling on the lady at that time.) He told her that he would be careful and that he would not stay long; but her mouth kept shutting a little more tightly every minute until I feared for the beautiful plan. When the boy stopped for breath the storm broke.

"Skating?" exclaimed the lady crossly. "Of course not. You have home-work to do. Telephone James that you cannot go with him!"

I started to remonstrate, but when I saw the firm mouth I stopped. The little boy never said a word, but a moment later I heard him talking over the telephone.

"I am sorry, Jimmy," I heard him say in a voice that would tremble the least little bit. "I'm sorry, but auntie says that I must stay home and do my lessons. I hate to stay home, but—I'm smiling hard!"

I got up and left. I didn't want to smile at the aunt.

In a story which I read a few days ago, the author, William T. Locke, makes one of his characters a butterfly society lady. She tells why she just enjoys herself, instead of going into life seriously.

"If you dig down far enough into the earth," she said, "you come to water. If you bore down deep enough into life you come to tears. . . ."

Undoubtedly she is right, for though life may be all laughter and music and poetry on the top, there is always suffering, and dread, and heartache underneath. And yet, how can we appreciate the smiles if we have never come in contact with the tears? The tears will come, if your life is worth living—perhaps only a few, maybe a great many very bitter, salty ones. But as sure as the sunshine follows the rain, so will smiles make a rainbow in your life. And if you smile hard when your eyes are brimming over, perhaps you will lighten the way for others as well as for yourself.

When the world is a gloomy shadow,
And the skies are a sullen gray;
When the wind weeps low in the branches,
And the people forget to pray;
When the last fond hope has been broken
By a force that is cold and grim;
Then take your place with a cheerful face,
And smile—though your eyes are dim!

THE COMFORTER

A TRUE STORY BY JEAN MAHAN PLANK

Complete in This Issue

ASPER ASBURY threw the reins over his neck, gave the plow a jerk, and started his horses with a vigor he had not felt since it all happened. A flush of wondering joy warmed his grief-worn, homely face.

As the team got well under way, the plowman held head a bit to one side, in order to catch any word the anger might speak. After he had gone a few yards, vever, he realized that he might be moving too fast, for stranger had evidently fallen behind, and he had said Jasper:

"I will walk beside you."

Jasper halted the team, dropped the plow-handles, and ned about. Blank astonishment caused him to open le both his mouth and eyes. The stranger was not re.

Toward the east, south and north boundaries of his ky little farm the plowman turned him with bewildered gerness. There was no man between him and the hori-. He wound the reins about the plow-handles, and his art sank.

Had it been another man, Jasper would have let him go sily, for to his bruised spirit the kindest words had been t a further turning of the knife. But remembering the anger's voice, his eye and smile, he could not let him go. he hastened toward the front gate of the little farm-use, a lump in his throat choked him.

"He must have gone out of the gate and started for her Leeds or Catskill," muttered Jasper, walking rapidly. At the gate he looked eagerly up the road and down the ad. Silas, the hired man, was mending the fence.

"Which way did he go, Silas?" asked Jasper, breath-ssly.

Silas straightened up, wiped his brow with his sleeve, garded his employer with puzzled inquiry, and sonorously oted:

"Who?"

"The stranger," responded Jasper impatiently, "the man ho was just talking to me in the field there where I was owing. He must have come out here."

Silas wiped his brow again and stared.

"Well, he didn't come out here, and he didn't come in ere. There ain't been no stranger here this morning." ilas resumed his whacking of nails.

Jasper stood irresolute. Then he started running down ie road.

"He couldn't have got out of sight so quick unless he ent up to the turn where Peter Bergen lives. I'll just sk Mary Bergen. She hasn't missed anybody that's assed in eighteen years, sitting in her chair at the win-ow all the time as she has to. I've got it!" He stopped hort. "That's who it is—it's the new dominie. Funny I idn't think of it! He was to come some time to-day. Jueer he got out to my place so soon." Jasper drew a eep breath of relief. Why, he could see the stranger gain and often—could hear many times that voice whose ery tones seemed to ease the pain, and whose words were ke heavenly manna. At the thought the stoop in Jasper's houlders straightened itself.

"But I'll go on and ask Mary which way he went."

In the fork of the roads, within the corner window of a ow, rambling farmhouse, sat Mary Bergen plying her nitting-needles. With her sharp old eyes, which seemed ever to sleep, she could look both ways along the road to Catskill and up the road to Leeds. She nodded to Jasper, who vaulted the fence and came close to her window.

"Which way did the new dominie go, Mary?" asked Jasper.

Mary stopped knitting and looked frowningly over her spectacles. "The new dominie? Why, he don't get to Catskill till the 5.10 train this afternoon. Peter's jest gone to town to meet him with the other deacons. What on airth—"

Jasper rubbed his ear. "But he must have come earlier. Didn't he pass here? A tall man; I think he was tall; and his hair—I—I think it was—well—light—that is—well, his face was light; and he had a most wonderful voice. Didn't you see him, Mary?" he ended wistfully.

Mary shut her lips tight and shook her head slowly from side to side. Her sister was peering curiously over her shoulder.

"That wouldn't be the new dominie, anyhow," she broke in sharply. "I saw the new dominie when he was candidatin', and he's a little plump man, with black hair and eyes, and his voice is kind o' high and piercin'."

Mary opened her mouth and spoke with oracular clearness.

"There ain't been but two wagons passin' here to-day, and not a soul walkin'. And in one wagon was Elmer Brookes, and he had a load o' pears that he was takin' to Leeds; and he had on a blue shirt and green overalls. And in the other wagon—it was a buggy—was that young sprig of a Johnson goin' to Catskill. And he was all dressed up like he was goin' to git his picture took. And he had on a purple tie and that new derby that he got last year, and—"

Jasper turned suddenly away with a feeling of sickness. The temporary lightness caused by the stranger's visit was gone. There was no gainsaying Mary Bergen's testimony anent the passing.

"He must have taken the road to Leeds," was his hopeless thought. To retrace the steps to his own farm with any idea of overtaking the stranger seemed futile.

A desperate sense of need, however, moved him to hasten to his own place, saddle a horse, and dash off in the direction of Leeds. Before he reached the next crossroads, he came upon Caleb Smith and his son, who were setting out fruit trees near the fence. Jasper pulled up his horse.

"Caleb, did a strange man pass this way? a tall man—with—with a wonderful voice—and—" He stopped with a simple gesture of despair before Caleb's stolid wonder.

The son shook his head. "Ain't been nobody by this day but Elmer Brookes and young Johnson. And we been here all mornin'."

Jasper lowered his head and started his horse without further speech. He groaned in spirit. Why had he begun to plow again? But the stranger had bade him do so.

He shook the reins and hastened on to Leeds, only to be quickly assured that no stranger had been seen in the place that day. Very slowly he returned to his home, put up his horse, and walked wearily to where his team was still patiently standing. He sank down upon one end of the log and looked at the other end where the stranger had sat.

He recalled the hour of the morning when the man with the wonderful voice had come. Jasper had not been working long, and through the blinding tears he had not been able to guide the team. The futility of further striving had overwhelmed him. He had stopped the horses, and, with a deep groan, sank down upon the plow. The end was here. Further effort was impossible, further endurance madness.

Then, across the field, he saw the stranger come. Jasper never could tell just what was the look of his mien and raiment, but the benumbed brain of the grieving plowman was stirred to a dull wonder, for when he gazed into the stranger's eyes, it was with a sudden easing of the pain. He felt a hand clasping his own, as he was drawn to a seat upon the log under the butternut tree, and he heard a wonderful voice, which said:

"You are suffering."

Before he knew it, Jasper was telling it all to the man who sat beside him on the log. Telling it all. What meaning in those words! He could not tell it to the people about him; they would not understand.

It had been cruel enough, three years ago, when Emmeline had left him; but with a baby clinging to his fingers, a chubby boy trying to walk just like himself, and a womanly little daughter of fourteen, who had said: "I'll take care of you, father," a man had to be a man and go on living. But now, when—Jasper marveled that his tongue could go back over the last three weeks of patient, bewildered nursing, which was only a soft padding of the iron of his fierce fight against disease—the disease in the end baffling the poor human will and carrying all three of the children out of the father's home and heart.

In trying to recall what the stranger had said, Jasper could remember more easily what he did not say. He did not speak of resignation; he did not speak of compensation. He spoke of love. Presently, Jasper found himself sitting up straight and talking about what a lovely woman Alicia had been growing to be, and what she might have been.

"But maybe," said Jasper to the stranger, "maybe I would have let her work too hard. I was awful anxious to get on, so's to give Billy an education. But she always laughed as she worked, and she loved everybody and everything so much."

"You can always think of her now, can't you," suggested the stranger quite simply, "as growing into the beautiful woman you knew that she could be."

With the stranger's hand upon his, Jasper's eyes glowed, and he talked out all his dreams of what his children were to become—some way he did not think of it as "were to have become."

A sudden impulse led him to move closer to the man and open a door into a secret place that he never before had opened to any one. And he showed the stranger the love of his youth, the love of his middle years, the love that still glowed and strengthened despite the long parting.

"Perhaps it's wrong," said Jasper humbly. "Perhaps we ought to tear such love from our hearts. Maybe we're intended to—"

But the stranger's face was almost stern with holy beauty as he pressed Jasper's hand more tightly, and leaning over, looked straight into Jasper's eyes.

"You are not intended to tear it out. Rather, let it grow. Cherish it as the holiest of gifts. Do not fear to let it shine too brightly. It is given you direct from the hand of Him who made you. It is yours, for he gave it to you."

As Jasper turned his face up to the stranger's, he knew that his love for Emmeline and his love for the children were the glittering points of a beautiful star shining in his life, and that he had but to keep his eyes upon that star to be led straight to the feet of God.

The stranger arose. "Put your hand again to the plow, Jasper," he said gently. "Take up your work; and I will walk beside you."

Jasper recalled that he had sprung to his feet with a bounding heart. Would the wonderful stranger really be beside him as he worked? Why, that itself were after being warmed by the sun of the previous day. This prevented the dogs from getting any hold to lessen our quickening speed, though they fought frantically to do so.

"Once again fortune was with us when we piled up against a tree, thus preventing an icy bath and possibly broken bones on the rocky boulders. As far as I could see up and down the stream, t' s was the only tree in sight. To get back to the trail was the next problem. To unhitch the dogs would mean to lose them. They could not climb to the top. The ascent was almost perpendicular. Taking my knife, I carved steps in the crusted snow large enough to gain support. After making my stairway complete to the top, I returned to my sled and, taking a long line which was used to lash my load on the sled, fastening this to the towline and Storm King, then returning again to the trail, making a half turn with the rope around the stump of a tree, I called the dogs, and at the same time hauled on the rope. When dogs and sled finally reached the top I sat down and rested for a long time, being too weak to move.

"On Thompson Pass, which is the most feasible route through the mountains into the interior at this point, the government telegraph service maintains a station during the winter months, where three men are stationed to be ready to repair the line which is broken frequently by the severe storms which rage in these mountain passes. Men are not detailed to this station. Volunteers are asked for. The only part of the station visible from the outside is part of the roof and chimney. Entrance is through a tunnel of ice and snow.

"I arrived at this station shortly after noon, when the operator had just returned to the station, with two men whom he had rescued after being lost in the mountains. These men were walking into the interior without food or blankets, expecting to find work in the gold-mining camps. If they had not been found by the telegraph operator when they were, they would probably have perished and never been heard from. In reciting this incident at Valdez I learned that this station had been the means of saving several lives. Thus you will see the men of the service are not only doing their duty as operators and linemen, but are lifesavers as well.

"The last two days of my journey proved to be the hardest. The trail passing through Keystone Cañon hugs the walls of the cañon in some places, while at others it descends to the bottom, where you cross and recross the icy waters of the stream that is just deep enough to be quite disagreeable.

"Within twenty miles of Valdez, it began to snow, and I had visions of sleeping out all night. The last few hours seemed like days. The dogs seemed to go much slower than ever. It was now my twenty-fifth day of continual traveling, covering over twelve hundred miles. Even after seeing the glimmering lights of the town, I could hardly withhold my impatience. My nerves had well nigh reached their limit of strain.

"After completing my visit to Fort Liscum, which is across the bay from Valdez, I boarded the steamer Northwestern, bound for Seattle. Faithful Storm King, the leader, and the rest of his comrades are here in Seattle with me enjoying a rest before returning to their native land."

RECOGNITION IN THE FUTURE LIFE

IN THESE days of free and widespread religious discussion, it is well for those who believe in the Gospel to be well grounded in the Scriptural and other evidences of the truth of the Christian religion. These have been very concisely set forth in a book by Rev. Samuel V. Leech, entitled, Recognition, Love and Immortality in the Celestial Life. The author, a veteran pastor, seventy-five years of age, has reviewed all the evidence and testimony from every available source and compressed it into his modest little volume. We have space here for only a few notable extracts:

Cyprian, the illustrious martyr, Bishop of Carthage, in one of his sermons said: "A great host of beloved ones is awaiting us. Parents, brothers and sisters are looking with desire for our arrival. To see and embrace them will be a mutual joy. There is the glorious choir of the apostles, the host of joyful prophets, the innumerable company of martyrs. To these dearly beloved ones let us hasten with strong desire and ardent wish to be with them."

Many famous Christian scholars have left in print assurances of knowing and loving their translated friends hereafter. Among them have been Fenelon and Zwingllus, Doddridge and Chalmers, Melvill and Hall, Tillottson and Knapp, Edwards and Bonar. Among the last recorded conversations of Luther is one relative to his anticipation of being reunited to his beloved friends in the heavenly world.

When the distinguished theologian of Geneva, John Calvin, was about to die, he said to his friend Farel, "God bless you, my noble brother. Forget not that the tie binding us together will be as agreeable in heaven as it has been useful to the church on earth."

When little Willie Lincoln had died in the White House the great sad President stood by the casket of his little son and said: "God has called him home. I know that he is much better off in heaven."

The Egyptians illustrated their faith in immortality by suspending lighted lamps in their tombs and preventing their extinguishment. Before, but more conspicuously after, the inauguration of the Ionic philosophy, the Greeks regarded humanity as immortal. The splendid martyr Socrates, a heathen philosopher and profound scholar, said before he died, "Those who have lived well and piously pass from these scenes of earth, like prisoners set free, to a home on high, where they shall dwell in unclouded peace." The ancient Romans expressed their belief in immortality by planting perennial evergreens on the graves of friends.

Theodore Parker was so thrilled with the verdict of his own consciousness as to his immortality that he wrote, "I look through the grave into heaven. I ask no miracle or proof. I ask no risen dust to teach me immortality. I am conscious of an eternal life."

Because death does not end all, the character of our thought, utterances, and actions should forever echo the words of Apelles: "I paint for eternity."

something to work for! He threw the reins over his own neck, gave the plow a jerk, and started the horses.

And then the Stranger was gone.

Starting from his long reverie, Jasper grappled with a new idea: The man bade him work—put his hand to the plow. Perhaps he had a reason for that. Suppose the Stranger should come again and find him drooping and brooding instead of heeding his gentle counsel?

Quickly arising, Jasper again started the team. With the light of hope shining in his face, he murmured p intingly as he walked:

"He told me to put my hand to the plow—to take up my work. I'll do it—I'll do it!"

Then the hope in his face flamed into wondering joy. What else had the Stranger said?

"I will walk beside you."

The light of joy glowed more and more brightly, until it flamed to the whiteness of peace. The peace settled upon Jasper's soul, and as he followed his plow, it was with a song in his heart.

The Attitude of Believers One of Expectancy and Watchfulness

OW sacred the place where Jesus is the dearest and most loved of all beside! The rts which hold him in such high esteem are racterized by the humility which clothed King of kings in his earthly ministry, and stamp of submission to their divine Master upon them.

The time for the return of the Bridegroom is en in Matt. 24: 14. "And this Gospel of kingdom shall be preached in the whole rld for a testimony unto all nations; and n shall the end come." The church of true ievers will then receive their spiritual bodies, d be gathered to the Lord, and as taught in parable of the Ten Virgins, the door will shut. The unwise virgins who prepared not themselves will be left in the darkness of the great tribulation together with an unbelieving world. READER.

Is the World So Wicked That It Will Have to Be Peopled Anew?

CHRIST tells us that in the day when he comes, the spiritual condition of the world will be the same. Peter tells us of the fire of God, which will consume all things, and speaks of the promise of a new heaven and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness.

From Rev. 20: 3-8, we know that the earth will again be repeopled, and from this quotation we learn that nothing on earth will be found to show it was ever inhabited. "The great day of the Lord is near, it is near, and hasteth greatly." "I will utterly consume all things from off the land." (Zeph. 1.) "The whole land shall be desolate, yet will I not make a full end." (Jer. 4: 27.)

These are the things that the world must be prepared for. GEO. W. SALISBURY.

Reinbeck, Iowa.

The Churches Indifferent, but the "Great Hope" Manifesting Itself in Many Places

TO CALL the church to self-examination and to inspire faithful stewardship, I know of no more pertinent theme than that of Christ's return.

Fifteen years ago, while pastor of a church in Iowa, I was driving across country to her train a missionary from Japan. We were talking on the subject of Christ's return. I remember she said, speaking from the standpoint of her Oriental field, that God was whispering there to his saints who were nearest to his heart, that his coming was drawing near. Since then, I have had opportunity for observation of this fact. Many independent pentecostal and "full Gospel" movements have sprung up in the last several years. They are decidedly premillennial and missionary. They are more fully blessed with demonstration and power in their work, though it be insignificant compared to that done by the old and large denominations. The large "union" revivals under our more noted revivalists cannot be compared with them in this respect. The unanimity of premillennarians is growing as the Scripture doctrine on the subject is more studied and discussed. These movements are not localized, but unusually scattered and widespread, reaching out as though God providentially meant them as heralds and witnesses calling attention to this truth at this time. I am convinced that it is not without divine purpose that Moody and his school, and practically all of our most noted evangelists, emphasized more and more the imminent coming of Christ.

I know of nothing in Scripture or world conditions to hinder the parousia occurring any day, unless it is that there are still unevangelized fields. And while our older and large denominations are inattentive and unconcerned, and are giving their attention to peace conferences, social service and civic leagues with the thought that man must work out his own social and governmental salvation, there are also many who have learned to love His appearing.

Nyack, N. Y. G. W. DUNHAM.

ANSWERED PRAYERS

HERE are two sacred letters from grateful mothers. One writes, from a town in New York State: "I want to tes- fy to God's goodness in answering ayer. My son was in danger. After aying and asking a few friends to ay with me, remembering that Jesus id: 'If two of you shall agree as ouching anything that they shall ask, shall be done for them,' asking od's guidance and doing all that I ould, it seemed as though God took ie matter right in his own hands and emoved the evil influence. I would ver praise his name. I would like to sk the readers of this letter to help ie in prayer for my boy that I may et see him grow up in Christian man- ood."

The second mother, writing from a liddle Western State, says: "I wish o acknowledge God's goodness in an- wering my prayer for my son, who, hrough the drink habit, lost his mind. God in his mercy answered my prayer, nd restored him to his right mind and o his family."

A father writes from Kentucky: The answered prayer column is a vonderful source of comfort to me, as am a constant reader of THE CHRIS- IAN HERALD, and through it I want to acknowledge that God in his great mercy and kindness has answered many prayers for me. One was preserving the life of my son through the great flood at Hamilton, Ohio. Another was last week in helping me out of a great financial trouble when it seemed all hope had fled. Bless his name!"

A reader from Kansas, who signs herself "One Who Wants to Trust God in Everything," writes: "Through the columns of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, I would say that I feel God does hear and answer prayer. A sister was very sick and I believe that her life was spared through prayer. I am now asking him to make business matters right and believe he will."

Acknowledgments of answers to prayers have also been received from:

with bows and arrows, and pony carts hidden with flowers, until it seemed as if every beautiful idea had been exhausted; but they were not, for St. Peter's Church had a float so unique as to warrant special mention.

The subject was Purity and the little folks' float formed a living cross of white-clad children, each one holding a white lily. The cross was made of graduated steps in such a manner as to make the entire great figure of the cross to incline at an angle of about 45 degrees. Following this came another of the same church equally unique. It was a succession of white marble steps running clear around the automobile with white-robed children seated thereon, each with clusters of lilies. On the pinnacle within a white railing stood a golden-haired, fleecily-robed child with a live white lamb.

One of the most striking of the grown-up people's floats was a depiction of Ruth and Naomi and Orpha. Ruth was in white, kneeling to Naomi, who was standing majestic in vivid purple, while Orpha in Oriental blue watched near. The positions were maintained as in a tableau. Following this float came dozens of maiden gleaners in white with gleanings of golden grain. The subject depicted was Love.

Two floats, gorgeous for barbaric coloring, and representing Wisdom (colors royal blue and gold), were those of King Solomon and the Queen of Sheba. The entire setting was true to the times in which these royal personages lived. The magnificent throne chairs, the rich ermine-bordered sweeping velvet robes, the beautiful ladies in waiting, the air of vast wealth and the bronze attendants with waving fans—all carried one back to the days "of which the half has never been told."

A very striking conception was that of the Central Presbyterian Church portraying Brotherhood. On a great motor-borne platform Joseph drove his four splendid horses, and back of him, but near, were his eleven brothers. The costumes and setting were a riot of splendid color. The June sunshine caught the glint of the helmets and armor and broke it up into dazzling scintillations.

The First Baptist Sunday School illustrated "Light," and some marchers bore candles, others lanterns and a whole battalion, incandescent light bulbs with yellow rose-petal shades on the ends of white standards. The Juniors drew a lighthouse on wheels.

"Progress" was aptly shown in many fields, "Navigation" by a sailboat filled with pilgrims seeking religious liberty, followed by a skilfully conducted steamboat filled with a modern church picnic crowd; "Agriculture" by everything, from old hand sickles to the most up-to-date modern labor-saving machinery. The latter was finely decorated and all in operation. This part was loaned by the International Harvester Company.

Victory was shown as a beautiful Greek maiden driving a palm-decorated chariot and followed by her sisters in costume wearing cross-tipped crowns. A feature which pleased the veterans along the line was the reproduction of the "Spirit of '76" by the Trinity Sunday School to illustrate Loyalty. Attics had been ransacked with good results for three-cornered hats and knee-breeches, while everywhere the Stars and Stripes and the Conquest flag of the Church fluttered side by side.

The First Presbyterian Church showed the work of missions, from the building of a mission chapel to floats with costumed figures, showing all nationalities to which the Gospel is carried. One float carried an organ hidden in flowers, and from this the melody of loved hymns was heard, and marchers and riders took up the strains until the broad streets of the city were sweet with praises of the Crucified One. It was a scene which brought tears to the eyes of many a pavement-gazer, to whom the work and influence of the church had been an unknown factor.

The little ones especially seemed to appeal to all, and one man was heard to remark: "It must be right—see, they are there, from silky-haired babies to the grandmothers and grandfathers of them. I didn't know there were so many people in the Sunday schools in Auburn."

The banner-winning school was the Second Baptist. Their subject was "Mercy," and one fine feature of their part of the parade was the liberal use of placards bearing the Scripture texts which were represented. There were Oriental water-bearers for the thirsty; wayside water-drawers at a well so real that it must have been tantalizing to the tired, thirsty pedestrians; a hospital tent float in charge of Red Cross nurses, with cots and patients; the Good Samaritan; lifesaving crews, a flower mission, and Scriptural figures typical of Mercy. There were others perhaps equally beautiful and excellent in part, but no church, so the judges unanimously decided, adhered so closely to the Scriptural interpretation of its subject.

The parade drew up finally at the Y. M. C. A. athletic field, and the awarding of the great banner of rich purple, bearing the words, "Award of Merit, 1913 Auburn Sunday School Parade," to the winning school, was followed by a grand chorus of "Onward, Christian Soldiers," in which everybody joined.

Few will ever forget that spectacle of the great gathering of people who, by their dress, were proclaimed to be "From Greenland's icy mountains to India's coral strand."

EMMA GARY WALLACE.

"CALLED ASIDE"

FROM the glad working of thy busy life,
From the world's ceaseless stir of care and strife,
Into the shade and stillness by thy Guide,
For a brief space thou hast been called aside.

Thou hast spent, weary on a couch of pain,
Watching the golden sunshine or the rain,
Hours, whose end length only to Him was known,
Who trod a sadder pathway, dark and lone.

May not the little cup of suffering be
A loving cup of blessing given to thee?
The cross of chastening sent thee from above
By Him who bore the cross, whose name is Love?

Hast thou no memories of that "little while"?
No sweet remembrance of thy Father's smile?
No hidden thoughts, that drew thee with their heat
To him who did such light and grace unfold?

Perhaps into a desert garden dim,
Yet not alone, when thou hast been with him,
And heard his voice in sweetest accents say,
"Child, wilt thou not with me this still hour stay?"

In hidden paths with Christ thy Lord to tread,
Deeper to drink at the sweet fountain head;
Closer in fellowship with him to roam,
Nearer, perchance, to feel thy heavenly home.

Oh, knowledge deeper grows with him alone;
In secret oft his deeper love is shown,
And learnt, in many an hour of dark distress,
Some rare, sweet lesson of his tenderness.

Oh, restful thought—he doeth all things well;
Oh, blessed sense, with Christ alone to dwell:
So, in the shadow of thy cross to hide,
We thank thee, Lord, to have been called aside.

Charges Prepaid Anywhere in U.S.

Dress No. 1313. One of the very smart Autumn creations, here portrayed with photographic fidelity exactly as worn by one of New York's fashionable women. This is just the way it will look on you. It is designed after one of the latest advance Paris models, and in every possible detail shows its distinctiveness, charm and worth. This superb model is of a fine French serge. Selected for its beautiful texture and splendid wearing quality, the blouse being made with the very new long shoulder effect. Collar is of self material, with velvet inlay at throat, slightly cut away. The front of blouse is ornamented with large satin buttons, very smartly set off by narrow strips of satin in military effect; the full length sleeves are finished with pointed cuffs of velvet. The waist and skirt are joined beneath a two-inch girdle of self material, finished with narrow band of satin and with braid ornaments.

The skirt is made with foot plaits to give the desired new fulness. The draping at side of skirt, caught up by three large buttons, is undoubtedly one of the most stunning designs of the Fall season. Large satin buttons extend all the way down front of skirt, same as on blouse, completing an effect that is incomparably graceful and altogether charming. The colors are navy blue, brown and black. ıd let us ask again, how can we be loubt when our experience is in harmony with God's Word? In I Cor. 3: 16 it is written: "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you?" In this we see that spiritual birth is not a matter of conjecture but an actual convincing assurance of the Spirit of God in us and with us. Our bodies are the temple of the Holy Ghost. Would it not be strange indeed that we should possess the Spirit of God and know nothing of his presence?

In Eph. 2: 22 we are told that we "are builded together for a habitation of God through the Spirit." What can be for us a greater blessing in this world of death and danger than to know, feel and realize the presence of his Spirit, and to read from his Word that his kingdom is within us? We are pilgrim strangers; here we have no continuing city, but we seek one whose builder and maker is God. Born of God, we stand in the twilight of eternity. In the dim distance we may almost descry the outlines of our eternal habitations.

It is said that possession is nine points in law. We can bless the Lord that in spiritual birth we have the deed and the abstract of title complete. And we are given to understand that just so sure as spiritual birth means life, physical birth alone means death. For is there any hope or way for a man to enter this life other than being born of flesh and blood? So also there is no hope for a man to enter spiritual life who is not born of the Spirit.

The important thought should come to us all, that having once entered this life, we must ascend or descend. There is no alternative. Billions have entered this life, not one has ever come back. The silent stream, Death, is dark, deep and wide. Do we know of any who have crossed over and returned? Would we take shipping to cross the Atlantic with a captain and a pilot at the helm who had never crossed that ocean before? And shall we take the word of any man or any body of men to guide us across that dark stream of infinitely much more importance when we have a divine Pilot?

The greatest mystery of the world to-day is that men, setting such a price on temporal life, frail and uncertain as it is, make so feeble an effort to win eternal life with all its love, peace and promises. There is a blinding influence in the world that too often clouds man's intellect until the golden opportunity is past. P. G. MEATH.

AMONG THE WORKERS

ANONSBURG, PA., was lately the scene of a le revival. Evangelist Milford H. Lyon ected the movement. A tabernacle acnodating 5,000 persons was erected and fairly filled during the meetings. There many conversions and the churches have greatly strengthened.

THE BUTLER COUNTY Christian Endeavor n of Chicora, Pa., is one of the pioneer nizations to take up the celebration of hers' Day." A program "dedicated to the ory of the Christian fathers of the world" been arranged under the direction of Pas-. M. Shultz of Chicora.

AT FORT MADISON, IOWA, Evangelist C. E. s and party recently conducted a six weeks' paign under the auspices of seven united ches. A special tabernacle, bolding 2,000 le, has been built. Professor J. H. Leonard, was trained at the Moody Bible Institute, ago, was musical director and soloist.

IN THE RECENT death of Mr. Henry Seebold, Floating C. E. Society of San Diego, Calif., lost a charter member who has served conusly since 1893. During all these years his t went out to the men in the service, his e has welcomed "the boys" and his genucharacter won many for the Saviour. He r tired of telling of his own conversion, his testing of God's promises.

THE FEDERATE SCHOOL OF MISSIONS was at Mount Hermon, Calif., July 20-26. ong the speakers were Dr. J. C. Davidson, ran Methodist missionary to Japan; Miss a Irelan, Christian missionary from Mone, Mexico; Miss Isabel Crawford, formerly tist missionary to the Kiowa Indians of Oklahoma; Dr. Susan B. Tollman, and Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Ellis, three Congregational missionaries from Lintsingcho, North China; Mrs. Amy Bridgman Cowles, of the Congregational mission to the Zulus at Adams' Mission Station, South Africa, and Mrs. W. H. Cooke, mission worker of Pittsburg, Calif.

—EVANGELIST S. B. SHAW, of Grand Rapids, Mich., has met with great success at Applegate in that State. All denominations were represented in the meetings in the Methodist Church, which were attended by large crowds, in spite of wet weather. There were many conversions. Mr. Shaw is highly endorsed by the International Association of Evangelists, by the Michigan Conference of the Methodist Church, and many pastors who have had personal knowledge of his work.

—THE MOODY INSTITUTE in Chicago has introduced a new and valuable feature for women students—a complete industrial course, arranged with reference to its practical utility in Christian service. The efficiency of the plan has been tested during the past three years, and now several courses are simultaneously offered—sewing, industrial work for children, club management, cooking, sanitation and care of the house, hygiene and home nursing. In addition to these classes will be the "problem hour," at which time sociological questions of importance to the Christian worker will be discussed. The institute does not aim to take the place of technical training schools, but to offer the young women courses that will equip them for the practical Christian work to which they will be called on leaving the institute.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT

An Opportunity for Everybody to Read Pastor Sheldon's New Story

When we made our Six Months' Coupon Offer and followed it, at the request of friends, with a five months' offer, we had intended these to complete our special inducement period. The result of these two offers has been that many thousands of new members have been added to the Christian Herald Family. It is not our custom at this season of the year to continue such offers, and we would not do so were it not for a remarkable feature which we have succeeded in securing for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

On the Editorial Page of this issue will be found the announcement of a wonderful serial story from the pen of Pastor Charles M. Sheldon, author of In His Steps, which so stirred the reading world years ago. This new story of Pastor Sheldon is even more remarkable than In His Steps. Its theme is a revisitation to earth of Jesus Christ and the effect of His savings and doings on the world to-day. All of our present members will naturally reap the benefit of this wonderful story.

The effect which it will have on the general public mind should be profound, and, appreciating the opportunity, we have resolved to make an extraordinary effort to have this story read as widely as possible, in order that the spiritual, no less than the intellectual, benefit may be widely distributed. This is a duty which we would not feel justified in neglecting, and which we are confident every member of the Christian Herald Family will assist us in performing.

So we are extending a Special Coupon Offer until September 30, so that many more thousands of new readers may be enabled to read the thrilling narrative from the pen of Pastor Sheldon, and to profit thereby. Here is an opportunity which we are sure all present members of the Family will want to embrace. It is an opportunity through which they may help us bring thousands into the fold.

The subscription list of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is greater to-day than ever before in its history, and we hope to double the influence of the paper before CHRISTIAN HERALD DAY, October 24, 1913, when the publication will be 35 years old. You can help us do this.

Carefully read Dr. Sandison's announcement of the wonderful story on the editorial page of this issue, and having done so, resolve to bring at least one new member into the Family.

SENSE AND NONSENSE

CONDUCTED BY JOSIAH ALLEN'S WIFE

Old Songs

LAST week wuz stormy. Josiah couldn't work outdoors and he stayed in the house and acted, and wuz real worrisome. He would santer through the rooms from winder to winder lookin' out to hail the first sunshine. And he mended a old harness, and whet his razor, and looked through his tin trunk full of old account books, and wuz awful oneasy and impatient to think he couldn't be out in the wood lot.

Men are impatienter than wimmen, and act more. Wimmen are more hampered all the time by life and temperament, and politics and pardners, and naterally don't mind it so much when they are shot in.

Finally in one of his rampages through the front room he rummaged through the bookcase and found an ancient song book. He slighted the pile of him books, full of pious and consolin' verses—but them old songs seemed to take holt on him and quiet him down more'n considerable. He sot and read 'em over, and finally he begun to talk and reminess. Sez he, "They don't make such song books now, Samantha, as they used to."

Marietta Holley
Author of Samantha at Coney Island

I wuz to the lookin' glass fixin' my front hair which had got onpinned.

"No," sez I, "nor they don't make such lookin' glasses. Years ago they made better lookin' ones, them that reflected pretty brown hair and bright eyes. It wuz the glow of youth we looked and listened through, Josiah, that made the difference."

"Well, I say they don't make such songs now, nor such tunes." And he kinder hummed over:

Oh, don't you remember sweet Alice, Ben Bolt?
Sweet Alice, whose hair was so brown,
Who wept with delight if you gave her a smile,
And trembled with fear at your frown?

"What a song that wuz, Samantha. Do you remember when we hearn it first at Jonesville singin' school? I went home with you that night for the first time."

"Yes, I remember, Josiah," sez I softly, for the old song, and the old time, appealed to my heart strongly. Oh, how bright the moon shone that night! It don't seem to give such a light now, so bright and clear, and yet so soft and serene-like, and the air now hain't so warm and barmy.

"What a beautiful song that is," sez Josiah agin, "and so truthful and melancholy."

And he begun to look dretful sombry as he meditated. Josiah would be real sentimental and mournful actin' at times, if I encouraged it, but it hain't good for him, it kinder heats up and softens his brain, and draws on his strength too much, and so for his good I have to hold him down to common sense and reason, when he has them spells. And I sez:

"Yes, it is a beautiful song, but I always thought Alice might have lived longer if she'd had more gumption. Cryin' and takin' on every time a man smiled on her would wear any girl out, if follered any length of time, and I never wondered that sweet Alice wuz laid under a stun, in the old churchyard in the valley."

"Well, it is a lovely thing, anyway."

"Yes, that's so, Josiah, but it wuzn't megum enough. Ben Bolt hadn't ort to acted so as to make a girl tremble with fear if he got into a temper and frowned at her, or bust into tears if he happened to smile. They both ort to took life more easy and comfortabler.

"But yet," sez I, "them simple old songs are full of memories and joys and sorrows, and glad thrills, and heart aches. They don't have much sense to 'em, but they have something else that is stronger than reason. As we listen to 'em the deep emotions of the past, that we thought dead and buried, rise up out of their graves in our hearts and hant us if we would let 'em. The new songs seem to have more art than heart. They don't stay in the memory so. For instance, 'Way Down on the Suwanee River.' How the swash of that river and the tinkle of that banjo it tells about, has sounded all through the years, and are swashin' and tinklin' yet."

"Yes," sez Josiah, pensively, "I can almost hear 'em now."

And Nelly was a lady;
Last night she died;
Toll the bell for lovely Nell.

"How the tollin' of that bell has been soundin' all through the years since it wuz first sot to ringin'." And he continued, "There is 'Annie Laurie' and 'In the Gloaming' and them beautiful stanzys:

I'll chase the antelope over the plain,
The tiger cub I'll bind with a chain,
And the wild gazelle with its silvery feet
I'll get thee for a playmate sweet.

"Oh, how I used to long to chase or bind a antelope or a gazelle for you, Samantha. And I'd love to to-day," sez he with a real sentimental look, almost spoony.

But I sez, resumin' common sense with a strong effort, "I don't want a gazelle or a antelope, Josiah, I'd fur rather have a good hen turkey, and you couldn't ketch one to save your life, lame as you be."

But my efforts to bring him and common sense nearer together wuz in vain I see, for his eyes wuz lookin' fur off onto some romantic and beautiful vision, and sez he, "There is that other most beautiful song:

She's all my fancy painted her,
She's lovely, she's divine;
But her heart it is another's,
She never can be mine.
And my heart, my heart is breaking
For the love of Alice Gray.

"And I believe he did die," sez Josiah, firmly, "and I would if I'd been him, I should lay out to."

He looked dretful sombry and melancholy, and I sez in a encouragin' axent, "Grief that breaks out in poetry hain't so fatal as if it staid inside, sunthin' like measles. And I've wondered if he didn't give up too easy, mebby Alice would have had him if he'd kep' tryin'."

"No, no, she wouldn't; he would have demeaned himself for nothin', if he had asked her agin, he did right to pass away, jest as I would."

He wuz almost lost in a mournful revery, and I see it wuz my duty to pull him back and chirk him up, and I sez:

"Mebby it is all for the best, Josiah, if he'd married her when she'd got along in years 'her soft brown hair that wuz braided o'er a brow of spotless white,' would have got gray and thin, and she would probably got rumatick and tiziky, and wear spectacles. But now she'll go down the years and later generations, with 'her dark blue eyes, now languishin', now flashin' with delight.' And she might have turned out a naggin' woman, or stupid. Wimmen who are such beuties are seldom much else, they're flattered so for their loveliness, they git to dependin' on that for their stock in life, and when that depreciates, they have no available assets left. Plainer lookin' wimmen have to hussel round and learn how to do things right, and be agreable, and know things, and so have a good mutes was endowed permanently (by special concession) in the Wesley Memorial Methodist Hospital of Atlanta. One of the stipulations was that any patient occupying it should have the privilege of the company of a fellow deaf-mute night and day. Infirmary rules had been found during the illness of Miss Groom to interfere sadly with the comfort of the afflicted woman, who could not make her wants known very readily during the hours when visitors were not admitted.

In every way, except that there is no word spoken or sung, the deaf-mute class at St. Mark's is conducted like any other class in the Sunday school. When the school is in session as a whole, and songs are announced, the teacher interprets the announcement to the deaf-mutes, who turn to it in their books and read it as it is being sung. Often Mr. Crusselle "signs" it for them. "They seem to like that, for some reason," he explains. Then frequently they join him with signs in the chorus of it, their hands and arms and faces expressing in almost perfect rhythm the ideas of the words.

The sign language of ideas, in contrast with that of letters, is used almost wholly in the class. The letters were too slow, as Mr. Crusselle found very early in his experience—though the authorities from whom he learned the language counseled the use of letter signs as much more proper. The scholars deemed them dull. Then he tried the idea signs, flashing his meaning quickly to the eyes of his class, and their response in awakened interest was immediate. The sign for Jesus, for instance, is made by touching the open palm of each hand with the middle finger of the opposite hand, this denoting the holes made there in the Christ's hands by the spikes of the crucifixion. The sign of help or aid, in the sense of the Samaritan's deed, for instance, is made by lifting one forearm with the other hand. There are an unlimited number of these signs, their multiplicity revealing that the deaf-mutes have truly a language of their own, and that the light of religious teaching which their Bible class has let into their lives has been received by a quick intelligence.

Occasionally their class program is featured by some special number, as, for instance, when the Rev. J. W. Michaels, himself a deaf-mute, happens to be in the city. Mr. Michaels is the deaf-mute evangelist commissioned by the Southern Baptist Convention to carry the Gospel to his fellows in affliction throughout the Southern field. It was through his account of the work being done at St. Mark's that the other deaf-mute classes were established in the South. Sometimes the pastor of St. Mark's addresses the class. Occasionally its members remain in a body for the church services or for communion. At intervals other speakers come: W. O. Connor, head of the Georgia School for the Deaf; John Amos Todd, secretary of the Memphis Deaf-Mute Association, a "speaker" upon the program of the Southern Sociological Congress in Atlanta; and others with interesting messages that would have gone undelivered anywhere had his class not been founded. PROVIDING FOR THE BLIND BABIES —As a result of the movement begun by the International Sunshine Society, several States have now adopted legislation making provision for blind babies. New York allows $1 per day for each blind child sent to the society's care; New Jersey provides $330 a year for similar work, and Arizona, North and South Dakota, Rhode Island, Pennsylvania, Michigan and Maryland have all made provision of the same character. Illinois and Minnesota are moving in the same philanthropic direction. The Blind Babies' Home at Summit, N. J., founded by the president of the society, Mrs. Cynthia Westover Alden, is the pioneer institution of its kind.

The dollar watch was the "vision of a dreamer," until Robert H. Ingersoll crystallized the idea into an accurate and reliable timepiece.

closer relations; but the number of separate organizations was not lessened, and there is no notable movement toward union at present. Doctrinal discussion is a considerable part of the program of Lutheran synodical sessions, and this sometimes leads to difference of opinion. It was a doctrinal discussion in the Synodical Conference some years ago that caused the Joint Synod of Ohio to leave that body. It was not able to accept the views of the doctrine of predestination which the discussion developed.

2. The Mennonites are not very numerous, but they are very much divided. There are a dozen or more branches, which have persisted for a quarter of a century or more, and seem not inclined to try to compose their differences, though these differences do not appear to be very important. Some of the bodies are in accord in nearly everything, but have not yet agreed to unite.

3. The Baptists, united in holding to the distinguishing principle of the baptism of believers only, are divided on other points of belief and practice, and some of the branches are far apart in thought and feeling. Four bodies are intensely conservative, opposing such modern institutions as the Sunday school, missionary and Bible societies, and holding their views with great tenacity. The Free Baptists of the North and the Freewill Baptists of the South are very nearly in accord and may possibly unite under one General Conference. As it is, some yearly meetings are claimed by both.

There is a more promising movement between the Free Baptists and the Regular Baptists of the North. The General Conference of Free Baptists and the Northern Baptist Convention have agreed to unite in the missionary and denominational activities, merging their foreign and home missionary and publication work and co-operating in educational and ministerial relief operations. This does not mean that associations and yearly meetings, State conventions and State conferences have been consolidated; but the movement does involve "a gradual union of local organizations," and it may be said that already the process of merging of churches has begun. The significance of this union is in the change indicated in doctrinal position. The Freewill Baptists separated more than a century ago from the Regular Baptists because the Calvinism of the latter was too pronounced. They vigorously asserted the doctrine of free-will and other correlated views of Arminianism; but the passing of the years has brought Calvinist and Arminian so close together that they can shake hands across what was once a formidable gulf. No other union movement among the many Baptist bodies has appeared above the horizon, although there are several Arminian Baptist bodies which are in substantial doctrinal agreement and several strict Calvinistic branches which might come together if so minded. The ecclesiastical principle of local church independency, while admitting of denominational affiliations for missionary and benevolent co-operation, makes denominational divisions seem of less importance than under other systems of polity

4. The Methodist branches constitute one of the largest family groups. Methodism has been exceedingly prosperous in this land of a free church in a free state, and its lines have gone out into all the earth. Itself of the planting of John Wesley, and an offshoot of English Wesleyan Methodism, it has exercised its freedom of action and created twice as many branches as English Methodism could boast at its best. English Methodism has begun the process of consolidation and has reduced its actual divisions to five, not including affiliated conferences, while American Methodism, including Canada and Japan, has twenty branches, as against nine in the rest of the world, including the affiliated conferences of Wesleyan Methodism.

Every Ecumenical Methodist Conference has given an impulse to Methodist union. The first, in London, was followed by the unification of Methodism in Canada, the second by the unification of Methodism in Australia, the third by partial unification in Great Britain. The fourth, at Toronto, in October, 1911, gives promise of starting the process in the United States.

As the greatest convulsion in American Methodism was that of the division of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in 1844, into two branches, the slavery question being the dividing cause, so the greatest proposition for organic union is that of the bringing together, not only of the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, but also of the Methodist Protestant Church. These are the three largest Methodist bodies in the United States, leaving bodies exclusively of Colored Methodists out of view. It is a gigantic proposition, beset with gigantic difficulties, but it is being undertaken seriously and confidently with hope of ultimate success.

A joint commission of twenty-seven persons, nine from each church, was created by action of the General Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal and Methodist Protestant Churches, in 1908, and of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in 1910. The commissioners have held two meetings, the first in Baltimore, in November, 1910; the second, in Chattanooga, in May, 1911. At the first meeting they mutually agreed that the three churches are equally apostolic in faith and purpose, are joint heirs of the traditions and doctrinal standards of the Fathers, and have proved their loyalty to the evangelical spirit; and that the Fathers settled the issues of the past conscientiously and separated regretfully. Upon this platform of mutual recognition and mutual agreement to bury past issues, the commissioners recognized it as their imperative duty to consider the expediency and practicability of some form of unification that will put an end to the "unnecessary competition and rivalry" that "still exist among Methodist bodies, while unchurched masses hunger for our ministry." A sub-committee of nine was appointed to consider and report what are "the causes which produce waste and injury" and to formulate a plan of unification through reorganization.

At Chattanooga the sub-committee submitted its plan in the form of suggestions, and the plan was adopted, reported to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Minneapolis in May, 1912, and of the Methodist Protestant Church in Baltimore the same month, favorably received by each and the commissions continued. The General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South meets in 1914, and until it has taken action nothing further can be done.

The main features of the plan adopted by the commission are as follows:

1. The merging of the three churches into one to be called the Methodist Episcopal Church in America, or the Methodist Church in America, the united church to have common articles of faith, common conditions of membership and a common hymnal, catechism and ritual.

2. The governing power in the reorganized church to be vested in one General Conference of two houses, and three or four quadrennial conferences, the former to legislate for distinctively connectional interests, the latter for distinctively local interests, colored Methodists to constitute one of the quadrennial conferences.

...he state church of Germany has made ...le provision for the ministers of its ...ch. The salaries of the clergy are not ...orm throughout the empire, but differ ...what in the individual states. A parsonage or ...extra allowance for rent is regularly pro...d. Similar conditions obtain in the re...ning states of the Fatherland, though it must be noted that the final compensation guaranteed by the government does not everywhere equal the sum laid down in Saxony. In Bavaria it is as low as 3,600 marks ($900). Then, too, it must be borne in mind that these figures represent the minimum amount paid. There are localities where considerably higher salaries prevail. In Hamburg and Leipzig 12,000, 15,000 and 18,000 marks are mentioned; but in no state, seemingly, does the minimum fall below 2,200 marks ($550). And though Germany, too, may complain of the high cost of living, still prices there have not reached the level attained in the United States, and 2,200 marks, with free rent, permit of a very comfortable existence."

Mrs. L. B., Benton Harbor, Mich. 1. It is estimated that 600,000 adult Israelites besides children (Ex. 12: 31) went out from Egypt with Moses on the Exodus. 2 and 3. Yes. 4. Don't know. 5. The "h" is silent. 6. Over a million immigrants in a year is the record figure. 7. They were not considered desirable as citizens for various reasons.

M. D. H., Ruffin, N. C. Does a truly converted person have evil thoughts?

Thoughts of evil may enter the minds of even the most saintly. So long as we are in the body we are subject to temptation, and there can be no temptation without a thought of the evil that is suggested. Every time we hear or see or read of an evil word or act we have the thought of evil. These thoughts are stored in the brain, become items in the great storehouse of memory, and are apt to recur to us at any time. There can be no sin in a thought itself; it is only our feeling about the thought and our decision what to do with it that has any moral quality. When our hearts have been filled with love for God and love for people we find this love making us repel the evil thought and turn toward the good. It is helpful to remember that what makes a thing evil is that it will harm somebody. When we love people, we shall not want to harm them in body, mind or soul, and the thought of love will conquer and expel the thought of evil. It is in this sense that "love is the fulfilling of the law," and that "perfect love casteth out fear," as well as other sinful emotions. We may thus bring into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ."

H. S., Chicago, Ill. Heaven is spoken of in the Bible in various senses. Sometimes it is meant to convey the idea of the firmament above us; again, it is the air or atmosphere surrounding the earth, and, still again, it means the highest heaven, the abode of deity. Paul, in II Cor. 12: 2, speaks of one who, in a vision, was caught up to "the third heaven." The Jewish rabbis in their teachings spoke of a number of heavens. In the passage you mention (Matt. 24: 35), most commentators hold that the material and visible heaven is here meant. A similar use of the word is frequently found in both the Old and New Testaments.

At home, begin to read the New Testament, taking the Gospels first, reading slowly and carefully a portion each day and praying for light and understanding. After you have fairly begun, write to us again. We are also mailing you a book which you will find helpful.

L. G. H., Grand Forks, B. C., Canada. The language of Isa. 53: 12 was fulfilled in the lips of the dying Saviour when he was not only numbered with the transgressors, but made intercession for them. So Stephen, the first martyr, taking Jesus for his model, prayed for his murderers (Acts 7: 60). It is beyond the reach of merely human comprehension either to realize the great love and pity in the Saviour's plea for his enemies (who "knew not what they did") or to conceive of a divine clemency so far-reaching that it would extend pardon even in such a case. Such love is boundless and unfathomable.

G. A., Memphis, Tenn. Jesus in the night interview with Nicodemus (John 3) explained the nature and necessity of the new birth "through which a man, as it were, might begin life anew in his relations to God, his manner of thought, feeling and action with respect to spiritual things undergoing a fundamental and permanent revolution." The term "new birth" is frequently used instead of regeneration to express the change from the natural or irreligious life to the Christian life. It is sometimes defined as "that thing which by nature alone a human being cannot have" and which he receives by divine grace through the Holy Spirit. That the need of regeneration was recognized in Old Testament times may be gathered from several passages. "Create in me a clean heart, and renew a right spirit within me," David prayed. The change is one in our moral nature which is requisite for salvation; it is a "death unto sin and a new birth unto righteousness."

"HAVE YOU HEARD?"

Have you heard how the robins build their nests?
Robin Redbreast told me.
First a wisp of yellow hay,
Then some threads of flax or floss,
Feathers too and bits of moss,
Woven with a sweet, sweet song,
This way, that way, and across,
That's what Robin told me.

Have you heard where the robins build their nests?
Robin Redbreast told me.
Up among the leaves so deep,
Where the sunbeams rarely creep,
Long before the winds are cold,
Long before the leaves are gold,
Bright-eyed stars will peep and see,
Baby robins—one, two, three.
That's what Robin told me.

THE DOCTOR'S GIFT

Food Worth Its Weight in Gold.

We usually expect the doctor to put us on some kind of penance and give us bitter medicines.

A Penn. doctor brought a patient something entirely different and the results are truly interesting.

"Two years ago," writes this patient, "I was a frequent victim of acute indigestion and biliousness, being allowed to eat very few things. One day our family doctor brought me a small package, saying he had found something for me to eat.

"He said it was a food called Grape-Nuts and even as its golden color might suggest it was worth its weight in gold. I was sick and tired, trying one thing after another to no avail, but consented to try this new food.

"Well! It surpassed my doctor's fondest anticipation and every day since then I have blessed the good doctor and the inventor of Grape-Nuts.

"I noticed improvement at once and in a month's time my former spells of indigestion had disappeared. In two months I felt like a new man. My mind was much clearer and keener, my body took on the vitality of youth, and this condition has continued."

"There's a Reason." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

The Oldest Person Living

REV. GEORGE W. HILLS, the corresponding secretary of the Pacific Coast Association of the Seventh-day Baptist Church, writes us, enclosing the photograph from which the accompanying picture has been made. Mr. Hills says: "Probably the oldest person now living is Gertrude Alto, whose home is at Old Town, San Diego, Calif. She is of Mexican Aztec Indian blood, and is believed to be in her one hundred and twenty-fourth year of age. She saw the morning dawn, the noonday brightness, and the waning twilight and afterglow of her own generation, and now stands as its lone surviving representative a full generation after its sunset. She is hale and hearty and has a real relish for her food. Through her granddaughter as interpreter, she declares she never saw a sick day in all her long life. She is still able to easily walk about her immediate neighborhood when aided by some one to lead her, as she is nearly blind. In her earlier years it was her delight to go five miles up the valley on foot to the old San Diego Mission for the service at 6.30 in the morning. She attributes her great age and strength to her life-long regular habits and out-door life. The accompanying picture is a very accurate likeness of her."

Sense and Nonsense

stock of agreableness and common sense to fall back on later, and hold their husbands' hearts.'

"Yes," sez Josiah, not sensin' a word I'd said I knowed, his mind wuz so sot on the melancholy fate of Alice's sweetheart, for he sez agin, "I believe his heart broke right into, I know mine would."

And I sez, "I don't believe it, Josiah. When folks git to singin' they often swing out and sing more than they mean, and they love to reminess about things, and feel sentimental and act. Now, I'll bet that man married some good freckled fat woman, and loved her, too, in a cam, comfortable way, and yet most probable he loved to reminess in his mind. For instance, after one of her nice Sunday dinners, as he lay on the lounge and hearn their children playin' in the dooryard, I shouldn't wonder if he took a dreamy sentimental pleasure in thinkin':

"My heart, my heart is breaking
For the love of Alice Gray.

"When it wuzn't no such thing, or he wouldn't had such a good appetite for his wife's juicy roast and apple dumplin's."

Josiah sot demute, and lookin' up I see he wuz asleep, with a peaceful look on his linement, so I guess my good reasonable talk had kinder soothed him, and took his mind off.

The School Year*

CHOOL bells are ringing; trunks are being packed and time-tables studied; "rushing" committees are planning to be on the ground apture the most desirable fresh- for their fraternities; football agers and coaches are thinking of ups and prospects: registrars getting their books and card kes ready; stationery and book keepers are arranging the new t; mothers are wondering, and ng, and praying, and weeping. he time the date of this topic has reached, the "fall term" will opened in full swing.

ow will you get the most from this ol year?

ner will be the old stereotyped y to this: "You will get just as h out of the year as you put into But it is somewhat hard to make reply mean much to an impetu- hearty schoolboy or schoolgirl or ege student. Let us think of some is of school and college life.

irst, there is your social life. You want to get into the best circles of ety and into the best fraternity. ool and college ideals are changing idly about these things. It has metimes been money that was the ef consideration, but nowadays it en happens that the poorest stu- ts are the most popular. Some- es a fellow who waits at table or shes dishes or milks a professor's is one of the leaders of the stu- nt life. It is charm that counts, money. And charm may come nply by self-forgetfulness. Not e nor figure nor brains nor skill nor ney will make you charming. Be rd-hearted, sympathetic, cheerful, lly self-forgetful, and you will find ple liking you, and taking you in ere you would like to go.

A word ought to be said about your ty to the students who are always ft out of things." Many a real gedy has been silently lived by mis- derstood or disliked boys and girls school. If you are one of em, make up your mind that you ll be agreeable. Don't resent it; at only makes it worse. Just be eerful and patient; watch yourself see if you have any little oddities at make you an undesirable com- nion: try to like everybody—and u will soon find people liking you. you are one of the popular set be the lookout to cheer those who are nong the "left outs." You will be rprised at the pleasure you will find nd at the sweetness of some of the riendships thus formed.

In classroom don't try to shine as ne of the pupils who always have omething to say. Be modest, indus- rious, courteous—and honest. It is a urning shame that there is so much ishonor in so many classrooms, even n Christian schools and colleges and mong students who profess to be hristians. It is better to flunk than to heat. This is one of the things about vhich there can be no compromise. Our country cannot have clean busi- ness and clean politics until our col- ege students determine to be straight nd honorable in their work. A dis- honest student means later a dishonest man.

As to athletics, do what you can, out don't do too much. Keep your body strong and well, but remember that the most important part of it is your brain and that its business is to serve your soul.

Most important of all, be good. Be an out-and-out Christian. Students, even those who may be careless in mat- ters of classroom honor, despise shams. If you are going to be a Christian, be a good one, a thorough one. Be the right kind of a standpatter, standing for things that are straight and clean. Join the Y. M. C. A. or the Y. W. C. A. Look into the Student Volunteer question. Join a Bible class. Go to church and prayer-meeting. Be a soul-winner.

Nobody ever had a finer chance than you have. Take Christ with you to school. Make him your dearest friend. Help him win the hearts of others. Find and fill the place he wants you to take in his magnificent task of saving the world.

One last word. Remember father and mother. Determine that from the beginning to the end they shall get some worthy return for the sacrifices they have made for you. Write home often. And go home at Thanksgiving time or Christmas with a clear record and a face unashamed.

* "How to Get the Most From This School Year." Christian Endeavor and B. Y. P. U. Topic for Sunday, September 21, 1913. II Tim. 2: 15-26. (Led by a public school teacher or college student.)

League Study Classes*

FOR some reason or other it seems rather difficult to get much enthusiasm into the business of the League Study classes. Surely the topics and the plans are interesting enough. Mission Study, Bible Study, Christian Stewardship, Social Service, Personal Work—all these can be made of really thrilling interest. But how? That is the question your league wants to answer.

There are four secrets. In the first place, whichever line of work you take up, get down through the letter and form of it to the spirit of it. You like to read adventure stories, don't you? Well, no tales of adventure were ever more thrilling than the records of missionary conquests. Get into the spirit of missions; realize what those heroes and heroines were after or are still seeking. Remember that it is life—the throbbing life of bewildered heathenism on the one hand and the thrilling life of Christian impulse on the other. Link yourself and your class up with the great movement. You are a part of it. Get into th. spirit of it, and it will be delightful.

The same thing applies to the other classes. Bible study is wonderful when you realize that it is God talking to you and trying to make you happy and useful. Christian stewardship means putting your money where it will make the greatest possible gains. Social service means getting into the great game of changing wrong methods and uprooting wrong principles of society and trying to find a way to give every one a chance to live a real life. Personal work means learning how to get people to become friends of Jesus. All these things are matters of really intense interest.

The next secret is for each member of the class to be faithful. That, of course, means you.

The next secret is to have an enthusiastic, inspiring, well-informed, keen and cheerful teacher. This is the hardest item of all. If your class can find such a teacher. it is fortunate indeed. Probably there is some one like that somewhere in the church who can be brought into the work.

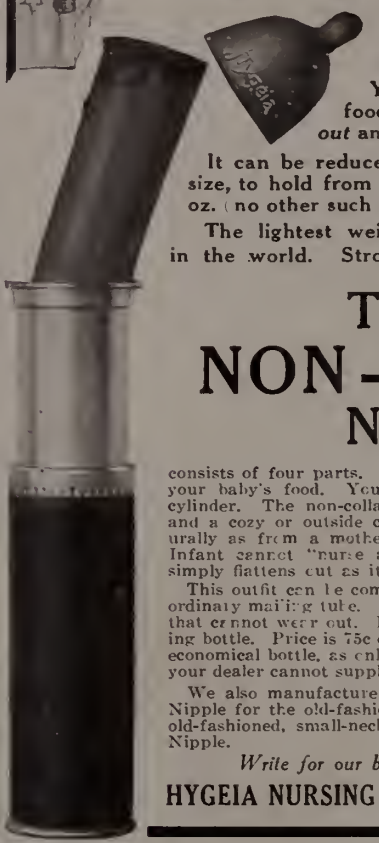
The last thing, though the first in importance, is to realize that Christ is with you in your work. He is. He has promised to be. But if we don't believe it, or don't think of it, we shall have dull times. Open your eyes to see him. Open your minds to his truth. Open your hearts to his love. Yield yourself to his will. That will make a class and a course worth while.

* "League Study Classes." Epworth League Topic for Sunday, September 21, 1913. II Tim. 2: 2-15; Luke 24; 27-32; Ps. 37: 31; 40; 8; Isa. 8; 20.

Can't Break

Your Baby Cannot Break This Bottle

Note these advantages of the Hygeia Non-Breakable Bottle over all other nursing bottles.



No glass to this bottle — the food-bag is pure gum.

You can turn the food-bag wrong side out and clean it perfectly.

Turn Wrong Side Out To Clean

It can be reduced, or increased in size, to hold from a teaspoonful to 8 oz. (no other such bottle).

The lightest weight nursing bottle in the world. Strong enough to last indefinitely.

The HYGEIA NON-BREAKABLE Nursing Bottle

consists of four parts. There is a pure rubber food-bag into which you put your baby's food. You simply drop the food-bag into a pure aluminum cylinder. The non-collapsible, breast-shaped Hygeia nipple fits over these and a cozy or outside covering keeps food warm. The infant nurses naturally as from a mother's breast. Pressure of air collapses the food-bag. Infant cannot "nurse air." There is never any air in the food-bag; it simply flattens out as it empties.

This outfit can be completely sterilized and can be mailed anywhere in an ordinary mailing tube. When you buy one of these bottles, you have a bottle that cannot wear out. It is a marvelous improvement on the old-style nursing bottle. Price is 75c complete at druggists, but in the long run is the most economical bottle, as only the rubber parts ever wear out. Sent postpaid, if your dealer cannot supply, but ask him first.

We also manufacture the New Hygeia Nursing Bottle and the Ball-Cup Nipple for the old-fashioned, small-neck nursing bottle. If you still use the old-fashioned, small-neck nursing bottle, ask for a sample of the Ball-Cup Nipple.

Write for our booklet of modern improved nursing devices.

Questions and Answers

C. W. B., Joy, Ill. Was the Old Testament prohibition against eating pork ever revoked? If so, when and where?

At what is known as the "first church council," described in Acts 15, the decision was definitely made that Gentile Christians were not to be compelled to keep the Jewish ceremonial law. The council sent a letter to the new converts setting them free from all these ceremonial requirements. This was the great burden of Paul's preaching, namely, that we are saved not by keeping the law of Moses but by faith in Christ. Circumcision was the sign of submission to the Mosaic law, and Paul, greatly to the displeasure of the Jews, taught that this was not necessary. The vision of Peter (Acts 10: 9-16) while given for the purpose of making him willing to associate intimately with Gentiles, seems also to teach definitely that the Old Testament distinction between clean and unclean meats is no longer in force.

A. G. B., Slate Spring, Miss. Your letter and enclosure appreciated. The number seven is symbolical of completeness, and in this sense was regarded by the Jews as of the highest importance. The seventh day was the rest day after the completion of creation; the seventh month was ushered in by the Feast of Trumpets, the Feast of Tabernacles, and the Day of Atonement; the seventh is the Sabbatical year; seven sevens mark the Jewish year of jubilee; seven things were to be offered in sacrifice. In Pharaoh's dream there were seven kine and seven ears of corn; Jericho was compassed seven times by seven priests with seven trumpets. There were seven days for a marriage festival and seven sevens or forty-nine days for mourning, etc. It is astonishing how frequently the number seven with its multiples is found in the prophetical works, especially in Revelation.

W. A. C., Duncan, S. C. There is little doubt that Paul in Rom. 7 wrote largely from personal experience. His keen analysis of the unregenerate condition forbids any other conclusion. Rom. 8: 1-4 is the presentation of the logical conclusion from the preceding argument. The first four verses show how the law of sin and death has lost its power of bringing believers again into bondage and "how the law of the Gospel receives in them the homage of a loving obedience."

B. N. H., Charleston, W. Va. Matt. 7 concludes the "Sermon on the Mount." In the first few verses, we have warnings against harsh and censorious judgment of our neighbors instead of treating them with love and brotherly kindness. But in verse 6 the Master shows the danger of running to the opposite extreme and of the lack of proper discrimination. The holy truths of the Gospel, the pearls of the faith, are not to be cast before those who will not only despise them, but will trample them under foot. Religion may be brought into contempt if we try to force it upon those who will not have it. The figure used in the illustration—the dogs—is a familiar one in the East, where those animals are foul scavengers, ceremonially unclean, as swine are also, and repulsive to the Jews.

G. A. S., Salisbury, N. C. Gen. 6: 12 should be read in connection with the preceding verse and that which follows. Destruction and misery were everywhere, because of sin and lawlessness. The world was to have the beautiful work God had made, for the very soil was neglected, and the people given over to sloth and every kind of wickedness. The reference to Noah in verse 9 is not to be understood as absolute perfection, for since the fall no man had been free from sin, but as one who lived by faith, Noah was not only a just man but perfect in the sincerity of his desire to do God's will. This is the accepted view of the leading commentators on the subject.

A Reader. In James 5: 16 we find the command "Confess your faults one to another." Does this mean that we must confess all the sins committed, even before conversion? If so, to whom should they be confessed?

It makes the whole problem of confession simple to remember that the duty is to confess to those whom we have wronged. If we have done any wrong to any person, we must confess it to him, and ask him to forgive us. A wrong that affects no one but God and ourselves needs to be confessed only to God. Often, however, a public confession is helpful. Under the awakening of conscience a Christian may be led to feel that he has been living under false pretenses, and will find a relief in saying so, and in making a new start. After all, we ought not to dread confession so much as we do. The Christian has no righteousness of his own to uphold: his righteousness consists in trusting Christ. Paul liked to declare that he was, to all intents and purposes, so far as the law was concerned, a dead man; he had been crucified with Christ, and Christ lived in him. He had no reputation to sustain. He liked to speak of himself as having been the chief of sinners. Then, too, people are apt to be kinder than we think; our friends will not want to condemn us, but help us. But, on the other hand, this is often a fruitful source of cruel temptation to sensitive souls. They imagine they ought to speak of things which no one but God needs to know about. Remember that God is never unreasonable, nor harsh. Tell him all about it, and then he will tell you plainly and kindly whether any other confessions are necessary.

Mrs. H., Denver, Col., writes: "In regard to the question, 'Is the world ready for Christ's return?' I want to say that I am sure it would be a surprise to most people to know how many there are to whom the dearest thought of their hearts is the hope of his return. And furthermore, if this subject were taught as it should be in the churches, there would be many more with the 'Blessed Hope' to cheer them. One Sunday about a year ago when a number of our Denver clergy preached on this subject, the greatest enthusiasm was aroused and the churches were crowded." We agree with our correspondent that it would be an excellent thing for our churches to give more attention to this great feature of Christian faith. The experience of the churches of Denver, which found it a welcome topic among their congregations, could be duplicated in other churches.

Reader, Brush Fork, W. Va. 1. The principal Old Testament passages concerning the millennium are these: Isa. 65: 17-25; Ezek. 37: 25; Dan. 7: 27; 7: 14. In the New Testament the chief reference is in Rev. 5: 10 and 20: 3, 4. 2. Jesus, we are told in Heb. 4: 15, was "in all things tempted like as we are, yet without sin." The subject of the sinlessness of Christ has been a fruitful theme of discussion, as to whether he could or could not sin. The church council of Chalcedon (A.D. 451) formulated the doctrine that Jesus was not only divine but "truly man, with a rational soul and body of like essence with us as to his manhood, and in all things like us, sin excepted." This has remained substantially unchanged. Says one leading commentator: "In all the relations of life on earth, Jesus always did what was due to them. He did not seek in virtue of the connection of his humanity in one personality with his divinity to exempt his human nature from the influences which legitimately operate on it; but meeting fully life's duties as they came to him, he asserted in himself the triumph of one unfallen nature over the power of evil in the world. Thus his perfect holiness of life stands out clearly in the moral heavens."

In THE MAIL-BAG recently it was announced that Henry Ballinger of Cœur d'Alene had kept a diary fifty-nine years, since September 18, 1854. Miss Laura Gwinnup of Vail, N. J., writes that she has kept a diary since November 17, 1854, not missing a day, and R. C. Weaver of Findley Lake, N. Y., has kept one since April 1, 1854, six months longer than Mr. Ballinger. Mr. Weaver is eighty-seven years of age, reads without glasses, and has been a subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD many years.

F. B. R., Blissfield, Mich. 1. See comment on Cain's sacrifice in MAIL-BAG recently. 2. Matt. 5: 5 contains a promise which is a repetition of Ps. 37: 11. The "earth" may be translated "the land." The meek (that is, the quiet, peace-loving, kindly disposed, gentle, true-hearted, as contrasted with the arrogant, quarrelsome, high-minded, proud, and revengeful) were the objects of special manifestations of God's favor. When they delight themselves in the Lord, he gives them the desires of their heart. And even the little they possess is better than the riches of the wicked. "They are the only rightful occupants," says one eloquent commentator, "of a foot of ground or a crust of bread here, and they are the heirs of all coming things." They are the overcomers. See Rev. 21: 7.

W. A. C., Duncan, S. C. Please explain Rom. 5: 14-21.

In this passage Paul is comparing the influence of Adam and Christ. His argument begins with verse 12: "By one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin." (Dr. Denny says: "By Adam the race was launched upon a course of sin.") Paul goes on to state that sin was in the world before the written law was given, but declares that sin is not counted as sin where there is no law. God does not condemn a man for breaking a law of which he is ignorant. But even where sin was not imputed, death reigned, because death had come into the world as the result of Adam's sin, and became a universal experience, affecting even those who broke no specific and plainly stated command, as Adam did. But the grace that comes from Christ is even greater than the doom that came through Adam. One man sinned, and many were condemned; grace, through Christ, pardons many sins. Death reigned because of one man; now abundance of life and grace reign by one, Jesus Christ (verse 17). Verse 18 sums up what has gone before: "As by the offense of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation, even so by the righteousness of one the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life. Adam's disobedience made many sinners; Christ's obedience will make many righteous (verse 19). The law was given so that sin might be revealed. Sin was in the human heart, but men did not realize what it was till the law came. The law showed them that they were disobeying God. "But where sin abounded, grace did much more abound;" there was sin for everybody, there is grace for everybody—and more grace than sin. The reign of sin brings death; the reign of grace brings eternal life.

A Friend, Palouse, Wash. There is nothing in the Scriptures forbidding a man from marrying his deceased wife's sister. In a sense what similar relationship, in fact, marriage is almost commanded, that is, the marriage of a man to his brother's widow. The marriage of a deceased wife's sister is not forbidden in this country, but, in spite of vigorous efforts to secure its repeal, an ancient law in England, forbidding such marriages, is still in force.

F. G. M., Corvallis, Ore. There are many interpretations of the book of Revelation. Some hold that many of the prophecies have already been fulfilled, while others regard nearly all of it still in the future. The latter is the view taken by Weiss, Jamison, Faussett and Brown, and several others. Practically the whole of chapter 13 is assigned to the future. We would suggest that you procure a good commentary, as the subject cannot be dealt with briefly.

Subscriber, Beattystown, N. J. Various forms of contract are made. Sometimes the publisher buys the manuscript of a book outright, acquiring possession of all rights and profits; sometimes a certain sum is paid and an agreement is made that a certain percentage of the income from the sales of the book, called a "royalty," shall be paid to the author; sometimes only royalties are promised and no initial payment made. In cases where the author pays the publisher for printing he becomes virtually his own publisher, assuming all risks of the market.

Miscellaneous

J. W. B., Gainesville, Texas. We understand that actual polygamy was not proved in the case you mention, although it was implied in the evidence.

Reader, Winchester, Ind. The Egyptians were the first nation of whom it is recorded that they shaved the face. Joseph, when in Egypt, followed their custom. (Gen. 41: 14.

M. C. Thomson, Woodbury, L. I., N. Y., would be glad to receive from some reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD a copy of the poem which begins:

W. H. N., North Carolina. Robertson Nicoll is distinguished as a Bible scholar and his Expositions of Texts are highly valued. Preachers, however, should not depend too much on such aids in sermon preparation.

W. F., Carlisle, Ky. The passage to which you refer (Gen. 6: 3) is interpreted by some Biblical authorities as meaning that the period of 120 years would be allowed as a respite or interval before the flood, in which men might repent.

Miss B. H., Peoria, Ill., writes that the poem beginning "A garden is a lovesome thing," for which Pattick Thomas, Columbus, Miss., inquired, can be found in the Oxford Book of English Verse, published by the Clarendon Press, Oxford, England.

E., Butler, Pa. Lilith was a legendary being corresponding somewhat to the "harpies" of classical mythology. In rabbinical literature she is regarded as Adam's first wife, a creature, not quite human, with whom he lived before the creation of Eve.

A. G. W., Pulaski, Va. For the government to appropriate money for missionary work would be a violation of the fundamental principle which holds church and state forever separate here. Our government civilizes and educates, but it does not teach religion, that being the special duty of the religious organizations.

Mrs. J. W. S., Alto, N. M. The italicised parts are words which, though not in the original, are implied and are consequently filled in their proper places in the English translation. We are sending you a little booklet which will inform you concerning the various sources of Bible translation.

E. G. R., Cantril, Iowa. Village improvement, municipal or village sanitation, the Panama Canal, the Peace Movement, woman suffrage, high cost of living, child labor, the temperance question, etc., are among the subjects your society could discuss to advantage.

AN INDIAN TOWN GOVERNOR

QUICHES CARRYING A CROSS IN HONOR OF THEIR GOD OF FIRE

TAKING DRUNKEN INDIANS TO JAIL

WINNING GUATEMALA WITH THE GOSPEL OF HEALING

BY CHARLES F. SECORD, M.D.

THE population of Guatemala, the largest of the Central American republics, is largely composed of re Indians, for more than sixty r cent. are free from European ood. The others are descendts of the intermarriage of paniards with Indians, and eak the Spanish language. The riter has lived in Guatemala arly fourteen years, having tablished a medical mission nong the Quiche Indians, the rgest and most important of all e Indian tribes of the isthmus. hey are descendants of the Tolcs, and are industrious and inlligent, the various arts, professons and trades being represented nong them. The Quiches are, owever, tenacious of their anent customs, and innumerable tars are to be found upon the mountains, where they worship according the ancient rites conserved by the wizard priests, or medicine men, ho are the real heads of the people. There is, also, a mixture of emon worship in their religion, and they claim that their ancient gods ppear to the wizards at stated periods, during the offerings of fire, ruits, etc., upon their altars. The Indians are very jealous of oreigners, retaining in their memories the atrocities of the Spanish onquerors, for the history of the conquest is handed down verbally from ather to son in the ruling or priestly caste. But the medicine and surgical ases have conquered the suspicions of the great mass of the Indians, and the nfluence of the Quiche Medical Mission is far-reaching. Public opinion has een molded, and in general icious customs have given place o the sweet fruits of the Gospel f Jesus Christ.

From ancient times the soil of Central America has been tained with the blood of innumerable struggles, and the great Quiche nation, by force of arms, conquered the entire country rom Guatemala to Colombia. Where did the Quiches originally come from? Their traditions have much of Hebrew coloring, but their customs are, in many ways, similar to those of the ancient Egyptians. The manufacture of pottery, their burial customs, etc., seem to be Egyptian, and while they no longer make an open window in the burial caskets, as did the Egyptians, they do leave a small window, with a pane of glass, or paint a window and eyes on the coffin. We find some pure Hebrew roots in the language, also, and the legends are Hebrew, such as the story of the creation, the flood, etc.

They claim to be the descendants of a mighty race, and are proud of it. They say that during the darkness of a long night, during which time there was a remarkable confusion of tongues, they began their march to Mexico, and afterward came down to Guatemala. Why they abandoned their wonderful cities in Mexico is not known, nor do they state the cause.

The Spaniards found the Quiches enjoying peace and prosperity, and the great cities and well-cultivated fields surprised them greatly. The Indians gathered to resist the invasion, but after repeated battles the Spaniards were victorious and the Central American isthmus became a colony of Spain. In 1812 the Quiches rebelled against the government and established a mushroom kingdom of but a few days' duration, with the capital at Totonicapan, the ancient seat of the noblemen.

In 1821 Guatemala declared her independence from Spain, and for many years the history of Guatemala was one continual struggle against the tyranny of evil men, who used the power of government to further their personal designs, and oftentimes to obstruct the march of civilization and progress. This state of affairs continued until God raised up a man from the common people, Rufino Barrios, who led them to victory against the despots in power. There had been spasmodic uprisings from time to time before the advent of Barrios upon the public scene, the object being to overthrow and destroy the rum distilleries, which were located in the largest towns. The Indians, from time immemorial, hated alcohol, but their efforts to prevent its manufacture have been fruitless, and they died by the thousands in their efforts to destroy it. The real progress of the country dates from the successful revolution of General Barrios in 1871, for Barrios it was who opened the country to the great civilizer, the Bible, and it was he who first began to brush the cobwebs of monkish teaching from the minds of his people. He opened the doors of the republic to modern civilization in its multiform manifestations, and began a great work which his worthy successor, President Cabrera, has been carrying on with a firm hand and clear and noble purpose. Guatemala has been blessed with these two great men, and for that reason the maiority of the people are desirous for his continuance in power as chief executive. Even many of his enemies are in accord with this plausible design.

THE SCHOOL OF ARTS FOR YOUNG LADIES, GUATEMALA CITY

A few years ago a few of the political enemies of President Cabrera of Guatemala made a desperate effort to thwart the will of the great majority of his fellow citizens, who delight in his beneficent and progressive rule. One of the principal avenues of the capital was tunneled, and large quantities of high explosives placed beneath the street, connected with electric batteries in a house far

TEXAS' EPWORTH LEAGUE IN CAMP

THE TEXAS EPWORTH LEAGUE CAMP AND INN AT EPWORTH-BY-THE-SEA, CORPUS CHRISTI, TEXAS

THE Texas State League held its ninth annual encampment at Epworth-by-the-Sea, Corpus Christi, Texas, from August 6 to August 18 inclusive. The program was unusually attractive. Rev. J. W. (Guliver) Hill came on a well earned reputation as a writer, and more than fulfilled expectations. Dr. W. W. Pinson spoke several times on missions. His many years' experience in the field as a missionary made his talks both interesting and instructive. Rev. Frank Onderdonk delivered several lectures and sermons on the Mexican people and the Mexican situation. The current interest in that country and Mr. Onderdonk's extensive acquaintance there made these numbers particularly prominent. In his address he developed some beautiful thoughts which worked a wonderful transformation in the attitude of his hearers toward the Mexican people, and he was talking to a people who have had their minds well made up on that question owing to their close proximity to the sister republic on the south. The conclusion drawn was, "We are prone to look upon the Mexican as a 'greaser' and forget that he has a soul to save." Dr. S. F. Parker, editor of the Epworth Era of Nashville, Tenn., gave a series of most practical lectures, which the leaguers in general pronounced as being "just what we need."

Rev. Robert Shuler of the University Church at Austin conducted an open air vesper service each evening on the ground in front of the "Inn." These came to be the most popular service on the ground with the younger people. Mr. Shuler is a young man with a message which appeals to the young men and women.

Bishop Mouzon delivered a series of sermons based on the Sermon on the Mount. The closing number of this series was pronounced by many as the greatest literary effort ever heard on the Epworth grounds. These and many other excellent sermons and lectures constituted the greater part of the program. Two special numbers furnished some diversion.

The Southwestern University quartette gave one evening's entertainment, which was deservedly popular. The young men are artists in their line and have traveled together for several years.

The Corpus Christi chapter closed a year's missionary study with an open program, presenting a sort of "Carnival of Nations." It consisted of music, tableaux, and addresses by costumed representatives of the several nations studied. The Corpus Christi chapter deserves great credit for the devoted and efficient work which led up to such a splendid program.

The Boy Scout movement is gaining considerable momentum in Texas. There were about one hundred camped on the ground. They made themselves generally useful, exemplifying the teachings of that excellent organization. Their greatest achievement was to pick up, find a tent for, and make comfortable a sick young man who had wandered to the encampment grounds. The boys cared for him as best they could for several days. Just before death overtook him, he smiled and asked God's blessing on those who had been so kind to him in those last days.

The greatest issue of the encampment was the question of whether or not Epworth-by-the-Sea should be sold. The property was procured nine years ago for $300, and can be sold now for $50,000 or more. The city of Corpus Christi has grown to the grounds, and many of the encampment featu have been ruined. The trustees finally came to t conclusion that it should be sold. They are looki for another location on Corpus Christi Bay.

The State officers for the year 1913 are: Pre dent, Rev. S. H. Beall of San Antonio; H. M. Wa ing, Jr., Houston, first vice-president; Miss Do Brack of San Antonio, second vice-president; M Jacksie Miller of San Antonio, third vice-presider O. T. Cooper of Denton, fourth vice-president; L. Booth of San Antonio, secretary; A. B. Hardin Denison, treasurer; Miss Olive Ferguson of Corp Christi, junior superintendent; W. H. Butler, San Marcos, superintendent of boys' work; and Re Mr. Glenn Flinn of Bryan, dean encampment.

The board of trustees is compos as follows: Dr. J. E. Harrison San Antonio, president; W. N. Ha of San Antonio, treasurer; Rev. V J. Johnson of Beaumont, secretar R. M. Kelley of Longview; Rev. . E. Rector of West End, San Ant nio; C. H. Beneke of Houston; Re S. C. Riddle of Decatur; John Ru sell of Plano; Dr. H. A. Boaz Dallas; J. K. Parr of Hillsboro; Re W. T. Griswold of Childress, ar Judge O. Truelove of Amarillo.

The following officers were elect for the coming year: President, Gu W. Thomasson of Dallas; first vic president, Rev. L. E. Booth of Sa Antonio; second vice-president, Mr Minnie F. Armstrong, Gainesvill third vice-president, Mrs. L. M. Li lard, Seguin; fourth vice-presiden Rev. Glenn Flinn, Bryan; superi tendent boys' work, Professor Butle San Marcos; junior superintenden Miss Pearl Crawford, Corpus Christ secretary - treasurer, Layton W Bailey, Dallas; dean of encampmen Dr. George S. Sexton.

The retiring president appointed special committee, called the er campment committee, which will ac with the committee from the boar of trustees in the matter of locatin the new encampment grounds if such a task be comes necessary. This committee will also atten to such other matters as may come up as an out growth of the possible sale of the present site and the completion of arrangements for remova and relocation. This committee consists of the new president, Gus W. Thomasson, as chairman, to gether with Rev. C. H. Booth and Dr. Georg Sexton.

distant. The coachman was hired to drive the president over the mined street, and at a given signal the mine was exploded. The coachman and horses were instantly killed, but the wise Providence which watches over the destinies of great and useful men protected the president from harm. President Cabrera, desirous of returning good for evil, and with the hearty co-operation of the public, caused a large and beautiful building to be erected on the site of the murderous attempt, dedicated to the correction of young criminals, a modern reform school in every sense of the word. In doing this he dealt a blow at the root of all crime, for he takes the young, who are beginning to go astray, and educates them in ways of righteousness and goodness. This is practical Christianity and worthy of double praise from the fact that ordinarily the Latin-American seeks revenge for real and fancied grievances, and specially would this be expected in such a far-reaching crime as the attempt upon the life of a chief executive. The president's action indicates how strong an influence the simple Gospel of Jesus is wielding in Guatemala.

Public schools of arts and sciences have been erected in each one of the twenty-three States of the republic, and besides there is a large and elegant school for young ladies in the capital, where American and English teachers instruct the students. The Quiches make fine Christians, and are blessed with a strong, noble character and fine intelligence, as well as a love for domestic life.

The Story of a Little Chinese Maid

MANY readers of this journal have already taken advantage of our offer and have sent for free copies of the booklet entitled: Little Hai Ieh Tsi (the "Abused Leaf"); a Story of Childhood and its Perils in Heathen China, which THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has just issued. All who are interested in sweet and innocent childhood will find this a fascinating story, and especially those who sympathize with the children of China. A postal card addressed to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will bring you free copies of this illustrated booklet. Address, "China Orphans, CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York."

LITTLE CHINA ORPHANS NEED HELP

A CALL FROM OUR MISSIONARIES FOR AID IN A NOBLE WORK

CHINESE ORPHAN BOYS AT THE FOOCHOW ORPHANAGE

GIRL WAIFS AT THE TSAOHSIEN ORPHANAGE

THESE are times of peril and privation for our missionaries in China. One rebellion following another, with scarcely an appreciable interval of peace between, has made e life of a missionary one of unusual discomfort d even danger. Letters received from a number our American missionaries disclose this, although they are by no means letters of complaint t rather of cheer and encouragement.

Among the communications that have come to us e a number from mission stations where orphan- e work is conducted. As our readers are already ware, the good missionaries look to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Family for the support of some elve hundred of these orphans, and thus far they ve not been disappointed. Many of the children ere received into the orphanage during the last mine, and others were taken in during the late bellion. Thus, while some have been under mis- onary care and training for several years others e comparatively newcomers.

Many of these little waifs have names that are ry beautiful, which seems strange in view of their ildhood hardships and the little love that was be- owed upon them by their own relatives. Mission- y Ethel Abercrombie of Shanghai writes of one her little maids named Tien Yen ("Heaven's riend"), who lately passed away, doubtless being victim of early exposure and privation. Missionary mily Dieterle, also of Shanghai, writes of an or- han girl named "True Influence," and another alled Pao Li ("Precious One"), both of whom give romise of a fine Christian womanhood. One wee aid from Anhui bore the odd appellation of Ang wei ("Spirit of the Poppy"); another was Pau su ("Precious Pearl"); another Ta Lah ("Aspiation"); and others Sing Noen ("The New hild"); Fok Pau ("Full Joy"); Ef Ok "Love lessed"); E Noen ("Dear Child") etc. "Beautiul Flower," "Apricot Flower" and "Fresh Flower" re a trio of little girl orphans at Saratsi, who ere saved from the usual fate of many girl babies n China by a lady who afterwards lost her own life uring one of the revolutions.

Many of our readers are already familiar with the tory of poor little Hai Ieh Tsi ("Abused Leaf"), which has been presented in pamphlet form by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD—a little child, who was thrown o the dogs and rescued, half dead, by the missiona- ies, and has grown up to be one of the most harming little Christians in China. The experi- nce of Hai Ieh Tsi is one that can be duplicated in almost any of the orphanages, where CHRISTIAN HERALD readers are now supporting Chinese children and providing for them godly care and training on spiritual and industrial lines. It has been a great joy to all who have been represented in this work to know that a number of the girl waifs, who were taken in helpless and ill, have grown up to be splendid young women, some now being teachers and Christian workers, and others nurses and Bible women, while many of the rest have been taught useful employments by which they are now supporting themselves. The individual histories of some of these children are truly pathetic. One little girl, Ling Pao, when eight years old was sold by her parents to a well-to-do family for $10, and a year or two afterwards was resold to a life of sin. Fortunately she escaped, after many difficulties, and at last she was providentially sent to the Door of Hope Mission at Shanghai, where she began life on a new and better basis and is doing well. There are some ninety orphan children in the Shanghai Mission who have been supported by CHRISTIAN HERALD readers, many of them with a past as full of incident and peril to body as well as soul as that of little Ling Pao.

Missionary S. E. Jows, China Inland Mission, Sinchanghsien, writes that he has some twenty-nine children in the mission's care, all boys. Many of them will soon be able to learn a trade. Our readers have been the means thus far of making a future possible for these little lads, and we are hoping in their behalf that our friends will continue their interest and support.

A letter from H. C. Bartel, missionary at Tsaohsien, North China, says: "We were deeply touched upon our arrival in China years ago by the indescribable misery of the many poor homeless children, and had a great longing to do something for them. In 1905 we began to take in a few. We now have two hundred children in the home. Most of the larger ones are making good progress in the different branches of industrial work, such as shoemaking, cotton cloth, towel and silk weaving, carpet-making, etc. They are also making progress in their school work. Above all, we rejoice for the work of the Holy Spirit upon their hearts and lives, making them desirous to become honest Christians. When we see what useful instruments they become in the hand of God for the furtherance of his cause, when under the influence of the Gospel, it gives us joy and courage to devote our time and strength for this needy work. We hope that the friends who have so kindly contributed will make it possible for us to carry it on."

Missionary George D. Schlosser writes from Tsingkiangpu to his CHRISTIAN HERALD friends: "Our children all attend regular worship and take active part in the lessons in Sunday school. Many are trying to be Christians, and we are encouraged. We have a very good Chinese teacher and matron for the boys. The girls have a matron who is a spiritual inspiration to us all. We were forced to leave our quarters on the farm to go into the city, because of the unsettled condition of the country. Sickness has also kept us from making as much progress as might be expected. We are in the famine belt. Then, too, the soldiers looted this place last year (i.e., the city, not our place, though lots of petty thieving occurred here). We thank God for all we have and trust him for more."

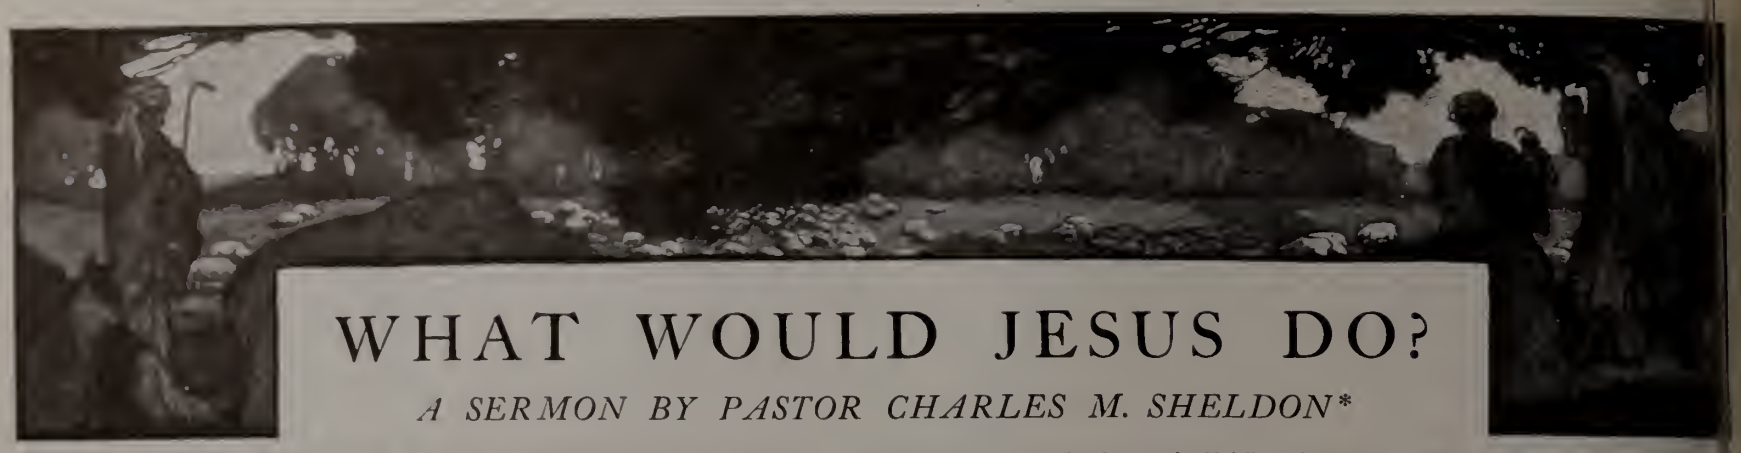
Missionary Mary Stone of Kiukiang sends us an appeal in behalf of the children in her care for whom patrons are needed. Missionary C. F. Kupfer of the same mission writes in behalf of three children who are left destitute, and adds "that without the aid of the orphan's Friend they could obtain no training or education whatsoever."

Missionary Jows also sends the story of Wong Oe Eii ("Lover of Pearls"), a girl whose father died when she was four or five years old, and who was sold to be the child wife of an adopted son of a well-to-do neighbor for $11 Mexican. Mr. Jows explains the custom in such cases. "The usual way is to spend all the purchase money to provide an outfit for the girl, but in this case only one thin cotton garment was given to cover her rags. From the time a girl is betrothed in China, she is looked upon as the property of her 'fuko' or husband's family. It afterward turned out that her betrothed had already two wives in another part of the province, and he disappeared. Then Oe Eii, the child wife, was sent to the mission. She is now learning to read, make her own clothes, cook and wash, and is becoming a very useful Christian girl."

Missionary Emil Johnson of Saratsi orphanage in North Shansi writes, sending a greeting from the little girls under his care, who have been supported by CHRISTIAN HERALD readers. He says: "They are well and happy and a sight of them would make you all feel greatly rewarded." The same missionary tells of the death of Nan Hoh ("Harmonious Ten Thousand"), a dear little girl waif, who passed away greatly beloved and regretted. Her parentage was a mystery. She was found on the public highway on a very cold day in November, having been thrown out, no doubt, to die. Her little feet were frozen and her lips blistered with the frost. She was tenderly cared for, however, and turned out apparently a strong child; but it is now evident that she never fully recovered from her exposure in infancy. Missionary Johnson, speaking of her death, likens it to the taking out of another jewel from the orphanage. "May they not be called friends," he asks, "who await their benefactors in the everlasting habitations? You dear friends of the children, who assist us in this God-pleasing work, have already many such little friends awaiting you in the beautiful land above."

Superintendent Tsu of the Compassion Orphanage at Ningpo has made a report concerning the orphans in his care. Mr. Tsu is a Christian convert, who taught his wife and mother to read, and through his influence the whole family with one exception have become Christians. Husband and wife work in the orphanage purely for love of souls and actuated by sympathy for the helplessness of the little children. Seventy-five are under their care. The orphanage has a good substantial building and a small farm of ten acres. Nine of the orphan boys have been baptized and have joined the church. More are trying to do right Godward. Nearly all can read, and they study the Bible and their schoolbooks. Besides, they are taught practical farming, carpentry, etc. Superintendent Tsu adds that many orphans are unprovided for.

Of the twelve hundred little children at the various orphanages, there are probably one-third of the whole for whom provision has not yet been secured. Will you not help us to continue the support of these little protégés who are making such promising progress? We have been aided by many readers in this worthy work; but some of the latter have passed away and others, through various causes, have dropped out. We should like to see a response from our readers and their friends so generous and spontaneous that every one of these little waifs would be provided for for a year to come. Such a work is one which should not suffer for the lack of generous assistance from God's people, and we trust that every reader will take this as a personal appeal "In His Name." Address "China Orphan Fund, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York." All contributions will be gratefully received and acknowledged.



WHAT WOULD JESUS DO?

*A SERMON BY PASTOR CHARLES M. SHELDON

TEXT: "For hereunto were ye called: because Christ also suffered for you, leaving you an example, that ye should follow his steps." I Peter 2: 21, R. V.

THE greatest example in all the world for human conduct is Jesus Christ. He came into the world on purpose to show people how to live. What he did, and said, and was, while he was on the earth, was an illustration of what human beings ought to do and say and be. The great fact of his sinlessness makes him an example of one who never did a wrong thing or made any mistakes in his conduct. Hence it would always be safe for humanity to take him for the great example and follow in his steps.

Now, no one can tell exactly what Jesus might do if he were on the earth again, in all the details of his life. It might not be possible to tell how he would dress, or in what kind of house he would live, or what kind of business or occupation he would take up, or what language he would use. It might not be possible either in every case to tell what the attitude of Jesus would be in regard to some public questions which interest humanity. But all this would not be necessary and need not obscure the main fact of his being an example. For while we do not know all the details concerning his actions, we do know without any question the general principles which would govern his daily conduct, and these principles may be stated as follows:

If Jesus Were Here To-day

1. We know that Jesus would always act for the highest interest of the kingdom of God.

2. We know he would not make money, power or pleasure the first true aim of his life.

3. We know his greatest passion would be love for all mankind.

4. We know he would have one great purpose, viz.: to save all humanity.

Basing all the conduct of Jesus on these four principles of which we are absolutely sure, what would Jesus do if he were a part of the age in which we live? This is an interesting and fair question for people to ask. We do not live in Palestine in the time when Jesus was on the earth. The age in which we live is different in many ways from the age in which he lived. We want to know what Jesus would do here and now, if he were living now and had to face our problems and answer our questions. Let us ask, what would Jesus do now if he were here and living among men? The answer to this question does not pretend to say with absolute knowledge that Jesus would do these things, but it is an attempt to answer honestly what seems to be the proper phase with the four principles already laid down.

1. He would be a part of the age in which he was born and identify himself with it completely. He would enter into the joys and sorrows, hopes and ambitions and enthusiasms of the time in which he lived. He would move among men as one of them and it would not be surprising if he were counted as an average person among others. We know he was when he lived in Nazareth. The people thought him as one of their own townsmen. Just what his personal appearance would be, I do not believe any one could tell. There has never been any authentic portrait of Jesus, but however that may be, his identification with humanity would at any rate be complete. He would sympathize with and enter into every phase of human life and be a part of it.

2. If Jesus were here to-day he would engage in some honest work and lead a happy and simple life. I do not think it would make any difference just what work he did so long as it was something the world needed. He was a carpenter because his father was one. If Joseph had happened to be a merchant at Nazareth, Jesus would probably have worked in the store. The matter of detail is not of any importance. The main thing is that Jesus would probably work with his hands or he would be a teacher and serve the world in some way where it needs service, and no matter what he did we cannot imagine him living in any other way except the simplest and happiest. We cannot imagine him filling his life with useless luxuries or carelessly enjoying life in the midst of great want and suffering.

3. If Jesus were here to-day he would be the greatest optimist alive. He would believe the world was getting better all the time. He would be an optimistic preacher and teacher. He would be the most enthusiastic person in the community. He would radiate cheerfulness and hope and courage all around. It is impossible to think of Jesus as a gloomy or sad person. When he lived before, he was a man of sorrows, but he was not a sorrowful man. He bore the griefs of the world, but he himself was not a grieving person. People were anxious and eager to meet him, knowing they would always meet a person of everlasting hope. He would be popular with the masses, because, whenever he spoke, he would say something to lighten their sorrows.

4. If Jesus were here on the earth to-day, he would praise and encourage the church. I do not think Jesus would come into the world condemning his own Christianity. He would see young people in young people's societies, noble missionary societies, great temperance organizations, civic reform bodies, social settlements, organizations for the relief of child labor and the extinction of the white slave traffic, and the noble work of Christian hospitals. All have been the outgrowth of his noble teachings. These and countless other organizations he would see all at work for the good of mankind. All of them are the offspring of the church and nurtured by it. I cannot believe that under the circumstances Jesus would come into the world and begin to denounce the church-members. He would denounce hypocrites, as he always did, in the church or out of it. But the main body of Christian people in the church are sincere and loyal, and Jesus would encourage them in every way possible. It is easy to imagine him stepping into a church prayer-meeting at his first public appearance and saying beautiful words of encouragement to the pastor and the people, plenty of denunciation and scorn for the everlasting Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites, who have existed in every age of the world, but an overflowing amount of praise and commendation and courage for his disciples in the church. He would glory in what the church has done for centuries. For when we take account of it, it has done vastly more than any other institution for the good of humanity.

This Much We Know

5. If Jesus were on the earth to-day, he would speak for the great causes of humanity. These great causes are as follows:

The federation of denominations. Jesus would plead for the real union of denominations. We can easily imagine him holding conferences on these subjects and telling the churches how to get together.

He would speak and act for the annihilation of the liquor business. It is not possible to imagine Jesus keeping silent on this question. For various reasons he did not say anything about liquor or slavery when he was on the earth, or if he did, we have no record of it. But to-day his voice would be like a flaming sword against liquor and all the fearful harm it has done.

He would speak and act for the brotherhood of mankind. It is impossible to imagine Jesus entertaining anything like race prejudice. It is the easiest thing in the world to imagine him sitting down to a table and eating with negroes, Japanese, Chinamen, Norwegians, Swedes, Germans, Bulgarians, Indians. In fact, it is the easiest thing in the world to imagine Jesus sitting at a table and eating with every race on the face of the earth, and acting like a brother to all of them. Jesus would teach the possibility of race union and would not entertain for a moment the false teaching that the different races cannot understand each other.

In close connection with this we do know that Jesus, if he were here, would preach and teach against war; against its folly and its sin. It is easy to imagine him attending great peace conferences and speaking as never a man spake in behalf of worldwide peace. It is absolutely impossible to imagine him as speaking in Congress or in a newspaper editorial demanding an addition to the navy or an increased army. We know what Jesus would do in this great matter.

We know that Jesus would speak and act with all his enthusiasm in behalf of humanity that is deprived of its proper share of love through the greed of others. He would speak and act for the little children who are obliged to work when they ought to be at play or at school. And we know that he would denounce in the severest terms the selfishness greed of business in any of its forms where men are making vast fortunes at the expense of others.

I do not know that we can say with exact knowledge where Jesus would identify himself politically in order to bring about changes in the social and industrial life of the nation, but we do know that he would throw the entire strength of his divine personality on the side of human justice against all human selfishness.

If Jesus were here to-day, we know he would preach the right of human happiness and teach it every moment in his own conduct. The first word that came from his lips when he began his wonderful Sermon on the Mount was the word "happy" or "blessed." Mankind is entitled to happiness, and Jesus would preach it and teach it in every conceivable way. We cannot imagine him saying anything less than when he was here about the forgiveness of sin. That is an eternal thing and we would simply emphasize it again and again as a great necessity.

The Same Yesterday, To-day and Forever

The doctrine of regeneration or of being born again would be just as necessary for him to preach again as it was when he was here before, and he would preach it as a living necessity to-day. He would also encourage the race and fortify its faith by declaring the fact of immortality, and preach perhaps even more than he did before about the beauties and glories of the future life. I am inclined to think he would tell men of this age more than he did before about heaven, and satisfy the yearning of human hearts for a closer knowledge of another existence. It is not impossible to think of Jesus as giving to the world some wonderfully interesting visions of what heaven is like and assuring humanity of the fact that the dying robber is now one of the most beautiful and splendid beings in the universe, busy and happy in doing God's will somewhere.

Whatever else Jesus would do, if he were on the earth to-day, something aside from the minor details of which we are necessarily ignorant, we know he would go up and down the streets of the cities and wherever men lived, unveiling to them the everlasting fact of God, his compassion for sinful men, his longing to seek and save them, and the eternal hope of complete salvation from all wrong and sins. I do not know whether he would heal a great many people of disease or not. I am inclined to think his acts of healing would not be many, and that he would look with great joy upon the action of men who are finding ways, directed by divine wisdom, to take disease and suffering out of the human body. He would be glad at what the great surgeons of the world are doing, and would rejoice in the fact that medical science and research are gradually rubbing some of the great diseases off the map. But whatever he would do, in the way of physical healing, might be for the restoration of faith in some one who had lost it, or to reveal possibly in some cases his more than human power.

Among other things that Jesus would do would be to leave the impression of something more than merely the man; to define clearly his power. It would be manifest in him in some way so that men would be obliged to fall at his feet and call him Master. He would be the one Person in the world to whom they would instinctively turn and think of as the Redeemer and Saviour of the world. We cannot help wondering what Jesus would do if he were here now. We wish we might see him again in all his wonderful personality, and it is possible he may come and reveal himself even to this age of the world, so that we, as well as those who saw him before, may have the joy of looking into his face. Let us not forget that he is the same yesterday, to-day, yea, and forever. Neither let us forget that he said himself, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."

DAILY MEDITATION

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR

BY REV. J. H. JOWETT, D.D.

SUNDAY, September 21. James 5: 13-20. "The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much." Or, as Weymouth translates it: "The heartfelt supplication of a righteous man exerts a mighty influence." Prayer may be empty words, with no more power than those empty shells which have been foisted upon the Turks in their war with the Balkan States. Firing empty shells! That is what many professed prayers really are; they have nothing in them, and they accomplish nothing. They are just forged upon the lips, and they drop to the earth as soon as they are spoken. Effectual prayers are born in the heart; they are stocked with heart-treasure, with faith, and hope, and desire, and holy urgency, and they go forth with power to shake the world.

What are my prayers like? If I were God, could I listen to them? Are they mere pretenses at prayer, full of nothing but sound? Is there any reasonable ground for assuming that they can accomplish anything? Or are my prayers weighted with sincere desire? Do they comprehend my brother's good as well as my own? Are they spoken in faith? Do they go forth in great expectancy? Then do they surely "exert a mighty influence," and they become fellow laborers with all God's holy ministries of grace. The greatest thing I can do is to greatly pray. My true influence is to be measured by the might of my intercessions.

MONDAY, September 22. Exodus 1: 22—2: 18. Who can determine the doings and the goings of the Lord? Pharaoh gave a decree that every son that was born should be cast into the river; Pharaoh's daughter saved the child who was to break Pharaoh's tyranny! God appointed one of the king's family to destroy the king's plans. And no one knew that God was at work. His footsteps are in the sea, and no one can trace his goings. Pharaoh's daughter goes down to the river, and God goes with her, and she is unconscious of the companionship, and yet that day events take place which change the history of the world. God was in the going, and she knew it not.

So it is in the common daily life of man. It may seem as though only human agents are busy, running hither and thither along many ways. But the invisible God is also busy, crossing and intercrossing their ways. He has his plans, and his decrees, and his ministers, and human tyranny cannot wipe them out. We cannot get away from God. Either we enjoy his companionship as a friend, or we confront him as a foe. The Lord God is in our Egypt with us, and he will be either our sanctuary or a stone of stumbling. If our purpose be holy, he will be unto us as a ripening sun; if they be unholy, he will be unto us as a destructive blast.

TUESDAY, September 23. Exodus 2: 11-25. "Moses stood up and helped them, and watered their flock." What small events lead to great issues! I know two very flat miles which lead to Mont Blanc. A series of commonplaces can be the pioneers of a crisis. The ordinary may be the preparatives of the extraordinary. God often hides his purposes in very gray and uninteresting events. Moses helps a little company to water their flock, and the act is pregnant with destiny.

What, therefore, shall I do with ordinary events? Treat them as though they were extraordinary. I must do the commonest thing as though it were an exploit, and as though I was taking part in the birth of mighty epochs. I must regard the commonplace as though it were the hiding-place of God, and as though conscientious loyalty would bring me face to face with him. That is the secret of true living, as that most certainly uncovers the riches of true life. Moses helped some troubled people with their flock, and in the act the Lord prepared great issues which afterwards led to the emancipation of a nation.

WEDNESDAY, September 24. Exodus 3: 1-14. "God called unto him . . . Moses, Moses. And he said, Here am I." That is the stuff out of which heroes and heroines are made. "Here am I!" That is the ready cry which rings through every great and progressive period in human history. "Here am I!" That is the response which introduces every chivalrous crusade, and every act of social reform. Some soul hears the voice of the Lord sounding through human need and distress, and offers his strength to the sacred mission. That response always means the extension of the kingdom, as apathy always means that the kingdom is hindered and restrained. God is always calling men and women to his holy cause. "The Lord said, Moses, Moses!"

What reply do I give to the call? First of all, do I hear it? When need is unveiled before me, does the Lord God speak to me? Or has sorrow no voice for me? Has the oppressed no cry? "Is it nothing to you, all ye that pass by?" Is this my deadly plight? Or if I hear the call, do I heed it? If I am called to straighten out a bit of crookedness, or to cleanse a marsh of scandal, or to defend some one who is wronged, or to guard little children from the world, the flesh, and the devil, what is my response? Let me seek the answer in my soul.

THURSDAY, September 25. Exodus 12: 21-31. "When he seeth the blood upon the lintel . . . the Lord will pass over." The blood of sacrifice was to be their defense. And so is it all along the way of life, we are defended by another person's blood. Think what shelter we have to-day because of the sacrificial blood of reformers who were "faithful even unto death!" What protection is mine because of the sacrifices of my father and mother! Nay, perhaps even now, when they have gone home, many a destroyer passes over because their blood is seen upon the lintel of my door. There is many a flippant youth who is defended by prayer offered long ago, when his mother "sweat as it were great drops of blood." Yes, vicarious blood is seen upon our lintel!

But all this thought is lifted up in marvelous relations when we think of the blood of Christ. By his death I live. In his darkness my hope is born. In the desolations of the cross my paradise is regained. When the Saviour's blood is on the lintel the destroying angel passes by. In his vicarious life and death, in his love and pity which redeems, I am saved from "the law of sin and death," and there dawns upon me the wonderful hope of one day awaking in his likeness.

FRIDAY, September 26. Exodus 16: 2-15. "Ye shall be filled with bread . . . and ye shall know that I am the Lord." The material gift is purposed to give me spiritual assurance. My daily bread is intended to be the minister of knowledge. I am not to eat as the swine do eat, merely to gratify an appetite; I am so to take my bread as to obtain a better knowledge of the Lord who gave it. That is to say, my bread is always to be a sacrament. It is not to end with itself. It is to be a means of grace. The material is to be a trellis up which I may climb to the spiritual. It is to be as the earth-run from which the aeroplane rises into the freedom of the air. The material is to be my starting-point, and God is to be my home.

And so is it to be not only with bread but with every material thing. It is given us "that ye may know that I am the Lord." The gift has done its appointed work when it brings us nearer to the Giver. It is then more than a means of living, it becomes a minister of life. The body is no longer our master but our servant. And all the things that are about us become the ambassadors of grace, and they introduce us into the royal presence of our God.

SATURDAY, September 27. Exodus 20: 1-17. "I am the Lord thy God, which brought thee out of the land of Egypt." To remember this is a mighty safeguard of moral health; to forget it engenders moral sickness and disease. When I lose the sense of the Lord's benefits my heart is lifted up in perilous pride. When I fail to recall his mercies the song of praise dies out of my soul. Now when praise dies life loses its wings. Life is always earth-tethered when it has no thanksgiving. The really buoyant people are always the grateful people. There is a mood which calls itself buoyancy, but it is only high spirits. But its flights are very fitful, and it flies very near the earth. But praise rises like the lark, and soars into "heavenly places in Christ Jesus." It is praise that gives life strong wings, and praise is born of thoughtful remembrance.

"Which brought thee out of the land of Egypt." We must quietly recall these deliverances. We must review our mercies. We must live yesterday over again, and it will "surprise us what the Lord hath done." And as we visit the old Bethels, and the old Egypts, and the old Babylons, the spirit of praise will be kindled, the soul will begin to sing, and even now we shall "rise with the wise, counted in their number."

THE TWO QUESTS

BY IDA ALLENE ADAMS

"O LITTLE brother, with wondering eyes,
Which is the road to Paradise?
Far I have fared o'er a weary way,
And I seek its peace at the close of day.
Methinks on your face heaven's light still lies.
Can you show me the road to Paradise?"

"'Tis a short time since I wandered among Its trees and flowers. The songs there sung
By the angel host are echoing still
In my heart and soul. But I pray you, will
You show me the way that I now must go,
For I'm seeking the truths that all men know."

"Oh, little brother, 'tis rough and long
For tender feet to travel on;
And the truths men know will not compare
With the secrets you and the angels share.
For his soul must bow, and his heart must break
Who will travel man's road for truth's own sake."

"For the way that's weary I have a song;
I'll soon forget that the road is long.
The angels' secrets will help me know
The truths of men, as I journey. So Come you with me where the sunlight lies.
We will find us the way to Paradise."

A WEEK IN THE WORLD'S NEWS

Lord Haldane Defines National Ethics

IN THE address which he delivered to the American Bar Association in the Princess Theater, Montreal, Lord Haldane, the visiting Lord High Chancellor of England, made statements that have been acclaimed throughout the English-speaking world. In the course of his address, which was entitled "Higher Nationality, a Study in Law and Ethics," the Lord Chancellor said the United States, Canada, and Great Britain together formed a unique group because of the common inheritance of traditions, surroundings, and ideals, and particularly in the region of jurisprudence. He considered that there were relations possible within such a group that were not possible for nations more isolated and lacking identity of history and spirit. Canada, Great Britain, and the United States, with common language, common interests, common ends, he described as resembling a single society, which might develop a foundation for international faith of a kind new in the history of the world.

Lord Haldane dwelt at some length upon the differences between formulated law, whether civil or criminal, and the moral rules enjoined by private conscience and the spirit of the community, for which the English had no name, but which the Germans called Sittlichkeit, and which he defined as the system of habitual or customary conduct, ethical rather than legal, embracing all those obligations of the citizen that it was "bad form" or "not the thing" to disregard, the social penalty for which was being "cut" or looked on askance. He pointed out that without such restraint there could be no tolerable social life, and that it was that instinctive sense of what to do and what not to do in daily life and behavior that was the source of liberty and ease, and that this instinctive sense of obligation was the chief foundation of society. He described Sittlichkeit as "those principles of conduct which regulate people in their relations to each other, and which have become matter of habit and second nature at the stage of culture reached, and of which, therefore, we are not explicitly conscious."

Enlarging on this idea, Lord Haldane advocated the development of a full international Sittlichkeit or ethical habit among nations, as well as within nations. He recognized that its development was more hopeful in the case of nations with some special relation than within a mere aggregate of nations. In this connection he said that recent events in Europe and the way in which the great Powers had worked together to preserve the peace of Europe, as if forming one community, pointed to the ethical possibilities of the group system as deserving of close study by both statesmen and students.

Lord Haldane pointed to the century of peace which had existed between the United States and the people of Canada and Great Britain, during which the peoples of these countries, he said, had come to a greater possession of common ends and ideals natural to the Anglo-Saxon group. The binding quality of this international Sittlichkeit, he declared, resulted in the fact that a vast number of citizens would not to-day count it decent to violate the obligations which that feeling suggested.

Zionists and the Return to Palestine

FROM September 2 to 10, the eleventh Zionist Congress was in session at Vienna, Austria. The delegates, representing Hebrew colonies in almost every part of the world, numbered 550. Nearly ten thousand persons were present at the opening ceremonies. Professor Wartburg of Berlin delivered the inaugural address, in which he paid a tribute to the memory of Dr. Herzl, founder of the Zionist movement, and incidentally remarked that Zionism would contribute considerably toward the development of the Turkish nation. At the session during the following days the progress of the Zionist propaganda, as well as the actual colonization work accomplished since the last Congress, was fully reviewed, and plans were made for a still greater work.

The Russian delegates, who numbered 130, seized the opportunity offered to confer on the Jewish situation in Russia and the progress of Zionism there. Meetings of this kind are prohibited by the Russian Government. More than 3,500 Jews assembled in the National Theater, Second Avenue and Houston Street, in New York City, to celebrate the opening of the congress at Vienna. Every allusion of the speakers to Palestine and the hope for the future there was greeted by cheers and applause.

Judge Jacob S. Strahl in his speech said: "To-day the eleventh International Zionist Congress opens at Vienna; the last congress met at Basle, the previous one at Hamburg, and God alone knows where the next one will meet. We are truly a homeless nation, wandering about, humbly knocking at other nati doors and graciously receiving their valued permission to meet on their When will our congress, like other nations', meet on its own national lan Palestine?"

Another New Haven and Hartford Crash

AT 6.45 on the morning of September 2, the White Mo tain Express, dashing at forty miles an hour thro dense fog, crashed into the rear end of the Bar Harbor Expr on the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad at W ingford, Conn., seven miles from New Haven. Twenty-one persons, eight them women, were killed and upward of fifty-eight were injured, some seriously that there is slight hope of recovery.

The Bar Harbor Express was running almost an hour late because of fog and the unusual rush of vacationists returning to New York. As neared Wallingford the engineer found a block signal set against him to p tect a local train at the station platform ahead. He waited till this sig changed from red to green, then took his train slowly into that block. At end of it he found another signal set against him. Realizing the reason this, he took his train on past that signal about seventy feet. The passing that second signal automatically changed the first one, back about three-qu ters of a mile, from danger to safety. The conductor of the Bar Hart train, realizing danger, sent a trainman back to put torpedoes on the tra and flag the White Mountain train. Instead of going back the prescribed h mile, the trainman went only about 450 yards, when he found the oncomi express too near to be warned. On it plunged into the rear cars of the stall Bar Harbor Express. This train was composed entirely of wooden cars, a the great engine plowed through the last three of them as if they had been paper. The awful impact of the giant engine flung the victims of the disas fifty and sixty feet in the air and spread death and desolation over an area five hundred yards. Bedding from sleeping berths, wearing apparel, a large pieces of splintered woodwork were caught in the wires twenty fe above the roofs of the coaches. Half a dozen persons at least, among t practically uninjured, found themselves forty to sixty feet away from t wreck. They had been literally blasted through the split roofs of t Pullmans.

Most of those buried in the wreck itself were in the third sleeper from t rear of the Bar Harbor train, the Chisholm, which, under the shock of the c lision, had been tossed on its right side, falling, a mass of ruins, at the ed of the road, with its passengers, forty young boys from the Cobbossee Summ Camp at Monmouth, Me., buried in the twisted and splintered wooden a glass wreckage. The engineer of the death-dealing locomotive and his firem stuck to their posts and escaped injury. So did all the passengers in t White Mountain Express, all of whom, however, were thrown from their sle by the collision, and found a shower of glass raining from every windo beside them. Passengers from the day coach and five sleepers—all wooden of the White Mountain train, as well as those in the forward cars of the stall Bar Harbor Express, rushed, scantily clad, into the wakening day, to find scene of strangely silent desolation.

The work of rescuing the injured and removing the dead was begun imm diately. Trainmen were rushed to the nearest stations to summon help fro New Haven and from Meriden. From both of these cities special trains an automobiles, loaded with doctors and nurses, were hurried to the scene of t wreck. A trolley car of the Suburban Connecticut Railway was stopped on its regular run from New Haven and turned into an ambulance car to take the injured to the New Haven hospitals. Among the dead there were two of the boys who were returning from the summer camp in Maine. Several members of prominent families in the large Eastern cities were among the dead and injured.

An inquiry into the cause and circumstances of the wreck was immediately started by the coroner of the county in which it occurred. This inquiry was held behind closed doors and in conjunction with the official investigation of the railway officials. Up to the time of the preparation of this issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for printing, no newspaper representatives had been allowed to hear any of the testimony given, or to talk with any of the officials of the road or the employees who were on either of the wrecked trains.

FOR NATIONAL CONSERVATION

KNOXVILLE, TENN., and all the surrounding country turned out 33,000 strong on Labor Day for the opening of America's first National Conservation Exposition. ter months of planning and hard work, the gates Chilhowee Park were thrown open on a splendid ıibition, a display of which all the South and all : nation may well be proud, and, best of all, a r with a real purpose.

n the brilliant address which he delivered at the ening ceremony, Governor Ben W. Hooper of nnessee sounded the keynote the exposition. "Sometimes wonder if it is possible that e decadence of those great ıntries where the human mily was cradled shall be reated here in this favored ıd.

"Will the time ever come ıen our mountains shall ınd bleak and bare, denuded forests and robbed of soil?

"Can it be that a thousand ars from now the stranger om a far-off land will visit ese scenes in order that the raggling inhabitants may ınt out to him the desolate aces of historic interest here once did dwell a strong, ave and patriotic people?

"This great exposition, the auguration of which we wit-ss to-day, affords most strik-g evidence that our people ıve profited by the accumuted experience of mankind. or thousands of years the story of the human family has been a record of aste. Because all the sources of food, fuel, cloth-g and other forms of comfort, luxury and wealth ıve appeared to be inexhaustible, men have sinned gainst God and the race by the wanton destruction the world's resources. It is only within the pres-ıt generation that men have shown any serious clination to look down the vista of time and take ıought of the happiness and welfare of the billions et unborn. This new idea springs from the wisdom of statesmanship and the spirit of Christianity. The crude conception of the untutored savage, that man lives for himself alone, has broadened into the splendid conviction that man lives for all contemporary mortals, and for all who may hereafter tread this terrestrial ball. This is the keynote to conservation."

The main building of the exposition contains many commercial exhibits, but also many which are purely educational. Among these latter are health exhibits made by the Educational Exhibit Company of Providence, R. I., by the Rockefeller Hookworm Institute, by the State of Tennessee Pure Food and Drug Department, and the American Red Cross Society. One of the great Middle Western manufacturing concerns has placed an industrial hygiene exhibit, and in connection with this lectures on the subject are given each day. It is in the Land Building that the main point of interest of the exhibition centers. Here thousands of dollars have been lavished in the preparation of exhibits teaching the lesson of conservation of forests, soil, and water power. The educational department occupies large space in this building, showing everything from exhibits of natural resources to models and working diagrams of good roads.

The Southern States building is one of the largest of the new exposition structures. Here the sixteen Southern States have placed exhibits showing the progress of the New South. In the special structure devoted to minerals a model mine has been arranged, and this, together with a wonderful display of mineral ores and of the famous Tennessee marble, attracts continuous attention.

The colored visitors find that they have an integral part in the exposition when they reach the building which is devoted entirely to their interests. This building may well be called a triumph for the negro race in the Southern Appalachian region. It very truly represents the progress, commercial, industrial, professional and domestic, of the negro people. The negro educational institutions are particularly well represented, and the work of their students along industrial and artistic lines is astounding to many of the visitors.

The human side of the conservation problem is not represented entirely by those exhibits connected with the prevention of disease and the teaching of hygiene. One building making less pretension than some of the others is, nevertheless, unrivaled in popularity, for it is the Child Welfare Building. Here, three floors were filled with exhibits designed to teach the conservation of the life and health of children. Almost every display was prepared by experts, and the whole building is under the direction of a committee of which Miss Julia C. Lathrop, chief of the Federal Children's Bureau, is chairman.

The exposition will continue throughout the entire month of September.

THE HEART OF A BOY

BY L. F. TEMPLETON

A Story Complete in This Issue

JERRY THOMSON, one beautiful morning in early spring, sat in the schoolroom with his ragged geography lying open on the desk before him. The schoolhouse stood on the summit of a hill, and there were no buildings on he opposite side of the street to obstruct the view f a wide, rolling stretch of country that lay to the outh. Through an open window Jerry could see reat splashes of various shades of green that narked fields of sprouting grain; cattle and horses vere grazing on the young, tender grass in the pasures; big red barns added dull spots of color, and ear them were small groves of shade trees and ragrant orchards, in which white farmhouses were heltered. It was such a clear day he could count en windmills and look off for miles to the fringe of voods that bordered the river.

The lesson was about the very section of the Jnited States in which he lived; but the idea of ssociating this valley of delight, filled with "the ichness of the earth and the fulness thereof," with nything so prosaic as "jography" had never occurred to Jerry. His teacher, a young girl just ut of high school, had but little clearer concepion of the subject; she could not have named corectly many of the grains growing in the fields or the common trees and flowers to be found by the wayside. Modern ideas of practical teaching and training were at this time being successfully tried in city schools, but had not yet found favor in small towns. The young teacher, according to her lights, conscientiously taught the literal text of the elementary schoolbooks of her grade, and the children with the best memories for words received the highest marks in the little booklets they bore home in triumph each month to their parents.

So it was that Jerry, a striking example of the psychologist's essay on "A Certain Blindness in Human Beings," his mind in a state of coma, his eyes turned longingly to the fields, droned listlessly to himself, over and over, the first sentence of the day's lesson:

"Hay, barley, wheat, oats, potatoes and apples are the chief products of these Eastern valleys."

The word apples aroused a little mental activity. He suddenly remembered that he had one in his desk barricaded behind his pencil-case. It was spoil he had taken that morning from his mortal enemy, Dewey Snyder, and was a treasure. It was out of season for apples, but Dewey's thrifty mother had a way of keeping them by putting them down in sawdust in a cool, dark cellar, and now that there was a veritable apple famine, Dewey aggravated his fellows, and especially Jerry, by bringing one to school every day. Jerry had succeeded in taking it from him this morning, but knew from various signs and signals he took great pains to ignore, that hostilities were only temporarily suspended, and he resolved, like the thrifty little New Englander that he was, to take advantage of the enforced peace by putting the apple where its possession could no longer be a matter of controversy.

He propped his geography upright on the desk in front of him and drew the apple cautiously from the desk, bending down and nosing it affectionately. His teacher was hearing the B class in spelling. With one swift glance to assure himself that she was giving the textbook in her hand her undivided attention, his teeth met in a big, juicy bite.

Squabbling wildcats! What a noise he made!

Frightened, he thrust the apple back into its hiding-place; in his haste he hit his elbow sharply against the desk, sending the carefully balanced geography to the floor with a resounding bang. The nervous shock sent the bite of apple into his throat, and for one awful moment he sat facing his teacher, choking desperately, his face purple and his eyes starting from his head. Mary Coole dropped her spelling-book and hurried to him; she was dreadfully frightened, for she thought, from the looks of the boy, that he was going into convulsions.

"He'th just swallowed a apple," lisped little Hazel Green, who, unknown to Jerry, had been watching him enviously from her seat across the aisle.

Mary grasped the situation, and as quickly grasped the boy. She was an athletic young woman, and she turned him over the desk and pounded him so vigorously on the back that he broke into gurgling, gasping coughs, and the offending piece of apple was quickly dislodged and flew out on the floor.

"Now," she said, as she straightened him up with a jerk, "you can take what is left of the apple to my desk and show the children just how big a bite you are capable of taking."

For five interminable minutes poor Jerry, red and perspiring, stood on the platform grinning sheepishly at his laughing, jeering schoolmates, while all work was suspended, holding up the fraction of an apple. When at last he was allowed to go to his seat and hide again behind his sheltering geography, he found partial relief for his outraged feelings in writing a fiery challenge to mortal combat to the intolerable Dewey, whose insulting giggle he had heard above all the others. When written, he folded it small and dropped it carelessly on the floor, covered it with his foot, and pushed it back to the boy behind him, who, in like manner, sent it on its way. This done, he composed himself again to the monotony of

"Hay, barley, wheat, oats, potatoes and apples are the chief products of these—"

Whiz! A paper-ball struck him behind the ear. It was Dewey's contemptuous answer to his challenge. Another struck home. He turned wrathfully about in his seat just in time to catch the third directly between the eyes. Infuriated to the point of blindness to exposure, he picked up the three dirty wads from the floor, rose to his feet, and pelted his tormentor.

"Jerry Thomson!"

The teacher's face was white. She stood still, gazing at him in indignant amazement for a moment; then she said:

"Jerry, you are simply incorrigible! Stay after school to-night; I certainly must punish you!"

At noon Jerry lingered behind the crowd of hurrying, noisy children and made his way through the side lanes toward home. The sun was hot and beat upon him, and the cinders hurt his feet; he

The World Upside Down

THE questions of rightside up and upside down are always relative. One of the amusing attractions at a seaside resort, some years ago, was a boat swing, which seemed to turn its occupants completely upside down, and bring them around again rightside up, safe and sound. As a matter of fact it was the room in which the swing hung that turned about. Although it seemed to be furnished in the ordinary way, everything in the room was screwed fast, so that when it was upside down, piano, table, books, chairs and everything behaved decorously. It was a most singular sensation to be apparently sitting on the ceiling, like a fly, beholding these commonplace household matters from such a unique point of view.

The other day M. Pegoud, the French aviator, flew upside down for a considerable distance, and repeated his performance the day following. His feat is hailed as marking a new epoch in aviation, having demonstrated that capsizing, which is the worst the wind can do to an aeroplane, is not necessarily a serious accident. But one is weirdly fascinated at the thought of riding along head downward far above the earth's surface. If we can imagine the aviator to have thus altered his position without being conscious of it we know that the world would appear to have suddenly found a new place. A moment ago it was under his feet; now it is far above his head. The sun is beneath him. All the laws of gravity have become changed. Some giant has turned the universe upside down.

There were a few men some centuries ago who were accused of doing this very thing. Two travelers entered Thessalonica and were soon greeted with the hostile cry: "These that have turned the world upside down are come hither also." This sounded like most extravagant language, but it was nearly true. At least these men were helping to start a movement which is turning the world upside down. New visions, new values, new attractions, new motives, come into life when one has found the Saviour whom Paul and Silas announced.

When one has seen him another law of gravitation comes into play, drawing the soul toward the skies. The blue of heaven seems of greater worth than the gold of earth's mines; the stars become the flowers in the fields where lie the pathways of his thought. He is interested in the world, but it is only one item of his interest. His native land, to which he will return, in which his abiding house is being built, and where his citizenship still holds, is heaven. His interest in the people of earth is to get them to go with him on his journey back to the Homeland, to urge them to win the gold of that land and to set up habitations there that can never perish.

Spiritual Lethargy

MULTITUDES there are who have become so accustomed to resisting all the ordinary influences of the Gospel that the calls to repentance come to them now like familiar sounds that reach us in our sleep, without breaking our slumbers. On a quiet country road there was an old turnpikeman, whose habit was to shut his gate at night and take his nap. One dark, wet midnight a traveler knocked at his door, calling, "Gate! Gate!" "Coming!" replied the voice of the old man; but there was no movement within. The knock was repeated, and once more the voice answered, "Coming!" This went on for some time, till at length the traveler grew angry, and jumping off his horse, flung open the door and demanded of the old gatekeeper why he cried "Coming" for twenty minutes and never came. "Why," said the old man, in a drowsy tone, rubbing his eyes, "I ask your pardon. I was asleep. I get so used to having them knock that I answer 'Coming' in my sleep, and take no more notice about it."

So the habitual hearer of the Gospel sinks into a lethargy of soul which, it seems, can only be broken if it please God to bring to bear upon it some unusual and mighty moral power. There are thousands in our churches who sit under Gospel teaching year in and year out, and yet keep their hearts sealed against the message of love and forgiveness; their ears are closed to all warnings; their eyes shut, preferring darkness to the light of truth. So their lives glide on in unruffled indifference until by some sudden visitation of sorrow or misfortune or suffering they are rudely awakened and realize their need of help. It was said once by a famous master of a talented artist that the latter could not become truly great "until his heart had been broken" —he could not portray that which he had never felt. So with the placid and indifferent who are never aroused to their real need of God's forgiveness and solace and comfort until they are overtaken by suffering. Passing through the fire is to them the trial that opens up the way to the Christian life.

Palestine and the Jews

ONE cannot read even the meager cabled outlines of the proceedings of the Zionist Congress at Vienna without being impressed with the conviction that we are living in history-making times. Seven thousand delegates from almost every country, including America, and representing 120,000 members of the widespread Zionist organization, give a measurable idea of the growth of a movement which, a few years ago, was derided even by the Jews themselves. Although the Zionists have a full treasury, they are willing to make progress slowly along conservative lines, trusting to future developments to open the way to more ambitious projects. Indeed, Max Nordau, who has been regarded as one of the leaders of Zionism, has accused the present chiefs of the movement of abandoning the policy of Dr. Herzl, the founder, who proclaimed the one great aim and object to be the re-establishment of the Jews in their ancient homeland. That this is the hope and prayer of every true member of the race we can readily believe, but it may still be far from realization. Meanwhile, such projects as the establishment of a Jewish university in Palestine and the promotion of colonization there on a large scale are to be pushed vigorously.

Our Task in the Philippines

THERE is an impression abroad that the administration, by its change of governor-generals in the Philippines, contemplates a new policy in these islands. When we took them over as one of the results of our war with Spain, we found the seven millions of natives, with comparatively few exceptions, illiterate and semi-civilized. This was during President McKinley's administration, and it was decided by this government that an experiment at educating, training and civilizing the Filipinos should be undertaken, with the purpose of making them capable of self-government and ultimately worthy of independence. That splendid work has been done in this line we are assured from many reliable sources. They have proved apt pupils in the schools, in industrial training, and in agricultural work, and a very considerable proportion of the natives have risen to an intelligent appreciat of the problems of local government in which t are privileged to share. All this and more been accomplished under American tutelage, the results are excellent. Our pledge of honor uplift the Filipinos and equip them for indep dence, while faithfully kept thus far, is yet a l way from being redeemed. To give them any ferent impression now, or to lead them to concl that a shorter cut could be found to independer would be one of the worst misfortunes that could fall them. It would afford unwise encouragem to an element whose activities in behalf of pren ture independence would be distinctly antagonis to the purpose of this nation, and would result embarrassments not easily overcome. Further, would be an injustice to the Filipinos themselv Having set our hands to the plow, let us go on the end of the furrow. We are under a solemn ol gation to do this, and there is no honorable way of it.

The Dance of Death

OUT of the tangle of horror, grief and rage the last New Haven Railroad wreck there com one definite constructive idea which the public mu hold fast and turn into permanent results. This that the day of wooden passenger coaches h passed and that hereafter it shall be a crime employ them. Immediately after the wreck t agitation was begun to draft and pass such a bi and many members of Congress express themselv as favoring it.

While this single reform will probably be co summated as the practical result of this last s accident, it by no means covers the entire groun There has been grievous fault somewhere and t Federal Commission now conducting the investig tion should be thorough and altogether unsparin in its investigations and reports. One radic reader of the New York Tribune sends a commun cation to that paper in which the suggestion made: "Is it not about time that the Interstate Com merce Commission took over the operations of th railroad to save the lives of the people?" Such radical suggestion as this will, of course, not b seriously considered during the present agitation but the time has certainly come when the publi must and will demand from transportation corpora tions more adequate protection for those who trave Not only the traveling public on the railways then selves, but those traveling along the highways mus be protected from slaughter. The toll of lives take by death at the grade crossings throughout th country is appalling. The total abolition of grad crossings must soon follow the abolition of th wooden cars. People are infuriated beyond restrain at the reckless sacrifice of human life in the effort of the transportation corporations to grow rich.

General Notes

—HEAVY LOSS OF property, crops and cattle was reported as the result of a furious storm which swept the coast of North Carolina on September 3 and 4. Reports which were not yet verified when this issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD went to press stated that five hundred persons had been swept to death on Ocracoke Island, in Pamlico Sound.

—THE SITUATION in Mexico brightens. Washington hears that General Huerta has announced that he will not be a candidate for the presidency. Although the news is not official, it is believed that it will lead to a definite understanding. Meanwhile, the peace parleys between ex-Governor Lind and Chargé d'Affaires O'Shaughnessy on the one side and the Mexican officials on the other have been renewed. There are hopes looking to an armistice as a possibility in the near future.

—A NOVEL SUFFRAGE strike is reported from Wisconsin, the cause of which seems to be the refusal of the State Board of Arbitration to allow the woman suffrage officials the privilege of a booth at the State Fair. Now the ladies, in retaliation, have not only proclaimed their purpose not to attend the fair, but have resolved to signalize the occasion by striking against the performance of a number of household duties involving the laundry, the kitchen, the family darning and the general care of things. Only by prompt and conciliatory activity can the State Board avert the threatened disaster.

—READING THE announcement, made by the Theosophists at a recent gathering in Chicago, of their expectation of "a new Messiah," who is to appear "at the proper time and direct the destinies of the race, as Christ did centuries ago," we are reminded of the warning which Jesus gave to his followers that there would come a time when "false Christs and false prophets" should arise, with power to do such signs and wonders as to deceive if possible even the elect. The Theosophists, however, are so much in earnest over their discovery of a new race or type of Aryan stock—the product, as they claim, of reincarnation—that they have three young men in training as candidates for human representatives of the Messiah, no claim being made of divinity.

Tubes Under Harlem River

.OUR steel tubes each 220 feet long and 19 feet in diameter, all riveted side by side and weighing 725 tons, were sunk to the bottom of the Harlem River the other day to form of the new Lexington Avenue subway in New City. The bed of the Harlem at that point is nud, which would have made tunneling by the boring process difficult. Therefore the engi- determined to build the tunnels on the sur- nd sink them into place. The section lowered he first of five which are to form four tubes, 1,080 feet in length, and through them will ocal and express trains of the new subway. t the tubes was built a huge wooden case, was to serve as the vessel to float them to destination. This box containing the tubes aunched into the river and was towed by a tugs for two hours down the stream to its r place. Four masts or staffs were built on asing, and by these the engineers were able to n the casing and tubes immediately over the trench that had been dredged in the bottom of iver. When all was ready water was let into asing or vessel, and from that into each of the tubes, the ends of which een stopped with bulkheads removed later. On top of ubes had been built tempo- air tanks connecting with ubes to maintain and regu- their bouyancy. The great sank slowly and evenly, process requiring three s. When the tubes were to the trench, fifty-five below low tide, the engi- s announced that they were heir proper position. The section will be lowered and ected with this section, and n the four tubes are com- ed, the wooden casing about n will be filled with cement ake their position firm, the er will be pumped out, and tubes will be ready for lay- of tracks. Infected Dogs Spread Tuberculosis

HE cat has been severely blamed for carrying diseases, especially tuberculosis, and now the is being condemned for carrying the great ite plague. Professor Cadiot, of the veterinary ool of Alfort, has just made to the National ademy of Medicine the alarming report that ere are at least twelve thousand dogs in Paris ne which are affected with tuberculosis, and are reading the infection to the people. The peril to children is especially great because of their habit petting the infected animals, taking them in eir arms, and even allowing them to lick their ces. That dogs are especially subject to infec- n is shown by the fact noted by Professor Cadiot at tuberculosis is five hundred times more fre- ent among dogs than among horses, and cats are parently not far behind dogs in their liability to is disease. These animals contract the disease om human sources, usually through the digestive act. Dogs and cats devour all sorts of sub- ances, and it has been observed that the pets of nsumptives almost invariably are affected by tuberculosis. If Professor Cadiot's contention be true, there is danger from the dogs in all cities in this country as well as in Paris, and there should be immediate legal protection against such perils from dogs and cats. The Jews were hard on the dogs, and counted them a type of the worst people.

Beware of dogs, beware of evil workers. (Phil. 3: 2.)

Popular Composer Dead

MICHAEL MAYBRICK, one of Great Britain's popular musical composers, died in Buxton recently. Under the name of "Stephen Adams" he wrote some of the most popular songs of twenty years or so ago. He was a native of Liverpool, but had lived many years of late in the Isle of Wight, where he devoted himself to municipal politics, serving five terms as mayor of Pyde. Some of his best known songs were "The Holy City," "The Star of Bethlehem," "Nancy Lee," "A Warrior Bold," "The Blue Alsatian Mountains," and "The Midshipmite." Mr. Maybrick was the younger brother of James Maybrick, whose wife was sentenced to death at the Liverpool Assizes in 1889 on a charge of poisoning him with arsenic, which sentence was commuted to imprisonment for life, but who, after sixteen years of imprisonment, was released. At the time of the conviction, Michael took the two children of his brother, and their mother never saw them afterward. No one who has ever heard or taken part in the singing of "The Holy City" can fail to be grateful for the genius and consecrated service of its author, nor to feel that a personal friend has gone in his death. From the very beginning songs have formed a very important part in the services of the Lord's house. Nehemiah thus refers to the temple choir which he organized for the restored service:

And the singers sang loud, with Jezrahiah their overseer. (Neh. 12: 42.)

SINKING THE SUBWAY TUBES IN THE HARLEM RIVER

Large Eggs in China

A MOVEMENT to improve the size of hens' eggs in America has been initiated by Consul A. A. Williamson of Antung, China. In his report to the Department of Commerce, he says the Chinese eggs are much larger than ours, and urges the introduction of special breeds of good layers into this country. Seven eggs to the pound is the highest American average. Mr. Williamson avers that he knows of a hen in South Manchuria that lays eggs that weigh four ounces, so that only four of them would be necessary to the pound. Two persons would get a fairly good breakfast out of a single egg. These large eggs are laid by hens whose owners do not claim that they are high bred. They are fed on corn and kept in an ordinary enclosure. They do not lay a four-ounce egg every day, but the one mentioned especially lays the large egg every third day. Many ordinary hens that find their own food lay eggs that average six to the pound. Mr. Williamson tells the department that with importation and special breeding the American hen can greatly improve her product and rival the world. The hen has a long history of benevolent service in producing eggs as an article of food. Christ thus refers to them:

Or if he shall ask an egg, will he offer him a scorpion? (Luke 11: 12.)

Finds Child Supposed Buried

ONE of the most cruel pieces of deception ever practiced upon a mother was that just revealed in the deathbed confession of a nurse in a hospital at Mauch Chunk, Pa. Mrs. Beatrice Gaddis, of Bridgeton, N. J., lost her husband by an explosion. Soon after she was taken to the hospital, where a babe was born. About the same time a wealthy woman from Philadelphia also gave birth to a babe which died in the same hospital. The nurse for both women told Mrs. Gaddis the fearful falsehood that it was her baby who had died, and then took her live child and gave it to the woman whose child had died. So in addition to the awful sorrow at the death of her husband, she had that of the death of her baby. She was allowed in the diabolical deceit to bury the other woman's baby as her own. That was four years ago, and Mrs. Gaddis did not know of the fraud till the other day when the fact was confessed on the deathbed. The excuse given by the nurse was that Mrs. Gaddis had four other children, and the Philadelphia woman had none. But she did well to confess and ask for forgiveness before going out into eternity with such a cruel sin upon her soul. The Philadelphia woman pleaded so hard with Mrs. Gaddis that she was permitted to keep the child. The feelings of the mother were similar to those in the parable:

For this my son was dead, and is alive again; he was lost, and is found. (Luke 15: 24.)

A Swimming Champion

ALFRED BROWN, commodore of the Flushing Bay Division of the American Life-saving Society, and America's champion long-distance swimmer, succeeded in reaching Sandy Hook the other day after a thirteen-hour swim from the Battery in New York City, covering a distance of twenty-five miles. He had undertaken the task three times before and had failed. He is the only person who ever accomplished the feat, although it has been tried many times in past years. The one coming nearest to it was Harry Elionsky, who recently came within a half mile of the goal. Having passed Romer Shoals, Brown had everything against him, having to swim across the tide toward the Hook. In the last two hours he struck the tide ebbing from the Shrewsbury River, and it looked as though he would be swept out of his course. It took him two hours to make the last two miles. He landed at Battery Gunnison, about three-quarters of a mile from the point of the Hook. Every long-distance swimmer who has attempted the swim—Durburrow, Elionsky, Captain Webb and Rademacker—has quit when the tide turned. Not so Brown. He held out until the tide turned his way again, and then won. He was exceedingly fortunate in escaping the sharks that were seen in his path that day. One of these, twelve feet long, was hooked by a crew of the yacht Ventura, fishing for bluefish, on the same day in the very vicinity through which Brown passed in his swim. Brown's dogged persistence in his feat is that which Christ said was necessary to salvation:

He that endureth to the end shall be saved. (Matt. 10: 22.)

MISSIONARY TRAGEDIES AND TRIUMPHS*

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

IT WOULD be very appropriate for Sunday schools all over the world to devote this quarterly review to a study of missions, for during this quarter the World's Sunday School Convention at Zürich has for eight wonderful days reviewed Sunday school missionary work in all missionary lands, under the inspiring banner, "The Sunday School and the Great Commission." The reports published in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and in other papers will furnish rich material for such a missionary review. The investigation of missionary fields had been entrusted three years in advance to five great "Commissions," which were also to plan how Sunday schools could reinforce missions all over the world, and report at the Zürich convention. One of these commissions, as THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S staff correspondence from the convention has told, investigated South Africa; another Latin America, from Mexico to Cape Horn; another Europe, especially the Roman Catholic countries; another India; another Eastern Asia, including China, Japan, Korea and the Philippines; another Mohammedanism wherever found. As it will be impossible in the half hour of lesson study to consider effectively more than one of these reports, we will take the one to which recent wars in Tripoli and the Balkans have given the freshest and most dramatic interest, missionary work for Mohammedans, which we heard presented both at Zürich and Aberdeen by Dr. Zwemer. Some of the facts we have already reported will have to be stated again to make the picture complete, but they are well worth repeating, and repetition is one of the most important principles of teaching. Mohammedanism was founded centuries after Christ by Mohammed, who put his teachings in a bible he called the Koran, and after converting Arabia to his views, organized his most zealous followers into an army that went out to compel other peoples to accept his beliefs. Thus Mohammedanism was extended into large sections of North Africa and into the Balkans at one end of Europe and Spain at the other. The Turks, a small tribe, were so warlike that they became masters of all Mohammedans, including the Arabians, and Constantinople came to be their capital. The Christian church of Saint Sophia was taken as their chief mosque. They name as great prophets, Abraham, Moses, Christ and Mohammed. In seeking to win Christians, they say complimentary things of Christ. As Dr. Zwemer says: "They betray the Son of man with a kiss." The two best things in their religion are: The doctrine of one God, which was proclaimed at a time when not only the heathen but Oriental Christians also were worshiping many images; and the total abstinence commandment, which is not always fully obeyed, but has done great good, and has made the Mohammedan worshipers more generally sober than the communicants of the so-called Christian churches of what were once Bible lands. These virtues, however, are more than offset by Mohammedanism's base permission of polygamy and its intolerant, persecuting spirit, so that Mohammedans need the missionary Gospel in India no less than Buddhists and Hindus, and in Africa no less than worshipers of hideous idols of wood and stone. There are two hundred millions of Mohammedans in the world scattered from the Philippines to Gibraltar—a great harvest field reaching through many lands. And it is spreading. This is the one religion that is itself an aggressive missionary force. Unless we more than match its earnest efforts it will win India and Africa in place of Christianity. Its zeal is seen in the annual pilgrimage of three hundred thousand devotees to Mecca, its birthplace.

But it is not only a great and spreading harvest, it is "white" for ingathering by Christian reapers if only they will "seize the hour." Only a few years ago most of the Moslem people were behind barred doors. In Turkey, in North Africa, in Persia and other lands under Mohammedan governments, missionaries were allowed to win to the Protestant faith Greeks, Nestorians and the like, but the Mohammedan who changed his faith must expect deadly persecution except in lands under Christian governments. But, behold! suddenly wars in Tripoli and in European Turkey not only break down the barred doors in those lands, but almost end Islam's political power in the world. Nine-tenths of the Mohammedans are now under Christian governments. In 1912, six thousand Bibles were purchased in Arabia. Almost everywhere Mohammedans are free to buy and read Christian books and to hear Christian speakers. But they are mistaken who say that because the sword of political power has been stricken from the Moslem's hand, Mohammedanism is conquered. It may become even stronger in aggressive missionary work when it no longer dangles a sword running as a herald. In Cairo, it has a great publishing house, one of the greatest in the world. Every injustice of a so-called "Christian nation"—and there are many—helps the Mohammedan advocate to discredit Christianity with those who have never seen it enthroned in justice and altruism.

Henry Martyn said: "Let me burn out for God." Dr. Zwemer, quoting that, gives a unique exposition of Christ's warning that we put not our candle under a "bushel" or a "bed." The bushel, he says, from Shanghai to Chicago is the symbol of business, and the bed the sympol of ease. We must not allow our life force to be burned out by idleness or by selfish activities, but lift it up to light the world. It is not alone individuals but whole churches that need to lift their light from under the bed of ease or the bushel of business. In Boston, England, we saw an old church of the thirteenth century, that is one of the sort that no doubt suggested the writing of the hymn, "Lead, kindly light, amid the encircling gloom," for in its steeple, three hundred feet high, in what is called "the lantern," they used to light a fire at night to make the church serve as a lighthouse for ships at sea and for travelers overtaken by darkness on the far-stretching, lonely moor. Every church is bound to "lead" to God by its "kindly light." Not only those near at hand in its own parish, its own city, its own country, but also lost ones at the ends of the earth and in the islands of the sea. It has been suggested that each church or Sunday school raising money for foreign missions, or for all mission work as much as for parish expenses, shall be put on a "missionary honor roll." No other church or Sunday school can fairly be considered to have lifted its God-given light above the "bushel" or the "bed." Here it is appropriate to quote Dr. W. R. Richards on the unselfishness of missionary work. He said: "I think that never are the tones of the Master himself heard in a Christian congregation more clearly than in the missionary appeal." The strength of it to him lay in the fact that it was an appeal to pure unselfishness in that it looked to work for men and women whom we had never seen, and who could do nothing to recompense us. To plead this cause was, accordingly, to open to the Christian mind in its fullest and most unclouded glory the divine unselfishness of the Incarnation itself.

As a good recent example of the spirit of missions, let me record how Miss Annie Montgomery, who became greatly interested in Korea, but was sent as a missionary to Persia, enlisted the sympathies of Christian Persian women for Korea and secured contributions from them sufficient to pay the American Bible Society for the first edition of the Gospels in Korean.

Rev. George Schwab, writing from Metet, West Africa, says that on a recent itinerating trip he found twenty-two boys of the mission school who had volunteered to do evangelistic work during the vacation, going from place to place, taking neither money nor price, but trusting in God to provide for their needs. They had been sent out two and two, after the fashion of the seventy, to eleven districts. But Mr. Schwab adds that he almost regretted their having gone, for their return has brought more prayers that must be unheeded: "When are you going to send some one to take away our shame?" "Father, when are you going to tell us the things of God?" "Where is the man of God you must send us?" "We must have some one for us to show us the way!" "Just two words, and then go on!" And always the answer has to go back, "None to send! None to send!"

The help afforded by these schoolboys is a factor in the work. Another missionary who has recently returned from Africa says that it is surprising and pathetic to see the respect and attention the older and influential men pay to these boys who are able to read the Word to them and explain the Gospel.

A young Russian landing at Ellis Island was handed a Testament in his own language; he became converted through reading it and entered a school in Pennsylvania to prepare for the ministry. Very recently news has come from a young Russian who landed here just three years ago and received a New Testament at Ellis Island. While talking with the missionary, his mind was directed to heavenly things. Not long after he was converted and is now studying for the ministry in an Iowa college.

* THE INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON for Sunday, September 28, 1913. The Quarterly Review. GOLDEN TEXT: "Thou art a God ready to pardon, gracious and merciful, slow to anger, and of great kindness." Neh. 9: 17.

OUR SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS' ROUND TABLE

—THE SUPREME QUESTION at the World's Sunday School Convention at Zürich was, How can the Sunday schools help the foreign missionaries, not alone with money but also with the best methods, to be communicated to their workers by traveling secretaries who are supported by Sunday schools in home churches of all denominations to help all missionaries who desire their expert aid? Such traveling teachers of teachers are eagerly welcomed, especially for the instruction of native workers in "child study" and the best methods of the home churches, so far as they are applicable. The World's Sunday School Association also sends to the missionary Sunday schools, whose funds are meager, Bible pictures, which are eagerly received everywhere. Any one may help in this by mailing such "waste material" to Rev. S. D. Price, Mallers' Building, Chicago, Ill. Miss Emily Huntley, of England, said at Zürich that the unity of missions of all denominations is in the little child. The things that divide men are not fundamental or primitive, but acquired customs and prejudices. Children are everywhere substantially alike and respond in missionary lands as at home to the appeal of the Sunday school. It is "the line of least resistance" everywhere for winning a people to Christ. Sunday schools in mission fields are of the following kinds: 1. Those connected with educational institutions, whose classes meet on Sunday, sometimes in new groups but usually with the same teachers for more spiritual work than is usual on week-days. 2. Those connected with churches, usually taught by missionaries and employed helpers. 3. Those in villages connected with small congregations, usually with only two or three teachers. 4. Disconnected Sunday schools, usually taught by theological students. 5. Sunday schools for Europeans.

WHAT SHALL I DO?

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER, JR.

I RECEIVED a letter from an unknown the other day—a student who has finished two years of college—and the question asked, in a handwriting that showed considerable character, was this: "How is a person to know just what he is going to do in this world—what profession he will excel in? How shall I know, when I choose my life-work, whether it is the right work for me to take up?"

Margaret E. Sangster, Jr.

This is a rather hard question to answer under the circumstances. You see, this mysterious writer is an absolute stranger to me, and so how can I say:

"You should be a doctor. I am sure that profession is the one you are seeking." Or, "I think that you have a talent for singing; have your voice cultivated." The only thing I know is that the person writes a very good letter.

It is a hard thing to decide what one will do with the future, particularly when there are so many discontented people. Who has never heard the tired business man sigh and say: "I have wasted my life. I should have been a doctor—or a minister—or a lawyer." And oh, friends of mine, the poet spoke truly when he said:

> Of all sad words of tongue or pen,
> The saddest are these—it might have been.

Some people have their life-work all planned out for them by the Destiny that shapes our lives, and some people—

I was talking to a girl the other day—a tired little clerk in a dry-goods store. I don't know how we happened to get talking, but—quite a great deal can be said while one is waiting for a parcel. The girl (she was not very old) said in perfect English without the tone that some of the girls acquire:

"I get so tired of this store sometimes."

"I don't doubt it," I answered; "I should hate it myself."

"I always wanted to be a teacher," went on the girl. "Even when I was a tiny child I used to put my dolls in a row and spell words at them. And then, just as I was going to enter normal school, father died and I came here. I've been as fortunate as I could be in a store. Some day I hope to have a good position—a buyer or something like that. I won't give up! And yet—"

My parcel came up and I went away. She stood there watching me dreamily behind the counter—the counter that was the tombstone which marked the grave of her dead dreams.

Another girl corresponds with me. She is a district school teacher. She wanted to write—stories and articles—but her work was never accepted. So she has laid away her ambitions and spends her time putting a little sunshine into the dreary lives of some very commonplace kiddies.

Then there are the other people—the ones who do exactly the thing that has always been expected of them. The girl whose mother boasts that at the age of six she wrote a poem about her kitten, and who keeps right on writing poems, nice quiet little things that give the author and a few of her friends great satisfaction. There is the girl who is an artist, who began by making mud pies, and later carves her initials in the hall of fame. And there are so many other cases on the same order.

Do you notice, mysterious friend, that I have not answered your question? I could help you, perhaps, if I knew more about you, but at best my help would be very slight. For one must settle the question of a future without the interference of others.

I once knew a boy who came from a family of ministers. His father and his grandfather and his great-grandfather had carried the Word for years—faithful to their vocation—and the family wanted him to follow in their footsteps. But the boy put his foot down—not disrespectfully or discourteously, but very firmly. He said:

"I have only one life to live and I want to live it in my own way. I want to be a doctor. I long to know things about helping the sufferers of the world, and I think that I can help them! It seems to me that my way will be following God's will as well as your way!"

Don't you agree with the boy?

There is a little place in the world for everybody, and I firmly believe that every one who strives will find his own place. The niche which he is fitted for may be much smaller than the one expected, and it may be infinitely larger—who knows?

When a girl wants to go abroad to study music, and when her mother suddenly becomes ill, so ill that she cannot go, it may be that God is trying to fit her into her appointed place, and that her appointed place is home. When a girl is suddenly forced into a different atmosphere than that of her sheltered, secluded life, she may be sure that her Master is only strengthening her character preparatory to fitting her into her niche.

There is a society in New York that makes a specialty of getting people suitable positions. The girl who comes to them with ambitions for the stage in her flighty little head is talked to, characterized, and fitted successfully into her place—as a stenographer or a clerk, or a reporter. And the girl or boy who does not know just what to do is told by expert character-readers what the appointed life-work should be.

I think that plan is a splendid one—for the uncertain ones—but I do not want my pen-and-ink friends to be uncertain. I want them to know just what they have talents for, or what they love to do, without being told by an outsider.

Mysterious one, I have not answered your question, have I? The reason is this—I think that you have brains enough, and character enough, and go enough to answer it for yourself!

IN ANTICIPATION

I'LL make a feast of joy to-night,
And gladly will my friends invite
To meet Good Cheer and Appetite.

Not a grand table laid by Art,
Nor viands sought in foreign mart;
Home shall supply in every part.

Happy selection of the guest
Makes plain fare equal to the best;
And this shall guide me in my quest.

Nor to the palate be confined;
There will be finer food, designed
To stimulate the heart and mind.

Let wit and humor have full play,
And kindly jest to make us gay,
And even wisdom have her say:

And harmless satire, giving zest—
Though points may prick, no wounds confessed—
As salt, will savor all the rest.

New thoughts from each new thoughts incite:
And, ere the guests have said good-night,
Heart unto heart has given delight.

To-morrow I will live it o'er,
And feel I've had one joy the more,
New riches added to my store.

GEORGE BIRDSEYE.

Taste This

Taste common baked beans—mushy and broken, though not half-baked.

Beans without any sauce, or with sauce that's flat.

Beans that are baked without modern facilities — some of them hard, some cooked all to pieces.

Then This

Then taste Van Camp's — even-sized beans baked in modern steam ovens.

Baked until mellow, yet every bean remains nut-like and whole.

Baked with a sauce made of whole, ripe tomatoes.

Baked by a famous chef. Brought to you with the fresh oven flavor.

Just make this comparison. Then you will realize what it means to insist that you get Van Camp's.

Van Camp's BAKED WITH TOMATO SAUCE PORK AND BEANS

"The National Dish"

The beans we use are picked out by hand, to get just the white, plump beans.

The sauce we use costs us just five times the cost of common tomato sauce.

The chef in charge is a famous French chef. And this dish is his masterpiece.

We spend on this dish $800,000 yearly more than we need to spend. But the result is a dish which has given to millions an entirely new idea of baked beans.

It costs—ready-baked—about three cents per meal.

Three sizes:
10, 15 and 20 cents per can

CLOSING DAYS AT MONT-LAWN

LABOR DAY, September 1, was a red-letter day at Mont-Lawn. Clear, cool weather, with a delightful breeze blowing over the lawns and playgrounds of the Children's Paradise, made the day an enjoyable one for the little guests and the groups of visitors. Superintendent Goering and her staff of assistants had a busy time of it. As is usual on holidays, the children were in high spirits and romped about the lawn in games and frolics until the dinner gong sounded, when they marched into Fort Plenty and partook of a tempting meal.

Visitors from the nearby villages and from New York began to arrive by ten o'clock, and watched the children at their play and in their military marches to the big dining-room. At two P.M. children and guests repaired to the Temple, where over an hour was spent in singing and speech-making. Dr. J. F. Hallimond, superintendent of the Bowery Mission, spoke of the meaning of Labor Day and the dignity of labor. He referred to Dr. Louis Klopsch, founder of the Children's Home, as an illustration of one who did not scorn to labor with his hands as well as with his brain, and who had risen to success from an obscure beginning and through many difficulties. Dr. Ferdinand C. Iglehart made a rousing patriotic speech to the children, which was greatly appreciated by both young folks and adults. He closed with a tribute to the memory of the founder of Mont-Lawn, "who carried in his breast the heart of a boy, and whose best thoughts and best efforts had ever been given in behalf of childhood." Mr. John Auer delighted the children and their guests with two 'cello solos. Rev. Franklin Babbitt, the aged pastor of Christ Church, Nyack, pronounced the benediction at the close of the meeting. The afternoon was spent enjoyably in games and sports on the big lawn, all the children participating under the direction of their teachers. This was the last celebration of the season at our Children's Home. On Saturday, September 6, the last of the children returned to the city.

At a meeting of the Board of Trustees of the Children's Home on September 5, a resolution was adopted extending the thanks of the Board to the North River Ferry Company, which generously gave free transportation in its steamships across the Hudson to the children and teachers of the Home during the season just closed.

Among the Workers

—MRS. J. D. MAIN, of Hagerstown, Md., has taught in Sabbath schools for fifty-nine years, beginning at the age of eighteen. She writes: "I am now seventy-seven, and am still teaching a class of thirty young married ladies. One or two of my family have been subscribers to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for nearly twenty years, and what a comfort and blessing it has been!"

—MRS. LUCY RIDER MEYER, of the Chicago Training School for Missions, writes to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD a touching description of conditions among the consumptives in Arizona. She says: "There are three deaconesses in Phoenix doing all they can. We need twenty nurses instead of one! We need a hospital. We have the ground, but the project halts for lack of money. Ten thousand dollars would be sufficient."

—A TELEGRAM TO THE CHRISTIAN HERALD from Miss Emma Wilson, superintendent of the Mayesville Institute for colored young people, brings the news that on the night of August 27, the main building, containing the classrooms, assembly room and boys' dormitory, was completely destroyed by fire. This disaster will temporarily disable the institute, but the leaders in the work are already looking forward hopefully to rebuilding with the assistance of friends.

—THE MOODY BIBLE INSTITUTE of Chicago is broadening its work this fall along two important lines, the preparation of Sunday school experts, and women workers for women and children. To meet the needs of the first class it is establishing chairs of pedagogy, psychology and Sunday school history, management and methods, by means of which young men and women may be qualified for any department of such service from that of teacher in a local school to a State or county organizer.

—THE FOLLOWING interesting letter comes from Miss Susan E. Haswell, missionary at Ahlore, Burma, India: "You will be interested to learn that one of the boys whom I received in 1909 through the help of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has been baptized on profession of his faith in Christ. This makes the second one of that group of boys who has joined the Baptist Church, while a third has united with the Church of England, and a fourth has come before our Karen Baptist Church to ask for baptism. E Lhah, the first boy named, is not an orphan, but is from a poor heathen family. His father is Chinese and the mother Pwo-Karen. The boy is an exceptionally bright, refined boy. His father consented to his baptism, but the mother utterly refused to allow it. He was very happy in feeling that he had confessed Christ; but when his mother learned what he had done—I think he himself wrote to his parents—she had a letter written to him forbidding him ever to come under the roof of his father's house again. She told him that henceforth he was dead to her and she was calling the Buddhist priests together and going to have a funeral service to mourn for his death. E Lhah speaks Chinese, Burmese and Karen and is rapidly acquiring English as well. I intend, God willing, to let him go on as far as he can in Burma and then have him taught in some Bible school and then send him forth whithersoever the Lord may call him to preach Christ."

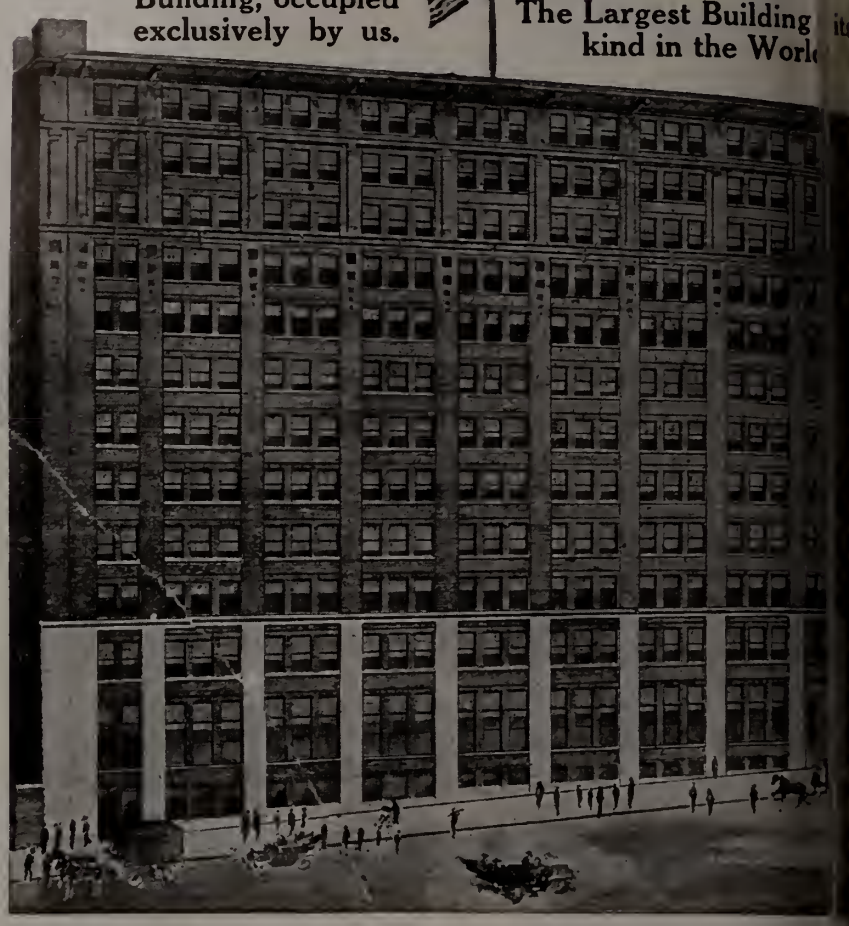
The Largest Building of its kind in the World



An Anniversary and An Appreciation

JUST four years ago the Standard Mail Order Company placed its first advertisement in the "Christian Herald," a single column about seven inches deep, that cost us $100.00. Since then our advertising in the "Christian Herald" has amounted to over $25,000.00.

This week's message to the readers of "Christian Herald" is an expression of our appreciation of the loyal support and encouragement they have accorded us during these four years. This announcement also marks an important milestone in our growth, for we have just established ourselves in our big new building in Fifty-fifth Street, west of Ninth Avenue, New York City.

When in 1909 we placed our first advertisement in "Christian Herald," we occupied a small loft, about 4,000 sq. ft., in Wooster Street. Our gross business this first year amounted to only a few thousand dollars.

But we had settled upon certain honest business policies and determined to follow them, whatever the outcome.

In the first place, "SATISFACTION TO THE CUSTOMER" was to be the keystone of our institution. We were never to permit a moment's question in any customer's mind as to our willingness to "make good," nor as to our ability to do so, and we saw to it that there never was any deviation from this policy.

In the second place, we realized that much of our success would lie in the hands of our employees—the men and women who were to make our efforts a success or failure. Honest, conscientious, painstaking workmanship never came out of a place where the seed of discontent was sown. We strove to win the loyalty and enthusiastic co-operation of every man and woman in our employ so that they might be happy here and find real pleasure in their work.

We have accomplished this through the cultivation of comradeship throughout our entire house, and we've tried to teach each one of our two thousand employees to be helpful to the others. An efficiently organized "Mutual Aid Society," illustrated travel-lectures, entertainments in the winter and picnics in the summer, shared by every one from president to humblest apprentice—all have contributed to create a spirit of loyalty to which we are frank to attribute a generous degree of the success attained by this business.

And what is the evidence of this success?

In four years, that first year's sales of a few thousand dollars has grown to a business of many million dollars annually—and now, with the possible exception of one very long established house, we sell more women's and children's garments than any mail order or retail store in America.

The single 4,000 ft. loft in Wooster Street has expanded into a thirteen-story, modern fireproof building, almost an acre to the floor, the largest plant in the world devoted exclusively to the selling of women's and children's clothing by mail.

Such wonderful growth as this can be established upon two and only two foundation-stones—the determination to sell good merchandise at the lowest possible price, and the giving of unfailing satisfaction to each and every purchaser.

Upon this anniversary, therefore, we wish to take this opportunity of saying to the "Christian Herald" readers, who have helped to make this growth possible, that the policies that have governed this business in the past will see no relaxation under the tremendous expansion of our activities; that the merchandise will be kept rigidly at the standard we established, and that, as before, and always, SATISFACTION must be the keynote of every sale.

MOVEMENT FOR CHURCH UNION

BY H. K. CARROLL, LL.D.

Concluded from preceding issue

E plan for church union, outied in the previous instalent of this article, is not a ry simple plan, but it is not a ple problem with which the on has to deal. One of the ies relates to the negro. The t Episcopal Church has 20 nual conferences with 300,- bers; and the Methodist Prot- nurch has five colored annual ces. The Methodist Episcoch, South, set off, in 1870, its nembers into a separate or- n, the Colored Methodist Epis- urch, which has about 235,000 . Here are almost 550,000 Colthodists, if the three should say nothing of other colored t bodies. What shall be done em? The Colored body has bishops, the colored members Methodist Episcopal Church ng for bishops of their own s is well known, the prevailiment of the Methodist Epis- urch, South, is that the races e separated in church govern- nd the white annual confer- uld not accept the presidency ed bishops; indeed, some af- t this is likewise true of many hite annual conferences of the st Episcopal Church itself. n of union meets this difficulty iding that the negroes shall te a quadrennial conference selves, electing their own bish- administering all their local under its jurisdiction, having ume time representation in the Confernce, which is to have tion of all connectional af- Negro bishops, by this provi- uld hold only negro confer- and there would be actual of the races chiefly in the Gen- nference, where negro repre- es would form a minority. her difficulty which the plan is l to meet is that of differences part to sectional feeling. The st Episcopal Church is twice e as the Methodist Episcopal South. In one great General nce, under majority rule, the es of the two smaller bodies constantly be outvoted. Con- on, however complete, will ss show the uniting lines for o come. How shall the rights two minorities be protected? ly by the expedient of quad- conferences. If the negroes ne, the South might constitute , and the North a third, or a nd a fourth. At first sight the ems to contemplate union by di- with its three or four quadrennferences, which must be sec- n character; but the unifying the General Conference, which es for all connectional inter- Each quadrennial conference nd delegates to it who will con- the first house, and every anonference will send delegates second house. All interests, s and conferences will thus be nted, and an equilibrium of be insured. When bishops are by any of the quadrennial con- s they must be confirmed by t house of the General Conferwhich is the house constituted egates elected by the several nnial conferences.

questions naturally arise: 1. ministers and members of the churches desire union upon a able plan? 2. What are the ages and disadvantages of tion?

ng the second question first, vantages of Methodist unifica- s presented by its advocates in st succinct terms, are these:

fication would remove the evils of di- among which, according to the unani- inion of the joint commissioners, are and waste" and "hurtful competition."

These injure good fellowship, provoke an unholy spirit of contention and rivalry and greatly weaken the moral, spiritual and financial resources of the churches.

2. Unification would restore perfect fellowship, allay friction, remove misunderstanding, take away all occasion for rivalry, and create harmony of feeling, will and purpose.

3. Unification would bring about a most needed and most helpful economy in means and effort. Economy is the ruling idea in the industrial and business world, and it has wrought a revolution in manufacturing and marketing conditions. Economy should be applied to things religious and that right speedily.

4. Unification would multiply denominational energy and efficiency in an amazing degree. The conclusion of the World Missionary Conference was that union in the foreign fields would double the power of the missions. Union of the three Methodist bodies, by removing the causes of weakness and by compacting and harmonizing the elements of strength, would create a body able to accomplish twice as much as the three could accomplish separately.

What are the disadvantages of the proposed unification? Those who are opposed to it do not believe that the sentiment of the three churches is ripe for it. To attempt to bring it about before the churches are fully ready for it is, they think, to court failure. To have a union with considerable portions of each body refusing to coalesce would create more bitterness of feeling than now exists and give rise, perhaps, to divisive property litigation. In the second place, they doubt the wisdom of the proposed plan. It seems to create three or four new divisions in proposing to consolidate the three or four existing divisions. Separate quadrennial conferences mean to them so many sectional organizations with tendencies rather to produce and perpetuate differences and disunion than harmony and union. The plan is practically, they contend, a plan of federation rather than unification.

Moreover, unification on such a large scale is of doubtful expediency, they argue, in view of the risks it involves. What body of men can be wise enough to create or adapt the ecclesiastical machinery necessary to such an immense aggregation? The Methodist system is peculiar. It is a development of a providential character. Piece by piece the machinery was built up as occasion required and experience dictated. Add two millions of members to the three and a half millions of the largest of the three bodies and you have not a simple problem in addition, but an intricate question of adaptation and adjustment of the machinery of government, requiring, doubtless, the introduction of new elements. The polities of the Roman Catholic and Anglican Churches are adapted to any degree of expansion; but those of Methodism, the episcopal as well as the non-episcopal, are not complete and fixed and have yet to be worked out.

Are the ministers and members of the three churches ready for organic union? There is undoubtedly a strong and widely extended sentiment for it as a general proposition. Nothing was said against the appointment of the commission in the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church. One often hears expressions among the ministers and laymen of that body in favor of union. It is not being seriously discussed and probably will not be until the joint commission submits a detailed plan, and whether that is accepted or rejected will largely depend doubtless on its character. That organic union is desirable and even necessary would doubtless be unhesitatingly admitted by the great majority in the North.

In the South the evils of division are more in evidence, but Southern Methodists are generally quite conservative and are not sure that organic union would be best for them. But after all, the spirit of the age,

THE MOVEMENT FOR CHURCH UNION

the pressing problems of greater economy and efficiency and the increasing attenuation of denominational differences will compel the ultimate removal of denominational barriers between these and other similar bodies. Organic union is bound to come. The united church would have 30,000 itinerant ministers, nearly 50,000 churches, and upward of 5,600,000 communicants.

5. The Methodist Protestant Church is also asked in marriage by the Church of the United Brethren in Christ, a somewhat larger body Methodistic in doctrine, principles and usage. The two were in negotiation some years ago with the Congregationalists for consolidation, but the plan did not carry. The Methodist Protestant General Conference of May last unanimously adopted a resolution declaring that "a union of the Methodist Protestant Church and the Church of the United Brethren in Christ is both possible and practical," and authorizing its commission on church union to enter into negotiations with the commission of the last named body. The United Brethren have bishops, while the Methodist Protestants are non-episcopal; but the episcopal feature might be eliminated or modified. Moreover, the latter are not so strenuous in opposition to it as they were formerly.

6. The Free Methodist Church and the American Wesleyan Methodist Church have commissions negotiating for organic union. The former is episcopal, the latter non-episcopal, but this difference is not a serious barrier. The Wesleyans have a general officer who travels from conference to conference, and though he is not called a general superintendent he performs some of the functions of such an officer. In many respects the two bodies are alike. Both earnestly advocate the doctrine of holiness, simplicity in dress and in life and devotion to the peculiarities of Methodism. Their union, of which there is good prospect, would be a splendid measure of economy and increased effectiveness, and would make a body of over 50,000 communicants.

7. The Presbyterian Church, Northern, arranged for a union a few years ago with the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, the result of which was disappointing, about two-thirds of the latter deciding ultimately not to consolidate. Much bitterness of feeling has been manifested and litigation over property interests has been extensive. Last year negotiations for union of the former with the Reformed Church in the United States were begun on a broad and elaborate basis, including the mutual recognition of doctrinal standards and the constitutions and discipline of each, the name of the united body to be selected hereafter. The General Assembly and the General Synod have agreed upon the plan and submitted it to their respective subordinate judicatories for approval or disapproval. The outcome will be awaited with interest. It might be supposed that the Reformed Church in America would be a little nearer the Presbyterian Church; but efforts at consolidation of the two have failed hitherto.

8. Commissions have been appointed by the General Assemblies of the Southern and United Presbyterian Churches to see if these bodies can be successfully consolidated. The former seems to be more strongly drawn toward the united church with which it never had closer relations than to the Northern body from which it was separated.

9. The Evangelical Association and the United Evangelical Church, which were divided more than fifteen years ago, have commissions on reunion and the outlook for the coming together again of these two Methodist bodies of German origin is excellent. There are no essential differences between them—none at all in doctrine, none in the main features of polity, and nothing fundamental in discipline. Both are active, aggressive, evangelical and evangelistic and are growing.

10. The most notable movement for organic union between churches of different denominational groups has been on foot in Canada—nothing less than the consolidation of the Congregational, Methodist and Presbyterian bodies. Organic union had brought together all Presbyterian branches, excepting one or two fragments, into one, and all Methodist branches, with similar exceptions, into one, and nothing more could be done unless these united bodies could themselves be amalgamated. A plan of union was agreed upon looking to a gradual merging of congregations and subordinate judicatories, and it was submitted to presbyteries and conferences and then to church sessions, conferences, etc., and the vote of the communicants. The vote of ministers and office-bearers showed that a large majority were for consolidation; the popular vote for it was not quite so large, though in the Methodist Church it was nearly 85 per cent. In the Presbyterian Church the minority, ministerial and lay, was sufficient to make it inadvisable in the judgment of the General Assembly to proceed further at this time. One presbytery, that of Toronto, gave a majority against the proposal. The plan has, therefore, failed, at least for the present.

11. The Disciples of Christ, a prosperous body which was founded as a protest against sectarian creeds and names, has a commission on Christian union to receive and consider any proposals for organic union. In recent years the denomination has unhappily divided, the more conservative wing forming a separate denomination with upward of 150,000 communicants.

It should be said by way of explanation that it is the very small bodies that make up the majority of denominational divisions in the United States. Just one-half of the 170 denominational titles belong to bodies having less than 10,000 communicants each. Those having 50,000 or more number only 47, while 32 have less than 1,000 each. And the newer divisions are almost wholly among the minute bodies.

Since so much has been said about separations and divisions, it is quite proper to call attention to notable instances of organic union which have occurred in the past: the reunion of the Old and New School Presbyterian bodies in the South when the Southern Presbyterian Church was organized; the coming together of the same elements in the North, in 1870, in the Northern Presbyterian Church; the union with the latter five or six years ago of thirty or forty thousand Cumberland Presbyterians.

was decidedly uncomfortable and very forlorn.

Not that he was a coward? Why, when he had broken his arm last winter he had never so much as peeped! Indeed, he had tried to whistle when the doctor set it! His mother had held his hand and called him her hero; the doctor had said that he was a soldier and a gentleman; and his father had given him a five-dollar gold-piece. He knew, if by any chance such good luck could happen to him, he could stand being tortured by dancing, whooping, shrieking, painted Indian warriors, and laugh until, overcome with respect and admiration for his undaunted bravery, they would cut the thongs that bound him, adopt him into their tribe, and make him their chief. He'd just like to have the chance to try it. But to be switched by Mary Coole; for that was what her "punish" had meant, he knew! A neighbor girl he had called by her first name until this year of prohibition! Why, he could remember her playing with the other girls of the neighborhood in her front dooryard with her dolls!

"Great suffering wildcats!" exclaimed Jerry, sitting down on an overturned ash-barrel and wiping the perspiration from his face with his woolen cap. Before he would submit to such a thing, he would forsake home, friends, and native land, run off to sea and become a pirate! Or, on second thought, he might ship to the Banks and be a fisherman; icebergs, on a day like this, were more alluring. Of course he would be shipwrecked; probably cast adrift in a frail, open dory, with only a small keg of water and a few water-soaked biscuits, on the r-a-g-i-n-g, b-o-u-n-d-l-e-s-s ocean, to be rescued at the point of death by a vessel bound for Africa, where he would make his fortune in the diamond mines, and return home to his h-e-a-r-t-b-r-o-k-e-n parents, wearing a diamond stickpin, a diamond ring, and a beautiful watch and chain, just in time to save his aged father from impending ruin! But he might not be rescued!

Well, what were the pangs of drowning, or even slow starvation, to such suffering as this!

When he finally reached the house, instead of bursting in at the front door, calling loudly to his mother, and rushing out again to play until called to lunch, he quietly mounted the porch steps and cautiously opened the door of the hall.

The fragrance of frying doughnuts greeted him. No matter how deeply into the slough of despond his spirits had been plunged, this was usually enough to raise them to solid earth again. But alluring odors were nothing to him now! Feeling like a sneak thief, he stole softly up the stairs to his room.

The Thomson family gathered about the dining-table with one vacant chair. Lunch over, in answer to his wife's anxious conjectures as to the possible whereabouts of Jerry, Mr. Thomson, from behind his newspaper, irrelevantly remarked that the fishing in Meyer's Creek had been very good of late.

Scorning the insinuation, Mrs. Thomson stepped into the hall and called "Jerry!"

There was no answer; but feeling intuitively that he was in the house, she went softly up the stairs to his room. There, prostrate on the floor, his face buried in his arms, she found him.

Mrs. Thomson was a wise mother. She did not exclaim over her son, demanding hysterically what was the matter. She knew that he was aware of her presence, though he gave no sign, so she spoke to him naturally in her firm, cheerful voice, stooped and helped him to his feet, sat down with him on the window-seat, where the cooling breeze blew in on his hot cheeks, and tactfully drew from him the story of the misadventures of the day.

Half an hour later she sent him to school, a clean, well-fed boy with his self-respect fully restored. She had appealed to his reason and honor and had made him see that no disgrace could be greater for a boy than to shrink from punishment deserved. That it was deserved she had made him see plainly, too; but he would have been more than an ordinary boy if this exalted state of mind had lasted through the whole of the hot, dragging afternoon, and it must be confessed, he watched the hands of the clock with increasing nervousness as they approached the hour of his doom.

At 3.30 the gong sounded. The effect on the drooping, languid children was electrifying. They straightened up in their seats and put their books away noisily. At a second signal they sprang to their feet. Mary Coole went to the door, watched them pass out, and followed them to the outside entrance to see them safely from the building. Jerry knew she would linger there a few moments to talk with the teacher of the first grade. He was alone in the schoolroom, and near by was an open window with the country and freedom just beyond. It only meant a pair of scraped shins and he would be out of reach of the impending punishment, at least for that time, and just then Jerry had no thoughts for the hereafter. In an instant he was on the windowsill mentally measuring the distance to the ground below.

At this crucial moment a group of his loyal followers caught sight of him. They were fired with enthusiasm and motioned him wildly to drop. Some of the boys enticingly held up two fingers, the fraternal sign for a swim in Meyer's Creek. It was too much; he could not resist; and he slid farther out on the sill.

Just as he was about to catch with his hands and let himself down, he saw little Hazel Green watching him with a look of grave surprise in her wondering eyes.

"Ith you afraid of a whipping?" she asked in her slow, lisping drawl.

Instantly the scene in his room with his mother came back to him.

"A boy can think himself very brave," she had said, "and yet be a miserable coward. Unless he can stand up and take his medicine when he deserves it, he is yellow. I do not think any right-minded boy ever plans to do wrong deliberately; the opportunity is the test, and the choosing."

He had not retained the words—probably had not fully comprehended their meaning—but he had felt their sting, and could still feel the firm yet caressing touch of his mother's hand—and she had trusted him. He turned back.

Dewey Snyder saw the movement and jeered with delight.

"You, Dewey! You c o w a r d!" yelled Jerry, his whole body aquiver with fury, "I dare you—do you hear? Dare you to meet me at Smith's corner!"

Then as he heard an approaching footstep, with frantic haste he scrambled back into the room and scurried across the floor to his desk. He was sitting there like a soldier, bolt upright, shoulders squared, arms folded across his breast, and shining eyes looking straight ahead, when his teacher entered the room and closed the door.

Did she whip him?

Well, she was very young and had been sorely tried with her inattentive, restless charges. She was dissatisfied with herself. She felt in a vague way that she had not awakened the imagination or the interest of a single child in the room; that in their work they were either little shirks or plodders; that at heart they were all

GROWING STRONGER

Apparently, with Advancing Age.

"At the age of 50 years I collapsed from excessive coffee drinking," writes a man in Mo. "For four years I shambled about with the aid of crutches or cane, most of the time unable to dress myself without help.

"My feet were greatly swollen, my right arm was shrunken and twisted inward, the fingers of my right hand were clenched and could not be extended except with great effort and pain. Nothing seemed to give me more than temporary relief.

"Now, during all this time and for about 30 years previously, I drank daily an average of 6 cups of strong coffee—rarely missing a meal.

"My wife at last took my case into her own hands and bought some Postum. She made it according to directions and I liked it fully as well as the best high-grade coffee.

"Improvement set in at once. In about 6 months I began to work a little, and in less than a year I was very much better, improving rapidly from day to day. I am now in far better health than most men of my years and apparently growing stronger with advancing age.

"I am busy every day at some kind of work and am able to keep up with the procession without a cane. The arm and hand that were once almost useless, now keep far ahead in rapidity of movement and beauty of penmanship."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Write for copy of the little book, "The Road to Wellville."

arrayed against her; that people were saying, with truth, that she could not govern; that her re-election was very doubtful, and that not being retained for another year put the brand of failure on her.

Paper-ball throwing had been one of the most aggravating things she had tried, without success, to suppress, and she had promised a whipping to the next offender. But she shrank from striking the boy when he stood awaiting his punishment before her. To gain time she questioned him.

"Jerry, you knew you were disobeying when you threw those balls. What made you do it?"

Jerry made no move to reply.

"Had any one been throwing at you?"

But, although he saw the loophole, Jerry disdained telling on a schoolmate, even though he was his dearest enemy, and still remained silent.

"You know," said Mary, picking up the whip from her desk, "that I must whip you if you do not tell me."

Jerry looked up quickly and their eyes met. She had not been out of school very long, and she understood the look of scorn in the boy's eyes. It sent the hot blood in a quick flush of shame to her face. She laid down the whip.

"Jerry," she said, "you should be punished, and I ought to whip you, but, some way, I can't! But, Jerry," the school-teacher tone was gone, and out of the depths of her misery the young girl's real self spoke to the boy before her, "I've got to give up; you've been too much for me! I'm a failure, all right. They won't give me another chance."

And Mary sank down in her chair, her hands clasped loosely on her knees, her dark eyes dilated and looking hopelessly out from her white face, as if trying to fathom an unknown future. In a moment she recovered herself and rose to her feet.

"You may go," said the school-teacher quietly.

Jerry stood twisting his fingers a moment, then went into the wardrobe and took down his cap. The spirit had all been taken out of him. He did not feel like a hero now; his shoulders drooped and he hung his head. Suddenly he choked and swallowed hard, fighting back the unexpected tears; then he walked soberly out of the building. On the sidewalk he hesitated a moment; walked slowly on; stopped; then his shoulders straightened and he turned about resolutely and, with a quick, firm step, walked back into the building, down the hall, and opened the door of his room.

Mary sat drooping over her desk, her head in her hand, the picture of discouragement. As the door opened she looked up expecting to see the janitor with his brooms. Instead, Jerry stood there; Jerry, the imp of mischief! Jerry, her chief tormentor! A new Jerry, with sober face and big, earnest eyes.

"You don't have to give up on my account," said a hoarse, unnatural voice, "an' ye betcha I'll look after the kids! I'm—I'm sorry!"

With this last explosion successfully out of his system Jerry bolted down the hall in flight. Mary heard his whistle break forth as his feet struck the outside walk.

A quick sense of humor came to her relief and she laughed softly to herself until the tears stood in her eyes. But when, a few moments later, the janitor came to the door and she put on her hat and went out into the soft, fragrant air of the late afternoon, her face was very thoughtful and sweet; for with this, her first glimpse into the heart of a boy, there had suddenly come to her a sympathetic understanding of all child nature, which with maturing years would ripen into love. And love, without which all effort seems so futile, she would find to be the very root and fiber of the success she so longed for.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S MEETINGS

NOTES ON THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR, EPWORTH LEAGUE AND BAPTIST YOUNG PEOPLE'S UNION TOPICS

Missionary Essentials—Giving*

NOTICE the sequence—information, prayer, giving. We are to have one more—going. The first thing is to learn the facts; this will stir your heart. The next thing is to pray; God will tell you what he wants you to do about it. The next thing is to give. The next thing is, if you can (and more people can than we are apt to think) to go.

To-day we are to study giving. The other Sunday afternoon a missionary from China was addressing a chapelful of little fresh-air children from the New York slums. She was urging them to try to save their pennies for the sake of the children of China. One cent, she told them, would pay for a whole meal for some little uncared-for child there. They were really impressed by her appeal. It seemed to them that they could save a penny occasionally for these little unknown friends across the sea. Some might have been inclined to blame the missionary for making such an appeal to such an audience. But the work was so on her heart, the needs of her little folks in China so real to her, that she could not help it. After the destitution she sees among child life in China even the waifs of New York must have seemed almost well-to-do. And it will not hurt them to think of the boys and girls of China and lay aside a penny for them now and then.

But if these little people from the East Side could be made to feel this duty of trying to help the needy souls and bodies of other lands, what about ourselves? Has our money been all consecrated to Christ? Do we spend it as we would spend it if he were visible to us, at our side? Do we spend it as he would spend it if it were in his hands instead of ours? That is the test.

Study, pray, give. This lesson is both for the home and the foreign field. Pray for an unselfish heart, a heart like the Master's, that cannot endure the sufferings of others without giving all his strength and all his store to aid them. The relation of money to salvation may seem mysterious, but it is real. Money makes the work of publishing and preaching the Gospel possible. Shall some life remain in the darkness because you neglect to give? "What would Jesus do?"

Missionary Responsibility†

THE full text of this topic is "State and Provincial Missionary Responsibility." The purpose of its being assigned is to familiarize Baptist Young People with the methods and arrangements of home mission work and particularly their relation to the State and Provincial Baptist Boards; also, of course, to stimulate their interest in home missions and to rouse them to give and work for the cause.

The young people of the various denominations ought to be familiar with the details of their own denominational organizations. There are two Baptist conventions in the United States, the Northern and Southern; three in Canada, the Ontario and Quebec, the Maritime, and the Western. Within the territory of these conventions are State conventions, whose work is directed by a board elected by the State convention. The secretary of this board is the superintendent of the missionary pastors of the State. So the "responsibility" rests first of all on these missionary pastors, then on the State superintendent, then upon the board, then upon the State convention as a deliberative body, then upon all the members, young and old, of all the Baptist churches in the State.

You see we have worked around at last to you. Are you bearing your share of this responsibility? Are you learning all you can about it, giving all you can for it, and getting others to help in it? The Ontario and Quebec convention raises fifty thousand dollars every year for its own home missions work. The Connecticut convention spends twenty thousand dollars annually for its work in rural communities and among the Hungarians in Bridgeport, the Italians in Hartford, Waterbury and Meriden, and among the French and negroes of the State. Work in the South is especially successful. The Baptist Year Book states that in Alabama, Georgia, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina and Virginia, one person out of every five of the population is a Baptist.

† "STATE AND PROVINCIAL MISSIONARY RESPONSIBILITY." B. Y. P. U. Topic for Sunday, September 28, 1913. Isa. 40: 9-11.

Sociability*

THERE are two ideas in the word "sociability"—joyousness and kindness. Both of them are cardinal features of Christianity.

The ministry of cheerfulness—who can estimate it?

Smile Awhile,
And while you smile,
Another
Smiles;
And soon there's miles
And miles
Of smiles—
And life's worth while
Because you smile.

But after all, none of these words, singly or combined, express all that we mean by that old-fashioned word "sociability." It is more than joyousness and kindness and cheerfulness. It means that you like to be around where other folks are, that the presence of others cheers you, that you like to share your cheer at first hand with other people.

This is a most delightful grace. We ought to spend some time in solitude. There is probably not enough nowadays of the other old-fashioned habit of meditation; the willingness to go alone and think things out. There should be something of this in every life; it is a necessary part of prayer. But there must also be that hearty, objective interest in other people. When you walk along the street the people you meet ought to see something in you which convinces them that you would like to help them. When you enter a room, strangers and acquaintances ought to feel that a friend has arrived. This is the ministry of sociability. There is need of it in our churches, our leagues, our Sunday schools, our homes, our towns.

We have a beautiful illustration of it in the Saviour's life. He went among men with true, strong neighborliness, with hearty cheer, and ever ready helpfulness. He can give us that same interest in others that he himself had, and will show us how we may help and cheer them.

Questions and Answers

Mrs. J. M. T., Hudson, N. H. In these strenuous days, when it is so hard to get the family together for the old-time family worship, it seems especially important that the whole family should look to God as the dear Father who supplies all our needs—thank him and ask his blessing. In many families, the young children are taught to "say grace" and all, from oldest to youngest, take their turn in asking the blessing. Isn't that a beautiful custom?

We quite agree with you that it is a beautiful custom and one which should not be neglected in any Christian home. We have visited in homes where each member of the family circle was taught to "ask the blessing" when desired to do so, not in formal, conventional phrases, but in a few short, simple, earnest sentences, that meant much and which gave the sense of nearness to the bountiful heavenly Father and of gratitude for all his gifts and his loving care. (We may act upon the suggestion at the close of your letter.)

Mrs. A. H., Lipscomb, Texas. Will you please state the passages in the Bible, if any, which indicate that Christ intended the gift of healing to cease with the apostles?

There is no such passage. The inference is quite clear, throughout the whole New Testament, that this gift was to remain in the church. We have so largely lost the gift because of our lack of faith, but there are numerous incidents being reported every day of miraculous healing in answer to prayer in the name of Christ.

C. E. S., Santa Monica, Calif. If Rehoboam reigned over but one tribe and Jeroboam over ten, where was the twelfth? (1 Kings 11: 31-35; 12: 21.)

The tribe of Levi was not counted because it had no land possessions (Num. 18: 20-24), except cities for dwellings, with their outlying fields for pasturage (Num. 35: 1-8). The tribe of Joseph was divided into two parts, Ephraim and Manasseh, which are usually spoken of as two distinct tribes. But in this division Joseph seems to have been counted as but one tribe, making Jeroboam's ten. Although Rehoboam at first retained only Judah, most of the tribe of Benjamin soon joined his kingdom. Simeon and Dan also became part of the kingdom of Judah.

Mrs. S. D. T., Dresden, Kan. 1. Zarathushtra or Zoroaster was the great Mede who founded the religion of the Parsees and of ancient Persia, and gave to the Eastern world the famous Zendavesta, the Bible of the Parsee faith. 2. We are not informed of the doctrine taught in the Mazdaznan Temple, but understand it is some form of Oriental occultism.

W. J. P., Shamokin, Pa. The method of reckoning time in antediluvian days is uncertain. Bible students are divided in opinion, but the leading commentators are led to conclude that Moses meant solar and not lunar years, averaging practically as long as ours. Josephus, the Jewish historian, writing on this point says in his Antiquities (1: 3: 3): "Let no one, on comparing the lives of the ancients with our lives, make the shortness of our lives, at present, an argument that neither did they attain to so long a duration of life." This was the Jewish view. On the other hand, Pliny, Scaliger, and others assert that the ancients must have computed time differently. The ancient Babylonian year seems to have consisted of twelve lunar months of thirty days each, intercalary months being added at certain periods.

M. L. P., Roanoke, Va. Please explain Matt. 1: 21 [when does this take place?] Acts 4: 12; John 17: 15, 16, 17, 1 John 1: 7; Heb. 13: 12; Col. 1: 22; Eph. 1: 4.

This is a singularly beautiful collection of texts and the truest and simplest way to explain them is to state that they mean what they say. It is the clearly declared purpose of God to save us from sin, and the time to be saved is now. The first passage states the proposition: "Thou shalt call his name Jesus, for he shall save his people from their sins." Acts 4: 12 repeats the same idea, salvation comes through Jesus. In John 17: 15-17, the Master prays that his disciples be kept from the evil, and asks that they be sanctified, or purified. 1 John 1: 7 declares that "the blood of Jesus Christ, God's Son, cleanseth us from all sin." The much misunderstood verse which follows simply states that if we say, when this cleansing is offered, that we have no sin from which to be cleansed, we deceive ourselves. Heb. 13: 12 repeats the statement that Jesus suffered in order that he "might sanctify the people with his own blood." Col. 1: 22 states again that the purpose of his suffering was to present us "holy and unblamable and unreprovable in his sight." In Eph. 1: 4 Paul says that God chose us "that we should be holy and without blame before him in love." The thing to do with such wonderful promises is to accept them at their face value by simple faith. Nothing is clearer than that the Scriptures teach an experience designated as sanctification or holiness as attainable in this life. The thing to do is to get it first and define it afterward. No one has succeeded in giving it a better definition than John Wesley, who called it "purity of intention."

L. O. D., Warden, Wash. Please advise us of some good books that will interest us. Our knowledge of suitable books for the family and good authors is very limited. We like such authors as Ralph Connor, Charles M. Sheldon and Eleanor H. Porter.

It is exceedingly difficult to make a satisfactory list of any certain class of authors because names would undoubtedly be omitted that should be included. But a few names occur to one's mind at once as the writers of fiction of a strikingly high moral tone and in some instances introducing definitely the religious note. Such writers for instance as Harriet Beecher Stowe, Nathaniel Hawthorne, George Macdonald, Charles Kingsley and Charles Reade may be mentioned among the most important novelists. The works of E. P. Roe, Louise M. Alcott and "Pansy" are also worthy of highest praise. Jean Ingelow is little known as a novelist, having won her fame chiefly as a poet, but her novels are extremely good. Charlotte Brontë, one of the earlier novelists, is a writer with whose works it is well to be familiar. Dickens and Scott are also to be strongly commended, and we should not forget our American novelist Cooper, whose works have given so much delight to young and old. Some of the present-day novelists, such as Winston Churchill, Gilbert Parker and Irving Bacheller, have a strong moral tone. The works of Robert Louis Stevenson are excellent. J. M. Barrie is a wholesome novelist and the writings of Ian McLaran are helpful and delightful. Caroline Atwater Mason, an American writer, has produced some striking books with a deeply religious note. Cyrus Townsend Brady and Amelia E. Barr are also writers to be especially commended. The books of Kathleen Norris, the young woman writer who is attracting at present such favorable attention, are delightful and uplifting. This list could be almost indefinitely extended. Many other classes of books should be included, but this reply has been confined to the fiction class. Any book dealer will be able to tell you where the works of any of these writers can be secured.

M. A. A., Chatham, N. Y., and A Reader, Paterson, N. J. The expression "to play cards," according to the present-day English usage, means to play games with the long-established pack of cards designated as diamonds, clubs, spades and hearts. The strong opposition felt against games with these cards arises from the fact that they have been used so largely in gambling and are associated so closely with the vice. The question of the other games you mention, Authors, Flinch, Pit, etc., is quite different. To play these games, although they are played with cards, is not to "play cards," as the language is used, and there are no association or suggestions of evil connected with them, corresponding to those of the other games.

E. A. P., Denfield, Ont. The Bible is all good literature. It stands alone in the narrative, the didactic, the oratoric, the allegoric, the lyric, the dramatic and the epic. Much of it is poetry of the highest order; much is praise sublime in character and expression; a good deal of it is philosophy of a kind that appeals to the mind of all the ages; it is replete with tragedy, in both the Old Testament and the New. To classify all the finer passages from a literary standpoint would be a large task, and one to be undertaken only by able and reverent scholarship. It would have to be gone over by literary experts, book by book, chapter by chapter, verse by verse.

L. M. S., Ridgewood Heights, N. Y. Ps. 125 is a sacred song sung in sight of Jerusalem's distant hills, when the pilgrims halt to form a procession to the sanctuary. The writer speaks of the beauty and excellency of the Jewish capital, and in verse 3 extols its compactness. There is no suggestion of undue crowding or congestion, although doubtless in David's time and Solomon's, there were great numbers in the processions on such occasions.

L. E. E., Mount Vision, N. Y. The prohibition against swine's flesh in the Levitical laws (Lev. 11: 7) was an inevitable one where the health of the people in a hot climate was to be considered, as its use was liable to produce leprosy, scurvy and cutaneous eruptions. Modern science has traced various ailments to its incautious use.

"AFTER MANY DAYS"

THE JUDSON CENTENNIAL AND THE NOBLE WORK IT COMMEMORATES

HEN four continents unite in celebrating the centennial of the beginning of one man's work, is nteresting to find what it is out. In America, in Burma, s , South India and other i c fields, in Europe and Africa, e ork of Adoniram Judson is to commemorated. The centennial e ation began last July, but the s mportant part of it is yet to m The leaders of the mission- y ork of the Baptist Church are r ging for a great educational campaign to begin next January d ontinue for six months, the purpose of which is to make i ians everywhere familiar with the story of this man's life and its a old fruitage. Aside from the tremendous missionary harvest of . udson's work, it is considered that the unification of the Baptist n ination and almost the whole of its missionary activity can be traced c o his influence. Travelers to Malden, Mass., visit the grave of Judson n d there this striking tablet, summing up his life and commemorating s ork: "In Memoriam Rev. Adoniram Judson, Born August 9, 1788, Died 12, 1850. Malden his birthplace. The ocean his sepulchre. Converted ans and the Burman Bible his monument. His record is on high."

I was just one hundred years ago, July 13, that Adoniram Judson, a young e gical graduate, landed with his young wife at Rangoon, Burma. The of the events which led to their arrival there is almost as thrilling as the of the events which followed. Young Judson, at Andover Seminary, had brought under the influence of Samuel J. Mills, Jr., James Richards, r Rice and Gordon Hall, members of the s onary society which had grown out of the is "haystack prayer meeting" near Williams l ge. Through their influence he came into a religious experience and a profound interest s ssions.

e American Board of Foreign Missions, a regational body, desired to send Mr. Judson foreign field, but since there was not money g h to provide for the six young men who d to go, he was sent to England to seek the the London Missionary Society. The priva- and distresses which were to fill so large a of his life began on this voyage, for the ship which he sailed was captured and he was v n into prison at Bayonne. Upon his release n tinued his journey to England, but was not s ssful in his quest, returned to America, and at length appointed by the American Board missionary to India or Burma. He and Mrs. o n sailed for the foreign field on February 19,

But during this voyage they found that convictions in regard to baptism had been g ed and that they could work conscientiously r no other auspices than those of the Baptist c h. It was with true heroism that the young o naries wrote, severing their connection with l nomination which had so far forwarded their interests, fully expecting they would meet with extreme criticism and censure from their associates friends. They faced the unknown world, not sure, as yet, that the new m nation to which they had given their allegiance would support them, but l tely refusing to return to the home land. They were not allowed to u in India because of the opposition of the East India Company, who e d that the operations of the missionaries would interfere with their i cal and commercial plans. They sailed to Mauritius, remaining there months, after which they ventured to return to India. In a letter home,

ANN H. JUDSON MEMORIAL CHAPEL, BURMA

Dr. Judson tells of the last stages of their journey to Rangoon:

"It became, therefore, a moral certainty that as soon as an order could be received at Madras we should be again arrested and ordered to England. Our only safety appeared to consist in escaping from Madras before such order should arrive. It may easily be conceived with what feelings I inquired the destination of vessels in the Madras roads. I found none that would sail in season, but one bound to Rangoon. A mission to Rangoon we had been accustomed to regard with feelings of horror. But it was now brought to a point. We must either venture there or be sent to Europe. All other paths were shut up; and thus situated, though dissuaded by all our friends at Madras, we commended ourselves to the care of God and embarked on the 22d of June. It was a crazy old vessel. The captain was the only person on board that could speak our language, and we had no other apartment than what was made by canvas. Our passage was very tedious. Mrs. Judson was taken dangerously ill, and continued so until at one period I came to experience the awful sensation which necessarily resulted from the expectation of an immediate separation from my beloved wife, the only remaining companion of my wanderings. About the same time, the captain being unable to make the Nicobar Islands, where it was intended to take in a cargo of cocoanuts, we were driven into a dangerous strait between the Little and Great Andamans, two savage coasts, where the captain had never been before, and where, if we had been cast ashore, we should according to all accounts have been killed and eaten by the natives. But as one evil is sometimes an antidote to another, so it happened with us. Our being driven into this dangerous but quiet channel brought immediate relief to the agitated and exhausted frame of Mrs. Judson, and conduced essentially to her recovery. And in the event we were safely conducted over the black rocks which we sometimes saw in the gulf below, and on the eastern side of the islands found favorable winds which gently wafted us forward to Rangoon. But on arriving here other trials awaited us."

Rangoon at this time was in the midst of jungles infested with wild animals and deadly reptiles. It was a common occurrence for a tiger to enter a village and carry off a domestic animal or a child. Dr. Edward Judson in his Life of Adoniram Judson writes: "While you are at your dinner a lizard may drop from the bamboo rafters upon the table. If you step out of your door the gleaming forms of chameleons shoot up the trunks of trees and hide themselves in the branches. The scorpion with its painful sting and the centipede with its poisonous bite may be found in your garden. Children must be warned not to run through the bushes in your compound, lest they encounter the hated cobra, whose slightest nip is sure and speedy death." Of all the heart-breaking experiences that Mr. and Mrs. Judson suffered, his imprisonment at Ava and later in Oung-Pen-la was the most terrible. The King of Burma was a cruel tyrant. His oppressions and persecutions of the people led England to declare war against him. During this war Mr. Judson was accused of being a spy, arrested with a number of other Englishmen, and thrown into prison. Mr. Judson's own description of the prison at Ava and his sufferings there are very meager. He says briefly: "The scenes we saw and the sufferings we underwent I would fain consign to oblivion." He relates in a matter-of-fact way how many pairs

THE LATE MAYOR OF NEW YORK

ON SEPTEMBER 11 the news reached New York of the death of William J. Gaynor, the mayor of the city. Mayor Gaynor had sailed for Europe on the steamship Baltic hoping to improve his health and regain strength for the coming electoral campaign in Greater New York. Death came to him as he was seated in his steamer chair on the sunny deck of the liner about four hundred miles off the Irish coast. The first short message which gave the news attributed the death to heart failure.

Mrs. C. M. Williamson, the well-known writer, says in a special despatch to the New York Tribune: "I think I was the last person to see Mayor Gaynor alive. . . . As I walked along the promenade deck, I saw the mayor sitting in his accustomed place. There was a smile on his face and a man just ahead of me seemed to think it was a smile of recognition. He spoke, but the mayor made no answer, and then, as I passed, I saw a different quality in that smile. It was as though some distant, gentle voice whispered to his soul and his soul was responding to a call from afar. A sense of foreboding came over me. In the warm sun of noon I seemed to feel a chill of the unknown, and only a few minutes later the ship knew the mayor had died."

A wireless despatch from Rufus Gaynor, the mayor's son, gives the following facts in connection with his father's last hours:

"My father, William Jay Gaynor, died on board the White Star liner Baltic at seven minutes past one o'clock on Wednesday afternoon. His death was due to heart failure, and he was seated in his chair when the end came. The deck steward had been with the mayor a few moments before his death and had taken his order for luncheon, the mayor marking the menu to indicate the dishes he desired. I was on the boat deck and went below at the lunch call to tell my father that his lunch was ready. He had been taking his meals in one of the staterooms, and he was seated in his chair apparently asleep. I shook him gently, but he did not respond. His trained nurse, who had been with him ten minutes previously, was summoned, and the ship's surgeon, Dr. Hopper, was called, but it was quickly apparent that he was beyond any aid.

"On the morning of his death the mayor arose at about nine o'clock, and after a hearty breakfast went on deck. He walked about the boat deck at frequent intervals, keeping in the sun, and he watched the men go through the fire drill. About ten minutes before one he descended to the promenade deck and went to his chair, remarking that he felt very well. During the voyage his health had steadily improved and his nervousness had decreased noticeably. He took a great deal of interest in the run of the ship day by day, and he was particular to know just where the Baltic was when the chart was posted in the companionway each noon."

THE LATE WILLIAM J. GAYNOR

Mayor Gaynor had become a national figure not alone because of his position as chief executive of America's metropolis, but because of his years of prominence in connection with the legal battles in which the interests of the people were a against some corporation or political ring. T act date of his birth has never been made but it is generally believed that he was b Whitestown, Oneida County, N. Y., in 185 was educated at the Whitestown Academy a tended a school conducted by the Roman C Christian Brothers at St. Louis. For a time templated entering the Catholic priesthood, b some unstated reason he severed his connectic came once more to New York.

The younger days of Mayor Gaynor shrouded in more or less mystery, and he neve that there was any particular obligation r upon him to set the public right. He did not take occasion to deny stories that were obv founded on no fact at all, and assumed the at of one who was indifferent. It is known th taught school in Boston when a very young and he was a reporter working in Brooklyn years ago while he was studying law.

His legal experience in Brooklyn brought hin prominence, and after having refused to accep nomination for mayor of Flatbush, which wa a separate municipality, Mr. Gaynor becam commissioner of police. In this capacity he instrumental in producing a new condition of a so far as excise licenses and the conduct of houses was concerned. His association with forces which were instrumental in saving up of a million dollars to the city treasury of Bro secured for him the offer of the mayoralty of city. This offer was refused, but he accept nomination for the Supreme Court on the Re ican and Independent Democratic tickets. He duly elected to that position and filled it up t time of his election as mayor of Greater New of fetters bound him for various periods. "Nine months in three pairs, and two months in five pairs of fetters." But other prisoners of the same period give fuller accounts of the horrors they endured. In an enclosure 43x30 feet, exposed to the tropical sun, nearly one hundred persons were confined. The room was without ventilation except through the cracks in the board wall and through the door. There was absolutely no attempt at cleanliness, and the sufferings of the inmates were indescribable. Altogether in both prisons his incarceration covered twenty-one months.

Terrible as were the sufferings of Mr. Judson during these cruel months, the sufferings of his young wife were, if possible, even greater, while her heroism and devotion mark her as one of earth's bravest and saintliest souls. With her own hands she built him a bamboo room outside the prison enclosure where he was allowed to remain. At this time their second child was born, and for some weeks Mrs. Judson was unable to visit the prison. When she returned she found that the house she had built for her husband had been burned and that he had been put again into the inner prison. Within a short time he was removed to the prison at Oung-Pen-la, and she followed him there. After a distressing journey by ox-cart with her two children, her husband greeted her with the despairing words: "Why have you come? I hoped you would not follow, for you cannot live here."

His fears almost proved true. His own fever, with which he had suffered at Ava, returned, and the two children were seized with small-pox. Mrs. Judson herself became ill with "spotted fever," but was forced to make the journey back to Ava to procure medicine and suitable food. She writes, in a letter to the home friends, describing these experiences: "My only anxiety now was to return to Oung-Pen-la, to die near the prison."

ANN JUDSON'S GRAVE, AMHERST, BURMA

Desperately ill for two months, Mrs. Judson at length partially recovered her strength. Through her persistent efforts Mr. Judson was at length released from prison, and they returned to Rangoon. Soon afterward they moved to Amherst, and while residing there Mr. Judson was sent to Ava to act as interpreter for the English officers.

During his absence Mrs. Judson built a small bamboo house and two schoolhouses. In one of these she gathered ten children; in the other she held Sabbath worship for her and the few native converts. In the midst of these labors she was attac with fever, and, before Mr. Judson's return, died on October 24, 1826, in thirty-seventh year of her age. Her memory is honored by a chapel erecte Oung-Pen-la, on the site of the old prison. She was not only courageous consecrated, but truly gifted. In the early years at Rangoon she had m tered the Burmese language and translated into it the catechism, the Go of Matthew, and a tract, besides translating a celebrated Burmese book i English. Ann of Ava is the story of this noble woman, Ann Hassel Judson, which has been prepared by the Missionary Education Moveme This book, peculiarly adapted for the use of young girls, is a companion t new Life of Adoniram Judson, which has been specially prepared for boys.

The bitter experiences of these young missionaries have produced bles fruit. The work, begun in the midst of so much distress, prospered at leng The Baptists of America rallied royally and unitedly for their support. C verts were increased. Mr. Judson labored indefatigably at his translation the Bible into Burmese. He made successful missionary tours. By the y 1838 there were a thousand converts organized into churches.

Mr. Judson married again, his second wife being Mrs. Sarah W. Boardm She died in 1845 on the Island of St. Helena as they were making a voyage the homeland. Mr. Judson came to America, later returning to Burmah. third wife was Emily Chubbuck, a gifted writer. Upon his return to A Dr. Judson labored at a Burmese dictionary, but his health failed and his only hope for life was declared to be a sea voyage. Within a few days after sailing, his worn body succumbed. He died April 12, 1850, and was buried at sea.

A great celebration will take place soon at Rangoon, to which pilgrims from America have already started on a "Judson Centennial Tour to the Mission Fields of Asia." Anniversaries in May, 1914, will form the climax of the centennial. Historical addresses will be made and pilgrimages conducted to Andover, Salem, Plymouth and Malden. Baptists everywhere, as well as Christians of all denominations, will unite in honoring this pioneer of the new age of missions and the noble women who shared his labors. A. H. H.

THE COURTYARD OF THE KHAN AT MOSUL

THE REMAINS OF AN ANCIENT BRIDGE

A KURDISH VILLAGE ON THE BANK OF THE TIGRIS

DOWN THE TIGRIS RIVER

BY PROFESSOR EDGAR BANKS

[Since Professor Banks's article was written in the city of gdad some months ago the hand of change has been laid the valley of the Tigris. Such changes as have not taken ce in centuries are now in progress there. From Macedonia l its imbroglio hundreds of thousands of Turks have fled Armenia and on to the Tigris valley. These Macedonian ugees are of the sturdiest and most progressive Turkish ck. If any Turk can be called modernized these Europeans st deserve that compliment. Compared with Western Euro- ns they are medieval, of course; but side by side with their atic brethren they are astonishingly modern. With them o the old land they are taking the more progressive ideas of ming and of trade which they have slowly gathered during generations of their European residence.]

IN THE mountains of Armenia, to the north of Bitlis and east of Lake Van, a little spring of pure cold water comes bubbling from the ground. A little pool is thus formed, and from e pool one tiny stream runs north, another south. ould you follow the streams as they trickle down e mountain sides, you would find that one of them comes the Tigris, the other the Euphrates. Thus e two mighty rivers of Mesopotamia begin their ng journey of fifteen hundred miles to the Per- an Gulf.

But this little spring is not the only source of the igris. There is a score of other small streams, ch with a different name, any of which might qually well be called s source. There are e Zibene Su, the Ar- hana Su, and others ith strangely sound- g names. Above iarbekir, a large wn in the moun- ins, these united treams become a ver of considerable ize, and from there n it has always orne the name of iglat or Hiddekel or igris; they are all he same name. The rabs along its shores ow call it the Diar- ekir River, from the rst large town hrough which it ows. There the river avigation begins, and he river is increased y the many small treams from the nountains in the orth. Thus for two undred miles it grows in size until it emerges into he great Assyrian plain. There again, below the uins of Nimrud, it is joined by the great Zab and ther streams until it enters the Babylonian plain nd meets the Euphrates, the river with which it ad its source.

To follow the Tigris down from one of its sources n Armenia to the Persian Gulf is a journey of more han a month and of unusual interest; few have ver accomplished it. In the course of that journey ou pass through the countries of half a score of ifferent peoples, each with customs and costumes oth strange and varying. You hear as many dif- erent tongues, and see the forms of almost as nany different religions. You find primitive peo- les, almost savages, among whom, though some of hem were civilized thousands of years ago, you take your life in your hands. You see people liv- ng just as they did in early Bible times; you pass among the ruins of the great cities of three thou- sand years ago. Probably the journey down no other river, even the Nile, is so full of varying interest.

The journey over the mountains of Armenia, following along any of the many sources of the Tigris, can be made only by horse. The paths are exceedingly rough and stony, and there are places so steep that a horse can hardly climb them. In winter time the roads are impassable, for they are buried deep with snow. The hills are infested with Kurdish brigands, and the traveler requires a military guard. Food is scarce, and sometimes the villagers along the way refuse to sell it.

In a palace of one of the Assyrian kings was found a slab sculptured with a picture of the Tigris River. On the river is a goatskin raft or kelek. The picture is 2,500 years old, but it might have been made yesterday. Though perhaps you may study the river better by riding along the shore, the more common and cheaper method of travel is by raft. At Diarbekir you will purchase about two hundred and fifty goatskins, inflate them and bind them firmly together. Upon the goatskins are laid long slim poles of mulberry trees, and upon them a little house of reed mats or of skins is built. Then you float down with the current. If it is the season of high water, you go along at a terrific speed, dodging among the rocks, apparently in constant danger of wrecking, but the skilful raftsmen always take you safely by. If it is the summer season, or the time of low water, the journey is slow and monotonous; then you travel scarcely more than a mile an hour. During the day the hot sun scorches, and the long journey of nearly a month is fatiguing. All along the way the mountains are high and barren excepting for a few scattered oaks. Villages are rare, and they are but huts of mud or stone, all joined together under one common roof. Here the Kurds and Armenians live together in constant turmoil. More conspicuous than the houses themselves are the beds of the people, raised high above the roofs on frameworks of poles.

Farther down the stream you find the Yezidis, living sometimes in huts, but more commonly in black tents like those of the Arabs of the plain. Of all the peculiar peoples of Turkey, they are the most peculiar, or the least understood. It is said that they worship the devil instead of God; they respect Satan as a deity whose power for good or evil is very great, and therefore they will never mention his name. Whenever they hear it, they cover their ears with their hands. Their religious rites are crude, perhaps immoral. Should one reject his religion, it is the duty of his friends to kill him. In habits the Yezidi is filthy; his face is hard and fierce; his hair is long. The distinguishing feature of his dress is a shirt cut low in the neck.

No less interesting are the ruins along the way. Occasionally upon a rock is an Assyrian inscription or sculpture. Ruins of old churches are perched on the mountain sides. Great arches of early Roman bridges span the rivers. Large mosques and khans, now fallen, tell of Seljukian days. The first large town down the river is Djezireh. Its houses are of stone; its old city walls and carved gateways and ruined bridges are evidences of its great age. Here Turkish or Kurdish or Armenian is seldom heard, for the language as well as the dress of the people is Arabic.

Still a few days down the river, out of the mountains and into the plain, we come to Assyria. Villages along the shore appear more frequently. There are vineyards and fields of melons. Sometimes crowds of natives collect along the shore to rob the passers-by, or if the raft is beyond their reach they fire their long guns at it, rather to frighten the passengers than to kill. But it is from these people that you obtain your food. For eggs you pay about four cents a dozen. For the same price you obtain several pounds of delicious grapes, larger than any I have seen in the markets at home, and of an excellent flavor, or a sweet watermelon. Bread, in flat, thin loaves, is sold by weight, and leben, or curded milk, may be had in abundance. Whenever a shepherd drives his flock to the river to drink, he will supply you with the rich sheep milk, all you can drink, for a trifling sum. The food along the way is cheap and good.

Nearing the ruins of the Assyrian cities, we come among still another people. Christians they call themselves; scholars call them the descendants of the ancient Assyrians, and in features and in language they resemble the people sculptured on the slabs from the palaces of old Nineveh. Directly across the river from the ruins of Nineveh is Mosul, the largest town in northern Mesopotamia. Here the raftman breaks up his raft and builds it anew and larger for the journey to Bagdad. Therefore we may rest here for a day among the Assyrians.

We land at the new stone bridge; everywhere about us is a busy scene. The water-carriers with their donkeys are crowding down to fill their skins. Herds of camels come pressing in, wading up to their knees, to drink. An Arab is scrubbing his

THE TREND OF YOUR LIFE

*A SERMON BY REV. HUGH BLACK, D.D.

TEXT: "What will ye do in the end thereof?" Jer. 5: 31

PROPHECY is the interpretation of providence. Its function is to assert and to illustrate the principles of divine government. It implies prediction, not however in the small sense of foretelling future events, but in the sense of declaring the inevitable conclusions which must issue from ascertained facts. To the prophet the will of God was never a matter of caprice, arbitrarily altering its decisions, inconsistent with itself at different times. The will of God was immutable, invariable, the same yesterday, to-day and forever. The will of God was the law of God, with the uniformity and precision of law. Prophecy begins with a statement of fact and an induction from the facts in accordance with the great moral law of God which is the law of all life. If the prophet pronounces judgment, he does so in the name of the offended law of God, stating the inevitable sequence of cause and effect.

An individual prediction was merely an illustration of the eternal principles by which the world is governed. The manner of it was not a logical inference. It was a divine intuition, a divine revelation, an inward perception of things which elude the testimony of the senses, an illumination of heart and conscience. It is an act of faith, not an inference of reason. The law of God was the test of everything, the test even of any particular prophecy. In the moral judgment of a community the prediction which he made was the drawing out of the forces at work to their necessary conclusion.

The Prophetic Vision

In Jeremiah's pronouncement of woe, the causes are laid bare which must produce the doom. There is a terrible picture of corruption. Selfishness is declared to be the motive power, and with selfishness came its satellites of cruelty and oppression and lust. The loyalties of life are lost in such a state of society. The doom which is predicted is not a calamity but judgment. The indictment of the nation is that all classes are involved in the sin and shame. Rich and poor, rulers and people, priests and prophets, their hearts are turned away from God, and their sins cry aloud for vengeance. It was a time of peace and prosperity, and no eye saw danger except the eye of the lonely seer, the watchman on the watch-tower watching for God. The people thought the prophet a morose irreconcilable, who did not know when the sun shone; a hopeless croaker of evil who had not sense to let well alone. They were content with the condition of affairs. Flatterers who called themselves prophets soothed them with pleasant dreams. Everything seemed all right at the time; nothing special was happening to the casual eye: but to the prophet a terrible and horrible thing was happening in the land. This was the most hopeless and awful thing about their whole state, that these flatterers should have such power, that the prophets should prophesy falsely, and the priests accept them and the people love to have it so. The people had from their teachers what they wanted, and would not listen to anything which shocked their good opinion of themselves. The whole state was corrupt to the heart.

It was nothing to the prophet that at this moment there seemed no sign of impending doom. He knew what must be the result. Though all seems well, what, he asks, will be the ultimate issue, that towards which such a state inevitably tends? Is it conceivable that God's holy law can fail once which has never failed since the beginning of time? Is it conceivable that this sin will be passed over when never sin in all the world has so been treated? It is fatuity, fearful self-delusion, to shut their eyes to the certain conclusion that must be. Look to the end, giddy revelers in the sunshine, what ye do in the end thereof!

To look to the end is the mark of the wise man in every region of life. He is not content with present appearance; he seeks out causes, and from causes knows something of consequences. A prudent man in business is not seduced by immediate success. He calculates what will be the probable ultimate result to his business. He looks further ahead than the one particular transaction. He will not enter into a bargain until he sees what it is likely to mean in the end. The wise statesman is never a mere opportunist, just accepting what turns up and making the best of it. He has often to do this, has often to limit himself to the practicable; he has often to seize an opportunity which comes unexpectedly; but to be a true statesman he must have more than a mere makeshift policy of using whatever happens to turn up. He has to look to the great ends in view, the great purposes of government, the ultimate issues of each step. The prudent man in every branch of activity is the man who is not easily led away by any specious attraction, but who consistently pursues an end which he has before him. To lead a shiftless, hand-to-mouth existence in any line of life is to invite ruin. The spendthrift is the man who never thinks of the future, who puts away all uncomfortable thoughts from him, and just lives in the present for the present.

In the End

Now, there is a true sense in which we should live for the present, and take no thought for the future. "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof," and also the good for that part. The man of faith will not be over-anxious and over-careful, but will live sweetly and humbly in the consciousness of the Father's love. But this disregard of the future is due to a higher regard. It is inspired by a larger end, seeking first the kingdom of God, an end which relegates all other aims to their place of secondary importance. Such living for the present is removed from the worldling's sense of it as heaven is removed from earth. The man of faith is not feverishly anxious about the things of to-morrow, because he has not given his heart to the things of to-day. His future is with God. His life will end in God. The man of the world lives his life in the present, and to-morrow can only be as to-day. He has no other life, no other source of joy reaching out to the future. The question asked of him is the question of which the conscience of man is clamant, the question suggested by all history, the very question of the prophet, "What will ye do in the end thereof?

But that is the very question to which the worldling shuts his ears. If he listened to it, if he asked himself what answer he can give, he would cease to be a worldling. The very essence of the worldly life is that it is blind to results, that it refuses to look at the end thereof. It ever prefers the present to the future, and refuses to make any sacrifice of present good for the sake of a larger future good. Self-control is one of the fruits of faith. Faith looks to the end thereof, and for the sake of that glorious end is willing if need be to give up, to suffer loss, to endure the cross for the joy set before it. The selfish life thinks only of the present, the satisfaction of present desire.

The Logic of Action

"The worldly man," says Bunyan, "for a bird in the hand." It is a marginal note which he appends to a scene in the Interpreter's House. "I saw in my dream that the Interpreter took Christian by the hand, and had him into a little room where sat two little children, each one in his chair. The name of the eldest was Passion, and the name of the other Patience. Passion seemed to be much discontented; but Patience was very quiet. Then Christian asked, What is the reason of the discontent of Passion? The Interpreter answered, The Governor of them would have him stay for his best things till the beginning of the next year; but he will have all now; but Patience is willing to wait. Then I saw that one came to Passion, and brought him a bag of treasure, and poured it down at his feet, the which he took up and rejoiced therein, and withal laughed Patience to scorn. But I beheld but a while, and he had lavished all away and had nothing left him but rags." The end thereof! Is it necessary to ask Interpreter to expound the matter, to read the meaning of the picture? Passion a figure of the men of this world; Patience a figure of the men of that which is to come. The worldly man for a bird in the hand! What are two in the bush to su What is anything compared to the pleasure present possession?

It is the true prophetic method to ask men to c sider their ways, to think of the result of action, look to their end. And we are not left in the da as to what consequences flow from particular an cedents. The great prophetic message has ev been, as St. Paul declared, that "the wrath of G is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness a unrighteousness of men." It is the task of morali of all time to point to the issues of conduct, speech as the preacher does, by tragedy as t dramatist does, by picture as Hogarth does with much power and effect as any; the plain message the wages of sin, with no decorous hiding of t baleful fruit; as Hogarth points the moral wi plain directness and terrible incisiveness in t Rake's Progress, so different from the Pilgrim Progress from which we have just quoted. T wages of sin is not always paid, as in Hogarth two great series of pictures, with open shame a disease, the maniac's cell or the dishonored grav But with the inexorableness of fate (in kind if n in degree), the pictorial sermon is true. If you that, this follows, and this—and this. What will do in the end thereof? The end of these things death.

That Which Men Set Their Hearts Upon

The word "end," when spoken about human lif means more than the mere termination, the poi where it ceases. It means an end in purpose, well as an end in time, that towards which inevitably tends because its direction is fixed. I this sense the end of a thing is that for which really exists, the result designed for it, the ultima purpose. The end in time is merely the blossomin and the fruit of the end in purpose. The end of li therefore is not death, not the stoppage of breat but the culmination of the kind of life. The end i time will only be the manifest declaration of wha the end in purpose has been. The prophet's que tion therefore can be answered without needing t wait until the end in time; for the end in purpos of your life can be revealed to you any moment a in a flash. What is the trend of your life? Wha are the things on which you have set your heart "Man's true end is to glorify God and to enjoy hi forever." What is your end? The end thereof wi be along the line of that discovery. You just nee to be true to yourself in making that discovery t know what the conclusion must be. As in Rossetti' terrible sonnet on Lost Days,

> I do not see them here; but after death
> God knows I know what faces I shall see,
> Each one a murdered self, with low last breath.
> "I am thyself—what hast thou done to me?"
> "And I—and I—thyself (lo! each one saith)
> "And thou thyself to all eternity."

The prophet appeals to experience, he speaks t conscience, he asks what we can find out withou fail, when he puts the question, "What will ye do i the end thereof?" Ask yourselves, what if th thing you have set your heart on were given you what then? You worship wealth, you long to b rich, you judge all things by the standard of money Suppose you attain to it, and get all that is implie in it, what then? You are bent upon finding pleas ure, getting the full measure of enjoyment out o life. Suppose you get the overflowing cup and drink it to the very dregs, what then? Take any of th ordinary worldly motives which move men; take your own, your own dream by night and vision by day. Suppose it comes true, what then? Take th particular seed you are assiduously sowing, suppos it has all the favor of kind fortune in sun and shower. Suppose it ripen fully, and you are blessed with harvest, what then? You must look at your life steadily and look at it whole, if you would get a true judgment of it; you must see the end as well as the beginning. If you go straight on in th way where you are, what will you come to at the last?

Is the end adequate, the end that is the mainspring of your life? It may not be evil; but is it

DAILY MEDITATION

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR

BY REV. J. H. JOWETT, D.D.

SUNDAY, September 28. Exodus 32: 15-20, 30-35. "Ye have sinned a great sin; and now I will go up unto the Lord." That was the only worthy ending of the severe indictment. Moses denounced the people's sin and betook himself to God. He exhibited their disloyalty and then hastened away to the Throne. It is in this sequence that we so commonly and pathetically fail. We denounce the sin, but we do not pray for the sinner. We are angry but we are not devout. We vent our indignation but we do not intercede. And thus it is that our anger has no power of correction. The crooked is denounced but it is not made straight. We blaze away but we accomplish nothing because we lack the holy fire of God. Moses exposed their sin and went to God.

This is the secret of successful reform. It is the secret also of all successful discipline and training. We must be as mediators, with one hand on the rebel and the other hold of God. And that is how we must correct our children; we must tell them their faults, and do the rest with God. Fault-finding is worthless unless it steeps itself in the grace of God. Lips that are mighty in prayer are also mighty in rebuke. Their speech is "always in grace, seasoned with salt." They "speak the truth in love."

MONDAY, September 29. Numbers 11: 1-9. "There is nothing at all, beside this manna, before our eyes." So said this complaining people, and they wept in their complaints. Murmuring people have a very sad, gray world. Murmuring creates a gray film over the eyes, which throws a dingy hue upon everything. Dark glasses rob the landscape of its sunshine; every feature is shadowed with gloom. The sunshine is there, but it is not seen. The film misinterprets nature's face. "Things are not what they seem."

If the eyes of the children of Israel had been free from every film of complaint what wonders they would have seen on every side! Grateful hearts see bounty everywhere. The cabbage-patch becomes a garden of Eden. Joy is in "widest commonalty spread," and grateful souls garner the joy-sheaves in every place. James Smetham once wrote a letter to a friend expressing his regret that he could not accompany him to Venice, but adding the consolation that happily "I have not exhausted the wonders of my own backyard!" But then, James Smetham's eyes were anointed with the eye-salve of grace, and he therefore saw gracious things everywhere. "There is nothing at all," cried the complaining Israelites! "Having nothing, yet possessing all things," sang the apostle Paul.

TUESDAY, September 30. Numbers 11: 10-25. "I am not able to bear all this people alone, because it is too heavy for me." Complaining people are a weary load! "Constant droppings wear away the stones," and constant murmurings wear away the patience. The folk who are "always complaining" get on our nerves, and we are nervously impoverished, and we are prone to be resentful and hasty, and to "throw up" our task. And thus it is that complaining people may despoil the moral treasures of those with whom they live. The murmurer may make the traitor.

Moses took his burden to the Lord. "It is too heavy for me." And he took it to the right place, for the one place on earth where we can lay our burdens down is at the feet of the Lord. Moses took it to the Lord in prayer. He took his over-sensitive spirit, his exasperated nerves, the temper that was becoming short and explosive, and he brought them to the Maker and Restorer of the soul. There is no nerve-cure like heavenly grace. Nothing deals with feverishness like the cooling presence of our Lord. Nothing tones a disordered temper like the breath of spiritual communion. The Lord God can defend the soul even in a desert of complaint. "God is our refuge and strength, a very present help" when the murmuring flourishes, and the voice of the complainer is heard in the land.

WEDNESDAY, October 1. Numbers 11: 16-25. "Ye have displeased the Lord." And the displeasure of the Lord is a most real and awful thing. It is the lack of our day that we so commonly conceive a God in whose character there is no wrath. His love is incapable of anger. In his holiness there is no fire. God is merely good-natured; he is not really good! He is tolerant; he is not really holy! We speak of the sunshine of his grace; but he has no thunders and lightnings. We think of the mercy-seat; we have forgotten the great white throne.

And thus our God is too often an effeminate God, and we do with him as we please. We trifle with him, and we have "no fear and no dread." Now love that cannot be angry with uncleanness is itself not clean. There is a tolerance with sin which is connivance. We can be so agreeable as to be moral traitors. There is a point at which true holiness becomes a throne of judgment; there is a point at which true love becomes a consuming fire. Just because God's love is pure it can burn; and his love is always burning in the presence of sin. God is angry with sin; and, if we only knew it, in that holy anger we should find the hope that we may some day become clean.

THURSDAY, October 2. I Kings 19: 1-8. Elijah had lost his hope. He had sat down under a juniper tree in the grip of despair. And an angel came unto him. And what did the angel say? "Arise, and eat!" And the provision was bread and water! Elijah had been neglecting common things. He had forgotten to eat. He had got "run down." He was exhausted. And the good angel brought him into remembrance of the common meal. And he ate, and his spirit came back unto him.

And so it is with thee and me. Often when we have lost our good spirits and we have begun to faint, it is because we have been going without food. Christian workers are sometimes negligent, and "put off their meals" until they are tired out. And then physical exhaustion interferes with their judgment, and they see things out of shape, or upside down, and they sit under a juniper tree in despair. "Arise, and eat!"

Or perhaps we are neglecting the ordinary meal of the bread of life. We are going in our own strength, and it soon ebbs out. And the bread of grace is waiting, the bread that feeds our faith, and hope, and love. Let us arise and eat. We shall speedily find the renewal that comes with the hidden manna, and the joy of the Lord will be our strength.

FRIDAY, October 3. Jonah 4. Here is a man angry because blessing has fallen upon his fellow men. Nineveh had been spared, and he was angry! The fire of judgment had been mercifully stayed, and he was angry! What kind of anger is this which is kindled by another man's mercies? It is unclean anger, devoid of the passion of righteousness. There is self in it, self-conceit, and therefore unhealthy resentment and pride. Things have not happened just as Jonah foretold, and even though blessing had fallen instead of cursing his pride was piqued, and in his unholy anger he requested that he might die.

This man was more concerned for personal triumph than for the triumph of grace. His own glory was of more importance than the glory of God. If he had been a modern preacher he would have been more hungry for applause than for converts, and more desirous that converts should join his church rather than become devoted followers of the Lord. It is an awful thing when the purpose of our ministry clashes with the holy purposes of God.

> But we make God's love too narrow
> By false limits of our own,
> And we magnify his strictness
> With a zeal he would not own.

SATURDAY, October 4. John 6: 5-13. "Gather up the fragments that remain." The Lord's provision is always abundantly sufficient. His resources do not fail in the long campaign. His springs do not dry up in the fierce drought. His oil does not fail nor do his lamps go out in the midnight. He never miscalculates our needs. He is startled by no emergency. He sees the entire road from beginning to end, every enemy that lurks upon it, every difficulty, and he provides according to his wisdom.

So it is his purpose that his children should walk in the strength of confidence. We are not treading an unknown road. Our Father's footprints are on the way, for he has gone before us. Nay, the truth is even more glorious than this; the Lord of promise and of power is our Companion on the pilgrimage. We are not left to footprints, we have the Presence. Grace accompanies us in the gracious God. The Lord himself is our lamp. The Lord himself is our bread. The Lord himself is our hope. The Lord himself is "our life, our way, our end." Our sufficiency is in God.

THE UNSEEN PRESENCE OF JESUS

IN THE golden prime of good Haroun al Raschid, so runs the Arabian tale, it was the caliph's custom to wander about his city by night, mixing incognito with humble folk and sharing the amusements and adventures of the poor—until some base or cruel deed was done, and then on a sudden the astonished people realized who had been standing among them, though they knew him not. So in the midst of our daily labor and pleasure and weariness, in life's common struggle and sorrow and gladness and shame, where the crowds are thickest, or where two or three are gathered together, the Great Unrecognized is beside us continually; the Commander of the Faithful is here, though often he escapes our sight.

It is a faithful saying that Christ is in the church, and the church is made by him, though often the church knows him not. In spite of our divisions and superstitions and corruptions, the Lord keeps his perpetual promise, the Shepherd has not deserted his flock. When ecclesiastical councils and synods assemble, it consoles us to remember how in each congress and conference the self-same Christ in whose name they gather is himself standing unseen in their midst; although they perchance ignore him in their disputes about his Person, or quench his Spirit in their zeal for what they deem to be his cause. So, also, when those who proclaim the Gospel open their lips, they can never speak about Christ and him crucified except in his immediate Presence. Whoever else stays away from church, he is the Auditor and the Critic of every sermon. Alas! that with so many preachers,

> Though he be there, they vision lack,
> And talk of him behind his back.

In our individual experience the same truth also finds its fulfilment. We fare through the world as pilgrims of eternity; but there walketh One beside us whom we know not, for our eyes are holden, and he comes in homely guise. To us he may appear only some chance stranger, as he seemed to the disciples journeying Emmausward—some secular person without part or lot in the Holy City. In the everyday happenings of life, as one by one they draw near and join themselves uninvited to our company, we catch no hint or token of the Real Presence. And yet this fresh duty, which meets us and daunts us, carries under its stern features the very face of Christ himself. This advancing sorrow with veiled head and somber raiment, which we cannot avoid or escape, is no one else but the Man of all sorrows and all consolations too. This hard service which claims our loyalty is pleading in tones which say, "Ye do it unto Me."—Sir J. Robertson Nicoll, LL.D., in the British Weekly.

Fire Sweeps Health Resort

THIRTY-TWO blocks of the eastern section of Hot Springs, Ark., were totally destroyed by fire on September 5. The fire originated in a negro dwelling three or four blocks east of the government reservation, and near the Army and Navy Hospital. It swept southeast, away from the hospital and reservation, for an hour, when the wind, which was blowing a gale, shifted in direction and carried it again in the direction of the business section. By heroic efforts of the Hot Springs and Little Rock Fire Departments, the fire was kept from turning back, but there was no checking the flames in the direction the wind was carrying them, and building after building was destroyed in the space of a few minutes. Among those that went down in the flames were the city's light, water, and power plants, the county court house, the Park, Jefferson, Princess, and Moody Hotels, the city high school, Iron Mountain Railroad station and shops, Ozark Sanitarium, People's Laundry, Crystal Theater, and Bijou Rink, besides a hundred or more business buildings and many residences, including some of the best in the city. No fatalities were reported. According to a statement made by J. S. Speed, manager of the Arkansas Actuarial Bureau, the property loss was $2,250,000, with the insurance loss $1,500,000.

A Hindu Wedding in London

TWO of the most powerful native ruling families of British India were united when Princess Indira, only daughter of the reigning Maharajah (Gaekwar) of Baroda, was married in London, a short time ago, to Prince Jitendra, son of the Maharajah of Cooch-Behar. The initial ceremony, which took place in the strictest privacy, was performed at the hotel where the young bride had been staying and was accompanied by the customary Hindu rites, as, prior to the marriage, the Princess Indira had been received into the Brahman faith, the creed of the bridegroom. Subsequently a civil marriage was performed at a registry office.

The greatest interest had been aroused in the attachment of the couple, whose wedding had first been fixed to take place in India on May 5, but was suddenly broken off, after which the bride and her parents sailed from Bombay for England, and were followed by Prince Jitendra. It is understood that the Gaekwar finally yielded to the importunities of his daughter and consented to the marriage, at which, however, he was not present. He and the bride's brother, Shrimai Jaisingrao, are well known in the United States, where the latter studied at Harvard. Her mother, the Maharani, is a woman of advanced ideas, and is the author of a book on the position of women in India.

Santo Domingo Again in Trouble

DURING the early part of September a serious revolutionary movement was started in the Republic of Santo Domingo. Though at first it was not considered that the disturbance would reach sufficient proportions to endanger American property within a few days, it became necessary to take active steps for the protection of American citizens. On September 8 the American vice-consul in charge at Puerto Plata, the center of the revolution, informed the State Department that Dominican gunboats were firing upon the town and that the property of foreigners was without protection. As far as the naval authorities at Washington are informed, the Dominican navy consists of two or three converted yachts armed with six-pounders and machine guns. Though this does not sound very formidable, there is no doubt that they could cause great damage to the unfortified town, especially since it is largely of wooden construction. The cruiser Des Moines was immediately ordered from the Guantanamo coaling station to Puerto Plata to restore order and protect the foreigners.

James M. Sullivan, the newly appointed minister to Santo Domingo, held long conferences with Secretary of State Bryan and started immediately for his post. The cause of the revolution is not definitely understood so far, but it is supposed to be due to the ambition of Horacio Vasquez to assume the presidency by force of arms after having been defeated by constitutional methods. It is understood that Minister Sullivan is exerting the influence of the United States to the support of President Bordas, who was elected last spring by one of the fairest and most general elections ever held in the republic.

Ex-King Manuel Wedded

ON SEPTEMBER 4 ex-King Manuel of Portugal was married to Princess Augustine Victoria of Hohenzollern at Sigmaringen-on-the-Danube. The wedding was conducted with full royal ceremony, despite the young king's exile from his kingdom. There were upward of one hundred guests. Besides the members of the Hohenzollern family, about twenty royal highnesses were present. Principal among them were Queen Mother Amelie of Portugal, the Prince of Wales, representing King George of England; the Duke and Duchess of burg; the Infante and Infanta Carlos of Spain, representing the king queen of Spain; the Duke of Genoa and the Duke and Duchess of Aosta, representing the Italian royal family; the Duke and Duchess of Vendome and Duke of Montpensier, representing the Bourbon family, formerly ruling France; the Duke of Oporto, uncle of King Manuel; Prince and Princess Her XXXIII of Reuss; the Grand Duke and Grand Duchess of Baden, and seve members of the Württemberg royal family and of the Portuguese royal ho

It was in the form of a mas given at Meriden under the patronage of Mrs. Woodrow Wilson and her dau ter Eleanor, who took one of the leading parts. The dramatist was Per Mackaye, author of Jeanne D'Arc and The Scarecrow.

A Prehistoric Temple Found in Sardinia

FROM Milan, Italy, recent despatches bring the announ ment that "discoveries of immense importance to o knowledge of prehistoric times are being made in Southe Sardinia under the auspices of the Italian Ministry of Publ Instruction. Beneath the ancient Christian Church of St. Anastasia has be found a large subterranean temple, whose date reaches back fully one tho sand years before Christ. The temple is constructed of huge unhewn mass of stone, which enshrine a sacred fountain called 'the Fount of Pains,' whi the explorers found still running. Sacred images were found intact, and t mural decorations are well preserved. These indicate the worship of t Earth Goddess and the prevalence of bull worship, as there is a ponderou statue in basalt of a male divinity with a bull's head.

"The most interesting of all the finds, on account of the considerable modif cation it is bound to effect in the scientific ideas hitherto accepted regardin the relative origin of copper and bronze in the Mediterranean civilization, the uncovering at Ortu Commidue alongside of some ancient copper mines of great prehistoric foundry with all the furnaces for smelting and molds fo casting just as they were abandoned thousands of years ago in the transitio period between the ages of stone and bronze. The methods then obtaining i the Sardinian foundry industry, as here demonstrated, were most ingenious.

Maine Election Results Widely Discussed

ON SEPTEMBER 8 the Third Congressional District of th State of Maine elected John A. Peters, a Republican, by plurality of 589 over William R. Pattangall, a Democrat, an 8,616 over Edward M. Lawrence, a Progressive. This resul is proclaimed a victory for protection, and is looked upon by Republicans a an indication that the party, which was divided by the Progressive movement is working toward unity.

"It means that the reaction has already set in," said Senator Gallinger o New Hampshire, Republican, "and foreshadows the doom of the Underwoo Tariff Bill, and the disappearance of the Bull Moose vote." "The result i the Maine district is an emphatic reminder that this is a protective tariff coun try," asserted James R. Mann of Illinois, Republican House leader.

Secretary of State Bryan voiced the Democratic sentiments as follows "The Maine election, while disappointing in the failure to elect our Democrati candidate, who is a very able and progressive Democrat, is not at all discouraging when we consider the figures. The Democratic candidate received within about one hundred of the vote cast for the President last fall. This is a remarkably good showing when we consider that it was a special election. The Republican victory was due primarily to the return of a large number of Progressives to the Republican party. At least the Republican vote gained something over six thousand and the Progressives lost that much, as compared with the returns last fall."

An Argument for All-Steel Trains

AN ALL-STEEL train probably saved scores of lives when a Pennsylvania Railroad flyer was ditched a few weeks ago near New Madison, Ohio. Thirty-five persons were injured, though only three, it was believed, fatally. Eighteen were rushed to a hospital at Richmond, Ind., for immediate treatment.

Running at a terrific speed to make up lost time, the fast train struck a defective rail on the Columbus & Indianapolis division of the Pennsylvania Railroad, about fifty feet from the approach to a small steel bridge. The train ran along the crossties until the engine hit one side of the bridge, tore it from its foundation, and fell with it half a dozen feet to the creek bed. Six steel coaches were flung to the other side of the track and turned over in a cornfield, the first near the edge of the little stream. None of the steel coaches was much damaged, and with comparatively little repair all can be replaced in service. Injuries to passengers were caused principally by falling and being thrown about in the coaches, though some were cut by flying glass. Had wooden cars been in use the death list would undoubtedly have been large, and hundreds would have been injured.

Canada Deports Thaw as Undesirable

THE adventures of Harry K. Thaw, the slayer of Stanford White, since his escape from the Matteawan State Asylum some weeks ago have attracted the attention of two continents. On crossing the line into the Dominion of Canada Thaw was arrested and detained at the little town of Coaticook, Quebec. There followed during the next three weeks a campaign of legal moves and countermoves in which legal representatives of the State of New York and the immigration authorities of the Dominion of Canada and the expert legal advisers engaged by Thaw were pitted against each other. Each side was, at different stages of the proceedings, confident of success and the laurels undoubtedly rested with the Thaw forces until the Hon. C. F. Doherty, the Canadian Minister of Justice, suddenly took action. This action consisted of sending members of the Dominion Police to remove Thaw from the detention room of the railway station at Coaticook and transport him across the international boundary into the State of Vermont. Accompanied by a few newspaper reporters Thaw found himself set free in the United States. His freedom was limited to three hours, however, for upon crossing into New Hampshire he was again placed under arrest and at the time of writing it was anticipated that upon the receipt of the proper papers he would be returned to the New York State authorities and taken back to Matteawan.

THE NEW PALACE OF PEACE

THE ceremonial opening of the Peace Palace at The Hague a few weeks ago marked the beginning of the second great era of the world movement toward international peace. ıe first era of the peace agitation began with the ıgue Conference of 1899 and the creation of a rmanent court of international arbitration. New petus was given the thought of the world toward ace when in 1903 Andrew Carnegie was inspired give $1,500,000 for the building and mainten- ce at The Hague of an international court house. ıe government of the Neth- lands added $275,000 to is sum, but it was not until)05 that a suitable site was osen. Since then all the)rld has watched with un- ıgging interest the progress construction.

An English writer says: High above the sand dunes, here winds the famous old)ad that leads from The ague to the kurhaus at gay :heveningen, rise the red- ·ick walls and high-pitched)ofs of the world's great alace of Peace. A stately :ctangular building faced ith white stone, adorned ith lofty towers, and ·owned by a belfry, this)urthouse of the nations ands on a corner of the orgvliet, once part of the)yal park lands of Floris V. lodeled in the domestic style f old Dutch architecture, ut with many composite fea- ıres that faithfully reflect ıe international character f the building, the palace is esigned on the lines of a igh court of justice rather nan of a parliament house."

The Palace, as completed, oes not represent any precise style of architecture, ut it is regarded as one of the most impres- ive modern buildings in Europe. It forms roughly square of eighty-five yards by eighty-six yards, nd incloses a beautiful formal garden. On three ides the building constitutes the Court House, and n the fourth or west side are the quarters of the ibrary. The façade of the second floor is adorned vith statues, the figures representing Science, Agriculture, Art, Navigation, Commerce, Industry, Conscience, Eloquence, Will-Force, Study, Authority, Humanity, Constancy and Wisdom. The main windows of the great court are guarded by statues of Justice and Law, and over the central gable above the main entrance stands a figure of Peace.

The statuary, however, is not confined to the symbolic. Four men have been honored by busts. These are Hugo Grotius, who has been called the pioneer of international law; King Edward VII, Sir Randall Cremer, and William T. Stead, the peace leader, who perished in the ill-fated Titanic.

The great court is an imposing hall about seventy-four feet long by forty feet in width and rising to the full height of the palace. At the rear, facing the bench or presiding officer's stand, is an enormous arched stained-glass window. To one side of it is a draped figure of Justice and to the other Truth. Over the throne is a huge oil painting, a gift of France. To the left of the great hall are the arched galleries for the use of the public. The library, which occupies the two stories to the west of the quadrangle, consists of a reading-room, lecture room, and central office, and many rooms for study, while above are the steel book compartments.

Many nations have made gifts to the palace, one of the most interesting being that of Greece. It is a white marble copy of the famous throne found at Knossos, Crete, which was supposed to have been the throne of King Minos.

The building materials of the Peace Palace came from many countries. The brick, which is the chief component, came from the famous fields near Leyden, while the hard white sandstone used for trimming is from French quarries, and the wood used for flooring and paneling is largely from Austria. The granite constituting the base of the walls was presented by the governments of Norway and Sweden. The Italian Government presented the marble which decorates the interior of the corridors, and the grand marble staircase is a gift from the city of The Hague. The stained-glass windows are the gifts of the Dutch Government and Great Britain, while France has sent not only the painting which is the most striking decoration of the main hall, but many of the tapestries and minor decorations. There are vases of precious materials from Russia, Hungary, and Austria. The groups of statuary in marble and bronze which ornament the first landing of the great staircase are gifts of the United States. The beautiful rosewood and satinwood paneling of the Administrative Council Chamber came from Brazil, and there are gifts of silk cartoons and vases from China and Japan. Rare woods from San Salvador line many of the chambers. Turkey's gift is a wonderful carpet. The clock in the great tower is Switzerland's tribute, and the grille work of the main entrance was presented by Belgium. Germany's gift is the great front entrance to the grounds.

THE COMPLETED PEACE PALACE AT THE HAGUE, HOLLAND

J. SIMMS, THE UNHEROIC

BY ARTHUR K. AKERS

A Story Complete in This Issue

I

A FIRE engine clattered around the corner and swept down the crowded street in a thunder of hammering hoofs and mad whirring of gongs. Half-way in the block a child suddenly ran out into its path, realized her danger, and stood motionless in terror. Without an instant's hesitation, the driver leaned far back in his seat, tugged fiercely at one rein, and headed his horses straight toward a telephone pole on the sidewalk. Onlookers turned away swiftly that they might not see, and somewhere a woman screamed piercingly. But the expected crash did not come. The little girl recovered enough presence of mind to dart aside and the great machine only brushed the curbing as, careening on two wheels, it was swung back into the roadway and was blotted from view by its own trailing smoke.

Simms and I had seen it all from our seats in his office on the second floor of the City Hall. He turned to me with his mild eyes aglow. "Ah, that's something like it!" he exclaimed. "That fellow had a chance and he rose right to it. His work throws such things in his line of work; but for the rest of us there isn't any show. There's no heroism in these humdrum lives of ours."

I gave a nod which he took for encouragement. "Just imagine me, Julius Simms," he pursued, "doing anything like that. It isn't in this job of city bacteriologist."

I admitted that it looked unlikely. To begin with, his appearance and manner of life were against it. By common consent, heroes are always tall, dark, decisive, and in love with the beautiful girl on the frontispiece. Simms was short and slight, his hair was of the color and consistency of tow, his myopic eyes peered out through thick glasses; there was a little stoop in his shoulders already, and he had a way of hesitating in his speech that betokened a hesitating mind. But the Girl was there. Simms had married her the year after he got out of Columbia with his B.S. and the prospect of his present position. Those who so kindly evolve the scientific theories and tables of income and outgo by which we may most profitably conduct our lives and marriages would say that there was where J. Simms made an economic error. Perhaps: but they haven't seen the light that comes on the little bacteriologist's face when he speaks of her. That light is as old as the race of man, and a poet once gave it a name. But the Girl was not his only mistake; there were two others, and the second one was four years old and unable to walk yet. Doctors had come and gone, and the last had said there was one man who could help. But he was in Vienna, and a city employee's children don't go to Europe for treatment—not unless their father is at least an alderman. A great many things are possible on an alderman's salary of $10 a board meeting that are utterly out of the question on the mere twelve hundred a year of a bacteriologist.

Moreover, that twelve hundred seemed destined to remain unchanged for many years to come. There had been correspondence with Johns Hopkins, a tentative offer, hopes, a withdrawal of the proposal, and a return of that unrelieved vista of the twelve hundred and the little helpless legs.

II

Early autumn and typhoid came to town that year hand in hand. The cases were badly scattered at first and the source of the infection was difficult to locate. At length the water supply was suspected, but the officials of the water company were prominent citizens, respectable members of the community. They denied the charge absolutely and issued a statement from a "distinguished physician" declaring that he had analyzed L——'s drinking water and found it the purest in the State. But a few malcontents among the lower classes, who had lost members of their families through the fever, were not satisfied with the company's assertions. They and the Board of Health demanded that the city have its own tests made. So one morning Simms found at his laboratory bottles of this water, also samples of milk from two dairies that had been delivering in the worst afflicted sections. After the first five days he had grave suspicions of both milk and water. And as the confirming cultures gradually pointed toward the nature of the bacilli in them an uneasiness began to run through certain circles. The morning of the last day Simms had allotted for the completion of the tests came, and he bent over the small glass plates without consciousness that in a room over a saloon on a side street near by a conference concerning him was going on. One party to it was Mike Corrigan, who governed the city to suit himself and a few "conservative interests," through the pleasant and harmless little fiction of a mayor and board of aldermen; the other was a gentleman from these conservatives.

"Look here, Corrigan!" he was saying; "of course you know that that pure water report of ours was—er—slightly—hem—amended. The fact is—er—the drainage area of our main reservoir is not all under our control, and to put it so would require a great deal of money, would—hem—impair our dividends noticeably for a year or two. Next year we hope to do something toward remedying this, but for us to go to that expense now would—er—seriously embarrass not only our dividends but the sale of our new bond issue."

The New Tariff Bill

WITH a feeling of relief the country learned on September 9 that the long debate on the Tariff Bill in the United States Senate was at an end, and that the bill had been passed by a vote of 44 to 37. It was immediately returned to the House, to go into the hands of a Joint Conference Committee for the finishing touches. Before this issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD reaches our readers, these legislative labors may have been concluded and the bill may have received the executive approval.

While a number of changes have been made by the Senate, the more important provisions in the Tariff Bill, as it came from the House, have been retained, including free sugar and wool. The Senate changes have been in the general direction of a further downward revision. Taken as a whole, the measure as it now stands is a 26 per cent. average tariff as against a 42 per cent. average tariff under the old law which it supersedes.

It would be premature at this stage to speculate upon the effect of the new Tariff Bill upon the general business welfare of the country. That it is satisfactory to the administration can be gathered from the tenor of the statement given out by President Wilson after it passed the Senate. In glowing words he congratulated that body on the event as the triumphant close of "a fight for the people and for free business, which has lasted a long generation," and expressed his gratification at being "connected with the government of the nation at a time when such things could happen, and to have worked in association with men who could do them."

Now that the thing is accomplished, let us hope that it will justify those bright anticipations and that business generally may soon adjust itself to the new conditions. There is no ground for apprehending any serious disturbance of the equilibrium of trade. During the long wait the manufacturing and business interests have been preparing for the event, and the changes have therefore been largely discounted.

To the great mass of our population, the workers and consumers, the new tariff holds out the reasonable expectation that it may ultimately operate to reduce the cost of living. In this hope they should not be disappointed. But results must not be looked for too quickly. If, when all the troubles of adjustment are over and the new tariff has begun to work smoothly, it meets reasonable expectations and fairly equalizes its benefits, all the anxiety and patient labor of the last few months will have been more than repaid.

When Sin Becomes Ridiculous

IT MAY seem a fine thing, particularly to younger minds, to have two automobiles, a well-furnished New York apartment, and a suite of rooms in a fashionable suburban hotel, with all manner of spending money for odds and ends. But the most adventurous youngster would scarcely consider pleasantly the circumstance of having a thousand circulars describing him posted in public places throughout the country, offering $500 for his arrest as an embezzler.

These two experiences came with rapid succession recently into the life of a young New York cashier. He received a salary of $20 a week and engaged a chauffeur at about the same wage. He paid $115 a week for a suite in an exclusive hotel, and made other expenditures to match. But that part only lasted a couple of months. How long a time he will spend as a fugitive, how he will live while in flight, and what will happen to him when captured are still matters of conjecture.

But isn't it all ridiculous? The devil is, after all, a very stupid liar. It would seem that a young man of ordinary intelligence, enough to earn $20 a week as a cashier, ought to have been able to see the lies which were in these devil's promises he followed.

You will not be tempted in the same way he was. But remember, no matter how reasonable your temptation may seem, it is after all just as ridiculous as his. He did not see how crazily foolish his temptations were till the crash came. So you will not see how foolish your temptation is till later, perhaps years later, perhaps in another world. But the folly of it will be revealed at last. Do not yield; do not take that first step, which leads so fast to deeper and deeper wrong.

Folly and sin are often used synonymously and interchangeably in the Bible. In the stress of the temptation you may for a moment think you do not care about being good. But nobody wants to be a fool. There is a straight, clear, wise, safe path for every day. It is the path of honor, of service, of righteousness, of faith. But it is also the path of wisdom. "Her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace."

Mrs. Pankhurst's Visit

IT IS announced that Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst, the leader of militant suffragism in England, is to visit the United States next month, and that she will lecture in New York, Boston, Chicago, and other cities. While the particular type which she represents has never had any encouragement here, there are intimations that her visit will probably be made an occasion for demonstrations of militancy of the character to which she has been accustomed abroad. Were anything of this sort to be attempted, it would be most unfortunate for the cause of suffrage in America. Violent tactics, wild speeches, and the Pankhurst "policy of action" have given the suffrage a setback in England that can hardly be overcome in a generation; whereas here, a conservative and dignified course of campaign has won the vote for women in a good-sized group of States and promises to win still more. The contrast is so sharp and the results so widely different, that it would hardly seem to be necessary to warn the women of America against the kind of militancy of which Mrs. Pankhurst is the high priestess and chief exponent. Window-smashing, hunger-strikes and similar strenuous methods of winning the suffrage are not applicable to the situation here, and their advocacy would not be tolerated by any audience of intelligent American women.

Science and Immortality

EPOCH-MAKING is the only term that can apply to the remarkable address of Sir Oliver Lodge before the British Association in Birmingham, an outline of which we give elsewhere. Coming from one who is acknowledged as being among the world's foremost scientists, it has the effect of a bugle-call for a complete change of attitude as between science and faith. He has shown that they need no longer be antagonists; that they can walk side by side and hand in hand with equal zeal in the great search for divine truth. But Sir Oliver has even gone beyond this. He has reached a po where he feels that "occurrences now regarded occult can be examined and reduced to order by methods of science," and is convinced, as a scient that "personality persists beyond bodily deat But "the methods of science," he declares, "are the only way of arriving at truth." He holds the hope that, through the co-operation of scie and faith, we may yet attain a clearer understa ing of this larger existence. The whole addres a masterpiece of reverent and eloquent scholarsh which every Christian, and, indeed, all thought people, may read with edification and appreciati It marks the ascent of science to heights it l never reached till now, but which have been fan iar to the spiritual-minded of all the ages.

The Death of Mayor Gaynor

IN THE death of William J. Gaynor, Mayor New York, who succumbed to heart failure September 10, while on a voyage to Europe, the passed away one of the most active figures metropolitan public life. He was a country b with few advantages, but he had those sterli qualities of character that make good men and e cient citizens, and when after a struggle he beg his career as a young lawyer some thirty-eight yea ago, his energy and efficiency soon brought advan ment. By sheer grit and dogged industry, add to a natural aptitude for grasping opportuniti the country boy mounted the ladder of success st by step. Journalist, counselor, Supreme Cou judge, and ultimately mayor of New York, he was line for still higher promotion. Twice he declin a nomination for governor of the Empire Stat

Mr. Gaynor had the reputation of being eccentr and dogmatic, and these temperamental peculiar ties were probably accentuated by failing health recent years. He was kindly at heart, a go friend and a sturdy foe; a man who, whatever h failings, had many fine traits of character and host of friends.

Turkey on Treaty-Breaking

IN THE great game of diplomacy, it has fr quently been demonstrated that "the irreconci able Turk" is a match for the European Power Profiting by the misfortunes of Bulgaria Turke seized and re-occupied Thrace and Adrianople. I vain have the Powers admonished the Porte that would be well to observe the terms of the Treaty o London. Turkey retorts by a series of argument which have the quality of logic, at least. She re calls the seizure of Bosnia and Herzegovina b Austria, and refers to Italy's appropriation of ar other province. She points out that treaty-breakin is the familiar occupation of all the governments o Europe, and she claims the right to exercise th same privilege. To give up now the possession she has retaken, she declares, would disturb th Balkan equilibrium. Besides, Bulgaria broke th Berlin Treaty by annexing Rumelia, while Rouma nia, Greece and Servia have defied all convention by grasping territory which Bulgaria, driven into corner, could not retain. The Ottoman Empire ha the same right as the others to profit by so fortunat a situation. And, lest the Powers should wish fur ther convincing reason, Turkey is willing to submi the question regarding Thrace and Adrianople to plebiscite, in which, it assures them, Bulgari would not receive a twentieth part of the vote.

General Notes

—LAST YEAR the public school enrolment of the whole country was 17,813,852. This fall it is increased by a quarter million at least. New York City has 800,000 enrolled school children 85,000 or one-sixth of whom are on short-time work on account of lack of seating accommodation, and this although 9,000 more seats have been added this fall.

—NEW YORK is again discussing the question of stage morality, with special reference to certain plays which are to be submitted to the Grand Jury, public performances meanwhile being suspended until that body decides whether the plays are such as to offend metropolitan ideas of decency or not. The incident has again brought to the front the suggestion of a qualified official censor, to pass upon all plays before they can be presented to the public.

Monument to Martyred Firemen

THE occasion of the forty-first annual convention and Fire Exposition of the International Association of Fire Engineers at the Grand Central Palace, New York City, was fitting time for the dedication of the monument to e firemen who had lost their lives in the discharge duty. Seven thousand fire fighters, including e city force, delegations from most of the cities of e United States and Canada, and one thousand e chiefs, representing many of the great cities of e world, marched to Riverside Drive and One undredth Street, where the monument is situated. ne monument is in the form of a votive table venty-five feet high and eight feet deep. It rests a high foundation flanked by two marble groups presenting Duty and Sacrifice. A broad flight of eps leads from the Drive to a plaza from which vo flights of steps lead to the sides of the monuent. The monument is of Knoxville marble, and e plaza of vitrified brick. The total cost of the emorial, raised by public subscription, was $90,500.

bears this inscription: "To the men of the ire Department of New York City who died at the ll of duty, soldiers in a war that never ends, this emorial is dedicated by the people of a grateful ty." On the other face of ne tablet is a bas-relief, ineteen feet long and eight eet high, representing the ash of a horse-drawn engine a fire. Under this a large nask spouts a stream of wa- er into a fountain basin. bove this is this inscription: To the heroic dead of the ire Department." On the peakers' stand on the occaion of the unveiling were Borough President George IcAneny, Fire Commissioner ohnson, Fire Chief John Kenlon, Chief Arthur R. Dyer of the London Fire Brigade; J. Meler, Chief of Fire Service of Amsterdam; Borough President Cromwell nd others. Mr. Jesse Isidor Straus, whose father and nother went down on the Titanic, made the presentaion speech, saying among ther things: "The purpose f the monument is twofold. First, it is evidence of a recollection on the part of those who survive that they may in some slight degree appreciate he sacrifice of those who gave their lives; and second, t serves as an inspiration to hose soldiers whose next attle may be their last. President McAneny accepted the monument, saying: "It is indeed a grateful city that receives this memorial. You not only have honored our men, but you have given us another monument which adds to the dignity of New York City. I am proud that the day chosen for making this gift is the day on which we have with us the fire chiefs of the world. I am glad that they may go back to their own countries and tell them of New York City's gratitude to its firemen." The monument was unveiled by four little girls whose fathers had perished fighting fires. If any persons in the world deserve a monument of stone, it is the firemen, the volunteers of the past, and the paid men of the present. Theirs is a life of perpetual peril and sacrifice for the property and lives of others. They not only go into danger and death, but they do it with an appetite. Great heroes they are in imitation of Christ, and an example to the living in all callings.

Hereby perceive we the love of God, because he laid down his life for us; and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren. (I John 3: 16.)

UNVEILING THE MONUMENT TO THE FIRE HEROES OF NEW YORK

Child Dies for Dolls

ANNIE KLEINHOEFFER, five years old, living on the upper East Side of New York City, was the proud possessor of a family of four dolls. They had soiled so many white dresses that she spent the better part of the other afternoon in washing them. When the little garments had been passed through the blueing water and the wringer just as she had seen her mother do, Annie went to the rear fire escape to pin her family wash to the clothesline, which runs over pulleys to a pole in the yard. She was so little that she had to climb on the railing of the fire escape to reach the line, and in doing so she slipped and fell to her death below. How little girls love dolls! It is no accident that they should. It is the maternal instinct that is the crown of womanhood and the hope and glory of the race. The tragedies that are the result of this high instinct are the most lamentable, and are mysteries that must be solved in the next world. The fall of this fair child caring for her dolls illustrates this truth:

Truly as the Lord liveth, and as thy soul liveth, there is but a step between me and death. (I Sam. 20: 3.)

Bride To-day, Widow To-morrow

MISS NELLIE SHERIDAN, daughter of the late General Phil Sheridan, was a bride on the night of September 3, and on the evening of the next day she was a widow in mourning. Miss Sheridan, who had been postmistress at Somerset, Ohio, for twenty-five years, resigned her position to become the bride of Mr. T. C. Wilson. The day after the wedding, as they were about to start on a trip to Florida, the bridegroom became suddenly ill and died. This is the story of human life with its laughs and its cries, its weddings and its funerals. How many have the sad experience of passing so swiftly from the fragrance of the orange bloom to the nightshade and the cypress! There must be some other world where the hopes, ambitions, plans, and loves so rudely interrupted here shall have their continuation and full fruition. Yes, the Bible tells us of such, and Christ by his life and messages has assured us of it. The bride swept so suddenly into widowhood, and all who have had loved ones rudely taken away must listen with comfort to this voice from heaven:

And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying. (Rev. 21: 4.)

Beetles Threaten Historic Roof

THE roof of Westminster Hall in London was almost wrecked by a tiny beetle whose ravages have recently been discovered, and whose damage is now being repaired. The original structure was built by William Rufus in 1097. Three hundred years after Richard II replaced by a single span a roof which was originally built with a single nave and side span. For five hundred years this roof has continued to be one of the largest roofs unsupported by pillars in the world. What did the beetles care for so large a roof or with one so hoary with age? It only pleased them the more to feed on that kind of material. These pests are a type of the beetles of the soul which gnaw at its timbers and threaten its destruction, and sometimes crawl into the Christian Church to eat away its roof. The little whisperings, and criticisms, and slanders; the little jealousies and malices, the beginnings of wrong in thought or action, the slightest variation from duty, the little sins are the beetles that quietly, steadily grind up the timbers of the noblest individual character, and of the most sacred institutions among men. Fortunately the damage can be repaired by the One who was a carpenter in this world, and the purified, completed soul may realize the meaning of the apostle's words:

Ye are God's building. (I Cor. 3: 9.)

Money Gifts to Employees

A LEADING carpet manufacturing company in this country made its fifth profit-sharing distribution among its employees the other day. It paid out $82,000 to 3,500 employees, according to the length of their service. Those who had worked for the firm for ten years received 10 per cent. of their earnings in the past six months, and those who had been employed from five to ten years five per cent. on their earnings for the same period. The first profit-sharing distribution of this company was made on September 1, 1911, and since then the share of the profits distributed among the employees has been $342,000. In September, 1911, 1,500 employees shared in $50,000; on March 1, 1912, 2,500 employees received $65,000; on September 1, 1912, 3,100 employees shared in $70,000; and last March there were 3,300 recipients of $75,000. Two days after the last profit-sharing payments were made by the carpet company $150,000 were distributed to 150 employees of a business house of South Bend, Ind. George Wyman left his estate to his widow, requesting her at her death to bequeath his fortune to the employees of his establishment. Accordingly, on September 3 $150,000 was distributed, not according to the length of service, but where it would do the most good. The gifts were from $50 to several thousands of dollars each. The profit-sharing idea is as wise as it is just. It yields a fairer return of the product of industry to the workingman, and also insures a service of increased interest and efficiency. While there are many employers of labor who are just and generous with their employees, there are others who are small and unjust in their treatment of employees, and might read with profit these words of Moses:

Thou shalt not defraud thy neighbor, neither rob him; the wages of him that is hired shall not abide with thee all night until the morning. (Lev. 19: 13.)

A New Gem Discovered

A NEW precious stone has been discovered in German East Africa and has been heralded as worthy of high place among the decorative gems by the European jewelers who have examined the specimens. A recent London despatch says: "Although Berlin despatches state that Emperor William has been much attracted by the new gem, which has been called heliodore, English dealers do not believe that it is likely to rival the better known varieties of precious stones. The Kaiser has had seven heliodore stones set with diamonds and pearls and made into a cross for the empress. The chief characteristic of heliodore is that it changes color, being a golden yellow in daylight and green by artificial light." A member in making a speech in the United States Senate the other day against an advance duty on precious stones took out of his pocket a string of jewels worth $78,000. But neither his object lesson nor speech prevented the advance. Jewels beautiful and valuable are used in the Bible as symbols of precious souls, prized by heaven.

And they shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels; and I will spare them, as a man spareth his own son that serveth him. (Mal. 3: 17.)

THE CRY FOR HELP*

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

"MOSES heard the people weeping, every man at the door of his tent" (verse 10). The Israelites took that way of bringing their grievances before God. It was their custom thus to stand at the times of worship in the Tabernacle, which, being only a tent 30x15 feet, was not large enough to hold the two millions which they numbered. In modern phrase, we would say the people wept because they were "homesick" for Egypt. They thought of the cabins in which they had dwelt, and compared them with the inadequate tents which they now had. They thought of the succulent vegetables which they had eaten in Egypt: the onions, the cucumbers and the melons, and compared with them the manna which had become monotonous to them, even to loathing. Servitude in Egypt seemed preferable to them rather than the weary journey to the Promised Land. The trouble with them was, they thought only of their present discomfort; they had only a short vision. They were proving themselves incapable of the longer vision of ownership and a national existence with the great God as their protector and ruler. No wonder that the anger of Jehovah was kindled greatly and that Moses was displeased.

"I am not able to bear all this people alone." (v. 14.) So spoke Moses to God as he prayed in the Tabernacle while the people were crying aloud in their tent doors. Moses felt so burdened that he told God he would rather die than live. For once Moses was a coward. How many men and women have been cowards since Moses, and instead of quitting themselves like men or like truthful Christians, have prayed to die. Even Luther once became so discouraged in his work of reformation that he prayed to die. His beloved associate, Melancthon, came in upon him with this note of cheer: "Take courage, the children are praying for us," for on his way Melancthon had overheard the prayers of the children for Luther and himself. Luther's courage was thus renewed and he went forward in the strength of those prayers. Ah! but there was no one to pray for Moses, and so Moses discouraged himself in God!

"Gather unto me seventy men . . . and bring them into the tent of meeting (the Tabernacle) . . . and I will come down and talk with thee there" (verses 16, 17). That was a wonderful answer to Moses' prayer of unfaith. But God lovingly and forgivingly dealt with him according to the measure of his need rather than his shortcomings. And Moses' burden was laid upon the shoulders of seventy of the choicest men in all Israel. "They shall bear the burden with thee" (verses 16, 17, 24, 25). No doubt this was the origin of the Sanhedrin, which for centuries was the ruling assembly of the Israelites, also of the boards of elders, stewards, deacons and trustees in our present church polity. In the light of this, all such officers should feel that they have a high commission and a most sacred trust.

"Sanctify yourselves to-morrow, and ye shall eat flesh" (verse 18). So God mercifully answered the prayers of complaint uttered by the people in their tent doors.

"And there went forth a wind from Jehovah and brought quails from the sea, and let them fall by the camp" (verse 31). And there was a pile of them, covering three miles square, lying three feet deep. (See verse 31. A day's journey was three miles and a cubit measured eighteen inches.) But the people received God's gift of flesh with greediness rather than thankfulness. One homer (one pint) was the portion of manna specified by God for each person to gather daily, but those who gathered least of the quails took to themselves ten times that amount, which, being more than they could eat, they spread out to dry for future use. Their distrust and disobedience thus shown angered God, and he smote the people with a great plague, which was no doubt the direct result of overeating—acute indigestion we call it in our time. Many died, and a national cemetery was made, and the name given to it was Kibroth Hattaavah, which means "graves of greediness." After the people continued their journey, God fed them with manna every morning and with flesh (quails) every evening. (Ex. 16: 6-8.)

By what we have been studying about the praying of Moses and the Israelites, we learn that in times of burden and necessity we should make our wants known to God. If we are in any distress, if we have not prayed to God for help, we have neglected the only sure source of relief. There are some people who say they feel "they have no right to pray for physical or temporal good, on the ground that "God cares for me much more than I care for myself, and it would be foolish in me to be reminding God of his duty to me, or telling him what to do to make my life easier and happier." This is a specious argument, for, in reality, the more we ask of God the closer shall we live with him. Many of the Christian Herald Family realize this.

Certainly Moses and the Israelites show us how not to pray—both cried out against God, the first because he had laid so great a burden upon him, and the second because God had led them forth into a greater peril than they had in Egypt. But if we have not grace in our hearts to pray in faith, God has shown us that he will even hear the prayer of complaint. What we need is to learn how to pray. "Lord, teach us to pray." When the Lord Jesus was in this world he prayed often, so often that it became a part of his life. He taught us to pray without ceasing.

Jesus prayed at his baptism, and the Spirit of God descended upon him, and the voice of his Father was heard in commendation. Have we been baptized in his name? And have we prayed for ourselves as others prayed for us that our lives might be given to the service of our God?

"He withdrew into the wilderness and prayed" that he might be alone with God. Do we pray in secret? If so, our Father will reward us openly. The daily appointment of a quiet hour with God has been found to bring a great blessing. In some seminaries and colleges, notably at Mount Holyoke, such a season was appointed by the founder, Mary Lyon. Let us each adopt it for ourselves. Some of us are so pressed by duties we will say: "We can not do it." But if we can not take an hour we can begin by taking fifteen minutes—a quarter of an hour—and as we go on, we shall probably find our ability to gain this time increasing.

Jesus sometimes continued all night in prayer. Some of us know what it is to continue all night in anxiety as we toss upon our beds. How much better to pray! Some of us try gymnastics to drive off the demon of insomnia. How much better to wrestle with God as Jacob did!

Jesus prayed in public, when he was surrounded by the hungry multitude. It is our duty to accustom ourselves to pray aloud in the presence of others that we may strengthen their faith, that we may teach them how to pray, and that we may be the means of bringing God's help to them. By way of illustration we will say there has recently been an effort made in Congress to have an edition of fifty thousand copies printed of "Prayers in C[o]ngress" made by the chaplains, for the purpose general distribution, that men may learn how pray, and also to let the people know what th should expect their representatives to do in answ to these prayers.

Jesus prayed with his disciples. They were l nearest and dearest friends. This suggests that should not neglect to attend the church pray[e]r meeting, where we will be sure to find our Lord he has promised to be where two or three are gat[h]ered together in his name. Jesus prayed when sent his disciples out two by two to teach in h[is] name. Do we pray for the Sunday school in whi[ch] we are either scholars or teachers? How ma[ny] scholars pray every day for their Sunday scho[ol] teachers? How many never pray for them? L[et] parents see to it that along with the prayer "f[or] father and mother and brother and sister, and [all] the friends I love so well," the name of the Sunda[y] school teacher is put in as well. Let teachers ha[ve] a rosary of prayer which shall consist of the nam[es] of the scholars in their classes. Do not pray f[or] "my class," but for each scholar.

Jesus prayed in the house of mourning whe[n] Lazarus lay dead. Have you ever tried to spea[k] words of consolation to a bereaved friend? An[d] did not your words seem inadequate, almost pr[e]suming? Try to pray instead, talk with God abou[t] it in the presence of your friend, and your word[s] will be as precious ointment.

Jesus prayed for Peter when he was tempted "Satan hath desired to have thee, that he may sif[t] thee as wheat, but I have prayed for thee that th[y] faith fail not." Do you pray for your friends Some one has suggested that when thoughts com[e] to us of absent friends, we should pray for them if only a sentence. A lady in the United State[s] once wrote to a missionary friend in China: "I ha[d] a feeling to-day that you were in great danger, s[o] I took the picture of you and your school children down to the Christian Endeavor meeting, and i[t] just seemed as if the Lord Jesus was there, and think he answered our prayer and kept you." An[d] so he did, for on that very day there was an upris[ing] in Tientsin, and that teacher with her scholar[s] was obliged to make a journey of a mile for safety with bullets cutting through the air over thei[r] heads, and falling into the ground at their feet, bu[t] none of that mission band were hurt. We may not always be able to help personally those who are in need, but we can always help by prayers, the most efficacious way.

Jesus prayed that his strength fail not. That was the prayer he offered in Gethsemane. His physical weakness was so great, evidenced by the bloody sweat, that he feared that he might not live to be offered for the sins of the world. There is a lesson in this for us—not to pray when we have a heavy burden to bear that God will make it lighter, but that he will give us strength to endure unto the end.

Jesus prayed for his enemies even when dying. "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." How much better is a prayer than a grudge! not alone for the one who has wronged than for the one also who is wronged. "Lord, lay not this sin to their charge," was the prayer of the dying Stephen for those who were stoning him to death, and he could make that prayer because he remembered how Jesus had prayed for his enemies. If you have an enemy, begin to-day to pray for him, and God will bless you for it. That is the best way to dispose of an enemy, for he will soon cease to be your enemy, even if you do not tell him that you are praying for him.

OUR SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS' ROUND TABLE

—SOME REQUESTS have been received for blackboard work, and in response we will describe something done in the Elementary Section at the World's Sunday School Convention in Zürich by Mrs. J. A. Ross, of Montana. She drew a river across the blackboard with blue chalk, and with white chalk put in the rippling. Then with green chalk she made a line of rushes along the river bank. With dashes of green and brown chalk she made the land beyond the river, and in the far distance a small cabin. Then she told about a little baby boy being in that home who was in danger of being killed by the soldiers of the cruel king, so the mother made a basket in which to hide him. A picture of a basket was then pinned to the blackboard among the rushes, and a picture of a little baby laid in it. Among the rushes not far from the basket, the picture of a little girl was pinned to the blackboard, and we were told about Miriam, the sister of the baby boy, who stood there to watch what should happen to him. Then we were told about the princess and her maids who discovered the baby in the basket, and [illegible] pretty pictures of them were pinned to the blackboard beside the baby. The picture of the sister was moved to stand beside them, as the teacher told that she came and offered to get a nurse for the baby. She went to the little house far away and got the baby's own mother. (The picture of the girl was moved across the blackboard to the house.) A picture of the mother kneeling over the basket was then pinned to the blackboard, and little arms upraised were fastened to the baby. Then all of the pictures were taken from the blackboard as the teacher told that the nurse-mother took the baby back to the little house where it was now safe, because the princess had adopted it as her own little son, and the princess returned to her beautiful palace home. . . . The teacher was followed with closest attention throughout the lesson, and with evident delight. Her method was not new, but it was a sort of revival of a very popular old method, which teachers of very small children would do well to adopt. The use of pictures is better than drawing, because it takes less time and the pictures are more correct than hasty drawings. Teachers should make collections of pictures for blackboard work. Some very prolific sources will be the Bible picture rolls, illustrated papers, and some beautiful advertisements. After they are cut out, they should be pasted on very thin muslin to preserve them, and they should be classified, and laid away in portfolios or large envelopes. It goes without saying that a teacher should always make careful selection of the pictures she intends to use—this as a part of the preparation of the lesson—and she should rehearse the lessons, putting the pictures in place as a part of her preparation to teach, so that she can work quickly and smoothly in the presence of the class.

Some very excellent hints on object teaching were given by Mr. George Archibald and his associate teachers from the West Hill Training School of Birmingham, England. One of the equipments suggested for primary classes was an individual sand box about twelve inches square, with a number of objects folded out of paper and made of sticks to stick into the sand to represent people and things. There are several firms in this country from whom such outfits may be obtained.

This is the time for pastors and superintendents to make plans for increasing and improving the Sunday School for better work than ever this fall and winter, including a good "Rally Day," preceded or followed by a union Sunday school canvass of the community, getting the strongest men and women to become teachers, starting a training class to supply future teachers—first as substitutes—developing a teachers' library, and securing better equipment, including good blackboards. The Presbytery of Portland, Ore., has designated September as "Sunday School Month," and requested every pastor to devote a sermon and prayer to the growth of the Sunday school in numbers and quality. It is not too late to do that in this last week of the month.

THE GIPSY SPIRIT

around the end of September eling begins to grow on us. is something about the tragic or of the dying leaves and the summertime that touches a nd chord in the heart. Spring utiful, and summer is perfect cations, but autumn brings a to get away from the unreal of life, out into the forest at with a campfire and the rust- aves.

I ent to a dinner party lately by a class of young people who perhaps good examples of the generation. Somehow, we be- lking of fairy godmothers, and spoke up—beautiful, slender, a son princess. She said in her usical voice:

"I a fairy godmother would give shels and bushels of money, I have the largest house on Fifth e, and the most expensive auto- , and the best servants money buy! And I would be happy."

d I," said the shabby little girl, as going to be a genius some I would go into the shops and lothes—dresses and furs and -and shoes! And then I would around and dazzle people!"

the matter-of-fact boy sur- us. He looked far into the dis- over the top of our glittering and when his voice spoke, it was nd wonderfully ringing.

nen I have lots of money," he s, "I will chuck up the whole —the city with its crowds and ial light, and the working for men, and the asphalt sidewalks, will go out into the country, the trees smell fresh at ht!"

it was Indian summer and the f the gipsy was in his heart.

ew years ago a small boy lived me. He was a pale youngster, deep-set eyes and a charming that made his lean little face tive. But people—unseeing mor- called him "queer," because he oking up at the drifting clouds; layed with caterpillars and bee- and recited little rhymeless s. And the child looked around hopeless eyes for a soul that understand. But at last a day —a day that was all blue and n and gorgeous—a day when flower beckoned and each breeze ht a message from Pan. So the boy picked up a tiny bundle con- g a fairy book, a tooth-brush hree cookies, and ran away.

ey found him that night in a not far from his home—fast p. The fairy-book lay open by side, and the cookies were all t. And his unromantic family, they had sobbed together in great relief, held a council of which resulted in a hard spank- or the small boy.

saw him the next morning. He wore a chastened air, and his smile was only on the surface. Swinging on the garden gate, he told me the sad story:

"I was sittin' on the porch," he confided softly, "an' a little breeze came along. It blew my hair and whispered to me, 'Johnny, there's fairies an' witches in the woods near your house.' But I said, 'Go away, bad breeze.' An' then another little breeze came along and it said: 'Johnny, there's tiny rabbits and squirrels in the woods!' An' so I went to find 'em—that's all."

For the little boy heard the call of the woods in his heart and he was answering it in his childish way. Perhaps some day he will be a great somebody; but his family will have to help him with understanding instead of with punishment.

I think that poets often feel the gipsy spirit, and I believe that their best verses are written at such times. Longfellow felt the call of the wind-swept forests and the calm of the sunset glow when he wrote Hiawatha. I am sure that Kipling felt the same spirit in his heart when he put the swinging, care-free rhythm into his "Mandalay." And all through Stevenson's books—Stevenson, who was given "The Road of the Loving Heart"—there is a certain message from the great outdoors.

Some people look upon the gipsy spirit as a romantic, silly thing; but if taken in the right way, it is very right and true. Nobody can call the unkind voice that makes a man desert his family, or a young girl leave her home to go to the city, a true gipsy call; for that call is the call of selfishness. So many people confuse the two when they frown upon romance and the beauty of the great outdoors. And I want people to look at the thing in a sensible way.

God made the forests, the tiny stars, and the wild winds—and I think that he made them partly as a balance for that kind of civilization that would choke the spirit of joy out of our hearts. He made the great open places for the people who want to be alone with him and talk to him, away from the crowds that kill all reverence. And I think that he is glad at times to have us forget our cares and responsibilities that we may be nearer him—as Jesus was when he crept away into the wilderness to pray.

Can you think of any way in which you could be nearer God than just this?

"Evening in the woods—with a campfire—and the dark shadows—and the stars overhead."

When the Indian crept through the thicket
On noiseless and hurrying feet,
And the Persian wrote in his garden
'Mid the blood of the rose-petals sweet,
When the fawns and the dryads were singing
The song that is sounding anew,
They all helped to build up the message
That the woodlands are calling you.

"CHRIST, ALL AND IN ALL"

Col. 3: 11

WHEN every prop on earth gives way,
When sorrow's cup o'erflows the brim
It sweetens all for us to say,
It is from Him.

When, working humbly for the Lord,
The spirit drops and weak the limb,
What cheer and joy are in these words:
It is for Him.

And welcome e'en the hour of death,
When nature's force lies low and dim;
For we can say with dying breath,
I go to Him.

We can indeed in this rejoice,
E'en in this weary world of sin,
That soon we'll hear his welcome voice,
And he like Him.

UNVEILING THE YEARS

A REVIEW OF AMELIA E. BARR'S AUTOBIOGRAPHY

BY KATHLEEN NORRIS

IT IS not often that the reader of to-day, browsing about among the hundreds and thousands of books that come from the presses every year, will find a volume so full of rare interest and delight as is Amelia E. Barr's autobiography, which she calls All the Days of My Life. When you open this closely-printed big book of more than five hundred pages, you push back the curtain of the years, and step straight into the life and heart of the child Amelia, who was born in an English parsonage more than eighty years ago. And until you reach the last page and leave her an aged woman in her lovely home on the Hudson, alert and interested still in the world about her, your interest in the extraordinary narrative of her life never flags for a second.

Mrs. Barr has written this book in the free and charming manner in which all her books are written. But it is not that that makes it unusual even among her own works. Its curious power lies in its utter honesty, and in its strong and pervading spirit of Christianity. Mrs. Barr is far too clever a woman to embellish this history with dramatic touches, to omit what has been unflattering or humiliating in her life, and to justify herself even when what she did does not deserve justification. She writes of a faulty, an impulsive and an often impatient girl, and of a young woman full of longing for strength and impulses toward weakness; but, as the reader follows her, he sees the joys and sorrows of life—and she had her share of great joys and great sorrows!—mold and temper her character; he sees her emerge with an ever-increasing faith and courage from some of the most trying and terrible situations possible to a woman's days.

Her faith never failed her. Through the money troubles of her childhood, through the unhappy misunderstandings of her early married life, through the agony of parting with her own people and coming to a strange land, through humiliating struggles in early Chicago days, through the crowning grief when a loved child was taken from her, we find the harrassed and exhausted wife and mother still keeping her heart close to God, and bearing cheerfully whatever sorrow he might send. Change followed change with the young English exiles; financial ruin drove them from Chicago, cholera cut short their stay in New Orleans; and war-time panics and distresses broke in upon the home they found in Texas, where six of their nine children were born, and where death visited them again. Driven by circumstances from Austin to Galveston, they were caught in the belt of the terrible yellow fever, and women of to-day may well marvel at the more than human courage that survived the loss of husband and three lovely little ones in one terrible epidemic. With her three little daughters depending upon her, and otherwise alone in the world, Mrs. Barr bravely took up the work that lay nearest to her hand, and it was not many years before the Father whom she trusted so utterly led her to New York, where happy years of editorial work began, to be followed by the writing that proved so instant and so great a success. Incredibly hard she worked, and an incredible amount of work she produced, but she had her three loved daughters with her, and she could care for them, and she was gloriously grateful and content.

And let no one think this a gloomy record, or one too sad to read. Brilliant good-spirits and indomitable courage flash from all its pages, and to women especially its delicious accuracy will be full of charm. The dresses the little girls wore in the English village of 1840, the cakes they ate, the conveniences and inconveniences of ocean travel a decade later, all the little details of food and dress, of speech and manner, are here faithfully recorded. Every page has its smiles, whether at the half-terrified introduction of sulphur matches into English homes, or the young queen's fight for her ladies-in-waiting, or at Mary and Lilly's delight at featherbeds and protest against the somber colors of their Black Watch tartan dresses. Just as in her novels Mrs. Barr is mistress of the little touches that present a picture of home life with all its homely charm, so in her own history she has used her art, and we see the group of happy women in their strange Texan life before the war, and see, years later, the reunited mother and daughters rejoicing in their first cozy little foothold in New York. And if Mrs. Barr indulges in an occasional purely sentimental or emotional passage, and sometimes shows a deep-rooted belief in slight but unmistakable supernatural warnings of approaching danger or death to those she loves, it is a fault easy to forgive. Only a wife and mother knows how close are the ties between the world of the real and the unreal things that surround her loved ones, and to this imaginative and high-strung wife and mother the two worlds were very close.

The later years, since the first successful novel in 1885, are full of pleasures and honors. Mrs. Barr has written sixty novels since the first, Jan Vedder's Wife, appeared, besides countless reviews and sketches, short stories and poems. But she has found time to establish the home she loves so much, "Cherry Croft," and to meet most of the distinguished persons of letters, here and in England.

Among all these no personal memoir will be more interesting to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD than her account of meeting Dr. Louis Klopsch in 1896. She became a warm friend of both Dr. Klopsch and his wife, and wrote a serial, The King's Highway, for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD shortly afterward. A year later Dr. Klopsch asked her to go to India with the shipload of corn which American women were sending to famine sufferers. Her youngest daughter was too ill to leave, and she could not go, to her great regret, but the pleasant social and business relationship with Dr. Klopsch and his wife continued, and she records it as one of the greatest blessings of her life.

But All the Days of My Life is too extraordinarily comprehensive a book to be reviewed in an article of a few hundred words. Faults of construction and of style it may have, but it will stand as the real and unembellished history of a good woman—not a saint, not an angel, but a faithful wife and mother and friend, and one who never forgot, in bright days and dark, that this life is but a journey after all, a strange, hard, upward road, to the end of all journeying and all sorrow.

The Historical Christ

APROPOS of the signal failure of the attempt, in recent years, to prove that Jesus Christ was not a historical person but a myth, the Churchman remarks that this extravagant theory has now only three advocates of note: Professor Drews of Karlsruhe, Professor Fraser of England, and Professor Smith of Tulane University, New Orleans. Of these it says they "may be described without exaggeration in the words once used to characterize the Positivist Church in London as three persons and no God." On the other hand a number of able champions have arisen in defense of the historicity of the Gospel narrative. It is remarkable that none of these, so far as we can discover, have taken as a basis of their arguments the Jewish ecclesiastical record in the Talmud, long since officially omitted, but the nature of which is known to many Talmudists, including several in this country.

RCH UNITY IN THE CANAL ZONE

HESE days of effort toward ch unity, it is gratifying and esting to record one place in stendom where the union of vorship has been carried on ccess. It was early recogit division into denominations racticable here. Back of this strong support of the govern- the promotion of any effort ten by its employees toward lopment of American commu- and spirit. In 1905, a few after our government took n of the Panama Canal and of land known as the Canal e Isthmian Canal Commission a resolution to furnish houses sed for club purposes, "proich clubs shall be open to all e gold employees, who comply asonable regulations." These ses were to be the centers of on for employees, and also it pected that the existence of ibs as should be formed would ong moral influence.

e time that the establishing of clubhouses was determined he only trained conductors of stitutions in the United States ne secretaries of the Young Christian Association. The tion was called upon to take of the Canal Builders' social for the dual reason that it e machinery and the workers nd that it would create a good ion among the men to know e government's plan for their ion was under the guidance of anization definitely opposed to ism and gambling. The staff house secretaries acts under rection of an advisory board, ed of Colonel William C. Gor-, r. Joseph Bucklin Bishop, sec- to the commission, Mr. A. B. n, superintendent of the club and Mr. Homer A. A. Smith. mmission erected buildings for purposes, and the sanitary dent maintains thirteen chapor its hospital service. These ins are paid a stipulated sald have quarters and all other ges of the canal service. Not ne denomination, however, has given the precedence. In 1910 aplains included four Episcopa- four Baptists, three Roman ics, two Methodists, one Wesand one Presbyterian. Deational work is maintained by piscopalian clergy, the Baptist ers, and the Catholics; the othaintain union services. There r Americans non-denominational es maintained in seven villages, is in these that the test of union l work has been made.

Culebra, Empire, Cristobal and organizations under the title hristian Leagues" were formed, the membership in all cases being formed of Christian men and women interested in the cause of forwarding and maintaining religious work for their families and their children during the years of the Isthmian residence. The beginning of these organizations was in 1907. The first was in Culebra; others followed as indicated above. In each case the league supplements the salary of the commission chaplain by a stipulated monthly sum. The chaplain is appointed upon recommendation of the league, and his resignation must be acted upon by the league as well as by the Isthmian Canal Commission. In 1907, an association composed of the commission chaplains, under the title of the Isthmian Ministers' Association, was formed with ten charter members; this association meets one day in each month for the purpose of discussing work and to arrange plans for co-operation.

The only one of the non-denominational churches that has its own building for worship is the union church in Cristobal. The building, a plain frame structure containing church room and a study for the pastor, surmounted by a cross, was erected in 1911 by the commission. The church has a well-developed life; there is a large membership, a good choir, several church organizations, including a woman's society and young people's union. Last year this church developed social service extension work in connection with the boys and young men of the congregation and formed an interesting class of Chinese men for English study.

Perhaps the strongest hold of church work in these churches is through the Sunday schools. There is a strong organization composed of Sunday school workers and members, teachers, pastors, and others interested, under the title of the Isthmian Sunday school Association. The association is made up of eleven federated Sunday schools. There is an enrolment of one thousand children and adults in the eleven schools. This success is largely due to the fact that the schools are carried on upon non-denominational lines.

Perhaps the strongest proof of the success of undenominational work in the Canal Zone is the fact that in the plans for the permanent town at the Pacific entrance to the Canal provision is made for a church building to be used for the establishment of non-sectarian work. A union Sunday school will also be provided for by a building, and in response to the request of a committee from the Sunday School Association a playground will be established by the government.

Take Down the Bars

The bars of your neglect.

If they are barring your folks from the best in oatmeal take them down today.

There's a richness and flavor in Quaker Oats which common oatmeal lacks.

It is there because we make Quaker Oats of just the big, plump grains. We use the choicest one-third of choice oats. And our process keeps the flavor intact.

Because of that flavor, a hundred nations send here for Quaker Oats. Some send ten thousand miles.

Because of that flavor, a thousand million dishes are consumed each year.

Because of that flavor, millions of mothers serve Quaker Oats to their children, as their mothers served it to them.

If your folks lack it, take down the bars of your neglect and let them now enjoy it.

Quaker Oats

The Luscious, Big-Flaked Oatmeal

The best in oatmeal is the best food known for growing boys and girls. The best for grown-ups, too.

As an energy food, nothing compares with oats.

No other grain is so rich in the elements of which brains and nerves are made.

Oatmeal, when served with milk or cream, is a perfectly balanced food. It supplies all one needs, and in the right proportions.

That is why oats for ages have been the food for the years of growth.

And that is why parents deem it important to bring their children to delight in oatmeal.

The way is to give them just the cream of the oats—the oats with the luscious flavor.

That means Quaker Oats.

No scanty grains go into this product—none but the rich and plump.

That's the reason for the flavor—the flavor which children love. It is also the reason for the big, rich flakes.

Yet this cream of the oats costs the same per package as commonplace oatmeal. And the cost is only one-half cent per dish.

You get the most for your money, and you get the best there is, when you ask for Quaker Oats.

That was all. There was no no sign of how it came there or what it was for. But Simms knew. He locked the doors and dropped back weakly into his chair. Then began a battle in which there were no trumpets, no beating drums, no comrades at his side.

In the hall outside, the self-winding clock rang faintly at the end of each hour. A fly caught in the space between the panes of the upper and lower windowsashes, where they had been slid opposite each other, buzzed interminably with a soporific note. Street sounds drifted up as though from a great distance, and they grew softer as the afternoon wore away. Slowly the square splotches of sunshine on the floor lengthened into golden bars. A sickening number of times Simms leaned forward with his arm partially extended toward the desk, then sank back with the perspiration breaking out all over him. Throughout the afternoon no one came near, save the postman, who tried the locked door, then shoved a letter underneath it and went away. The bacteriologist saw it dimly, had a vague feeling that there was something familiar about the envelope, and then lost all knowledge of it in the smoke of that silent battle raging within him. And the enemy fought under banners on which the words "No one will ever know" shone clearly through the fight. In the dusk a muffled chorus of factory whistles droned out the end of the day's toil.

Simms reached forward, opened a drawer of his desk and, with trembling fingers, took out an envelope on which he managed to write: "Michael Corrigan, MacDougall Building, City." On a half-sized letter sheet he wrote simply: "No, thanks. J Simms." He stamped the envelope somewhat viciously and strode out with it to the mail chute. After that he signed his report in a hand that the Board of Health members made fun of the next morning, and went home through the streets of a city suddenly grown foreign. The other letter lay unopened beneath the door.

It was two days later that Simms and I sat in his front office looking out of the window. A fire engine banged around the corner and rattled over the car tracks. A boy whistled shrilly. Somewhere, long ago, it had been thus: we two talking at a window; the thunder of galloping hoofs and wild clamor of gongs; a piercing scream; and a spark-sown trail of smoke down the street. The little bacteriologist took up unconsciously his theme on that former occasion: "No," he said; "there's no chance for heroism in these humdrum lives of ours."

He was silent a moment. "By the way," he added, "I'm leaving here. Letter a couple of days ago. I finally got that assistant's place at Johns Hopkins. Eighteen hundred for me, and the kid playing on good Maryland grass with straight legs, man, straight legs, such as he and his fool daddy have been so hungry for!"

THE MEDICAL MISSION AT CH'ANGLI

M Mr. J. L. Keeler comes an in-ıli, North China, in what is now th year. The eighth (of eight ting to $2,095. Mr. Keeler to open several branch dispensting case mentioned is that of ıg magistrate who was recently ıt in a chair to the hospital ıadly swollen face; the left half lower jawbone had been ded by an abscess, and his whole ı poisoned. His arms and legs were dropsical, and for three months his only relief from pain had been afforded by opium. After consulting native doctors in vain, he had burned incense and made offerings at various temples and shrines. To one idol he vainly offered as an inducement to cure him the erection of a tablet extolling his healing powers. At another temple he hired a theatrical company to perform religious acts. At last he went to Ch'angli, where a cure was effected. Thoroughly convinced of the uselessness of idols and priests, he turned away from paganism and joined the church. Mr. Keeler's communication closes thus: "We base our faith and do our work on this Rock, that the greatest force in the universe is God, that the biggest thing in the world is man, that the best thing in man is his capacity for God."

Maximum Return—Minimum Risk

These are the two most important factors to be considered in making an investment. First, how safe will your money be; second, what will it earn. Investigate carefully the security back of investments promising high returns. Remember, high rates and high risks go together.

When you invest in Guaranteed First Mortgage Participations, you obtain the highest returns consistent with safety, and chance of loss of either principal or interest is reduced to a minimum.

Guaranteed First Mortgage Participations are threefold secure. They are the direct obligations of this Company; they participate to the extent of their principal and interest values in first mortgages (held in trust) on improved and well located St. Louis real estate, conservatively appraised to be worth double the amount loaned on it; they are unconditionally guaranteed as to payment of principal and interest by the Mortgage Guarantee Company of St. Louis.

These securities are issued in any amount from $50.00 up, and for any number of months from two to sixty. Their yield, 4%, 4½% and 5%, depends upon the time they run, and is remitted or compounded, at the option of the investor.

ANSWERS TO FINANCIAL QUERIES

C., BROOKLINE, MASS. California Petroleum stock is a mighty good thing to leave alone. It is not an investment issue. Don't touch it. The stock has declined from 72½ in 1912 to 16½ in July of this year, although the stock is now selling ten points higher than the lowest market price. The dividend has been passed and many of the company's wells are reported dry.

B., INDIANA, PA. Receivers were appointed in August for the Oxford Linen Mills of North Brookfield, Mass. Your stock is probably worthless. This enterprise was one of the many schemes promoted by the notorious Sterling Debenture Corporation. The alleged officers of the latter concern are under arrest for using the mails in furthering a scheme to defraud investors.

A., FRIENDLY, W. VA. If we had $500 to invest under the conditions you have stated, we should buy five shares of Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe common stock. At 95 the stock yields 6.33 per cent. At any price under par, we regard this stock as an excellent opportunity for the investment of a business man. The road is reporting earnings in excess of 10 per cent. on the stock and the best months of the year are yet to come.

MISS B., NEWTON UPPER FALLS, MASS. The Gulf, Florida, and Alabama Railway Company's first mortgage 5 per cent. gold bonds were sold, Megargel & Co. inform us, with the understanding that there would be no selling market for investors for a considerable period of time, and if a representative of the firm promised a sale of your bonds, he exceeded any authority given him in this respect. There is no market for this issue at present.

M., LAKE CITY, MINN. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD cannot undertake to report the value of your lots in Grant Terrace, Staten Island. This tract was put on the market by Wm. M. Ostrander, Inc. We do not believe that any of Mr. Ostrander's customers have any occasion to offer him a word of praise, nor would many of them like to entrust their money with him again. From our own observations and from correspondence with not a few of his customers we judge that he has put across some very bad deals—bad for his patrons. Permit us to offer this bit of caution—do not ever again buy real estate unless you know its value from your own personal examination, and even then be inclined to shun it.

McN., LOCKPORT, N. Y. It seems certain that the parcel post will make greater inroads on the business of the express companies. The latest ruling of the government that packages of 20 pounds will be accepted is, perhaps, the greatest blow the express companies have yet had, but great as this detriment appears, the stocks of the express companies did not respond by further serious declines, which might indicate to the observer that possible future inroads have already been discounted and that express stocks are about touching bottom. It is our opinion that it would be better to hold United States Express stock and await developments, hoping that the express companies will invent ways of encompassing a greater large package carrying business to offset the loss of small traffic.

MRS. W., CAMBRIDGE, N. Y. Pierce, Butler & Pierce, 7 per cent. preferred stock at 98-102, appears to have attractive income possibilities, and may be regarded as an attractive investment for a business man. But we should hardly call this stock a woman's investment. The passing of the preferred dividend payment by a number of industrial companies and the consequent decline of the preferred shares is too recent history to let us forget the treacherous nature of this class of security. While the company regarding which you inquire is in no sense to blame for the loss sustained by investors in other industrial companies and is, so far as we know, in an excellent financial condition, nevertheless the corporation, well established and profitable as its business appears to be, is engaged in competitive trade and subject to the hazards thereto—and the shareholders, partners of the concern in a limited sense, must depend upon the concern's continued prosperity for revenue from their investment.

W., SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS. You state that you have $2,500 for investment, and ask us to recommend some stock, preferably a railway stock that is reasonably safe, yields at least 5 per cent. and is likely to increase in value. There are a number of desirable railroad stocks returning 6 per cent. yield at present prices and are regarded as reasonably safe. A vast number of investors have already taken advantage of the comparatively low prices and bought standard issues. But we should prefer to have our readers buy bonds instead of stock. Bonds, as well as stocks, are cheap compared with the prices of a few years ago and at current prices return liberal yields. Convertible bonds possess, to some extent, the speculative nature of stock and are thereby very attractive to those who desire to gratify the speculative instinct without assuming the same degree of hazard that goes with a stock investment. One of the most attractive of the convertible issues is the Southern Pacific Convertible 4s, due June 1, 1929, at 87½, and we believe that we are doing you no injustice in recommending this bond as combining approximately your three requirements. These bonds, though not a mortgage, are a direct obligation of the company, and are convertible on or before June 1, 1919, into stock of the Southern Pacific at 130.

H., GRAND RAPIDS, MICH. We will answer your questions in the order they are given. (1) The total dividends paid by Cobalt mining companies to date is reported to be $49,885,938. The biggest dividend payer in Cobalt is the Nipissing Company, $10,440,000 or 174 per cent. on the issued capitalization. The company paying the greatest percentage on the capitalization is Temiskaming & Hudson Bay Company, 23,200 per cent. But there has been issued only $7,761 of the company's capital stock. The company has paid to the few people who own the stock $1,800,552 in profits and paid handsomely from start of operations. Twenty-two Cobalt companies regularly report dividends. (2) We do not recommend Kerr Lake stock, even if the company has paid out in dividends $4,770,000 or 159 per cent. on $3,000,000 of stock. The mine's own splendid record is now against it. What it has accomplished in the past indicates not to the slightest degree what the future yield will be. (3) Strictly speaking, a mining company pays no dividends. What has been taken from a mine can never be replaced, and a time comes to all mines when they cease to produce. The buyer of any Cobalt stock at this late day is likely to repent of his purchase. The time to have bought was six or seven years ago when Cobalt mining companies had just commenced to dig up rich silver deposits. But really the best time for the average person to buy mining stock is never to buy it.

MISS S., AURO, ILL. You state that you have been made trustee of your father's estate of $15,000, and that you have on hand $3,000 for immediate investment. You ask about Wells & Dickey farm mortgages and about Swift & Co.'s stock. There is no class of investment securities sold in America that has maintained a better record than farm mortgages. Defaults of interest and principal are exceedingly rare, and the large loan firms have been conspicuously free from resorting to careless and unfair methods in their dealings with both investors and borrowers. We would, however, call attention to the fact that Western farm loans carry maturities of from three to ten years, and are not marketable securities. When considering an investment of this kind you must be prepared to abide by the conditions governing the loan. The investment of such a considerable sum of money as you contemplate, demands that you should thoroughly familiarize yourself with the various classes of securities which investors are now buying before committing yourself. We do not believe you should even consider the shares of industrial corporations—and this will eliminate Swift stock as desirable for a woman's investment. Indeed we look with disfavor upon all stock investments in your case, believing that you should confine your investments to mortgages. Mortgages may mean the bonds of railways and utility corporations, the fractional mortgages of the large business buildings in populous cities, or farm loans. A comprehensive knowledge of these investments may most quickly be obtained from the representative houses dealing therein. Write to a number of prominent banking firms and mortgage dealers for their lists of current offerings. Select a number of issues that appeal to you as desirable in point of income, safety and marketability, and advise with us in regard to these particular securities before making a definite decision

THE NEW TARIFF

HE Tariff Revision Bill, for he enactment of which the resent special session of Congress was called, was passed Senate on September 9 by a 44 to 37. The Senate leaders ery effort to rush the final ac- the House on the measure and nto the hands of the President. ent delay in the last stages of islation, the Senate immedi- ter passing the bill decided to upon its amendments" and ask conference. This move, while in character, saved a day's getting the bill into the joint nce committee.

President Wilson was in- of the passage of the bill he it this statement:

for the people and for free business, as lasted a long generation through, has at last been won, handsomely and completely.

A leadership and a steadfastness in council have been shown in both houses of which the Democratic party has reason to be very proud. There has been no weakness or confusion or drawing back, but a statesmanlike directness and command of circumstances.

I am happy to have been connected with the government of the nation at a time when such things could happen, and to have worked in association with men who could do them.

The tariff bill, as it passed the Senate, retained the principal House provisions, including free sugar and free raw wool, but revised other rates still further downward.

The average ad valorem rate in the bill now is approximately 26 per cent., a decrease of 28 per cent. from existing rates, and nearly 4 per cent. lower than the rates of the House bill.

Dealing with the income tax provision the Senate lowered the normal exemption from the 1 per cent. income tax from $4,000 to $3,000 for single persons, with exemptions for wives and dependent children; exempted incomes of mutual life insurance companies which revert to the benefit of stockholders; increased graduated surtax on large incomes to a minimum of 6 per cent. on those of more than $500,000; exempted incomes of municipalities derived from operation of public utilities, and changed date from which the tax shall be computed for the first year from January 1 to March 1, 1913.

Among other changes made by the Senate are these:

Free listed cattle and other livestock, wheat, hair of the angora goat and some other agricultural products; restored oatmeal and rolled oats to the dutiable list and provided an elaborate inspection of meat imports.

Reduce House rates on woolen manufactures, to become effective January 1, 1914.

Provided, in the sugar schedule, for immediate abolishment of the Dutch standard test; postponed operation of proposed reduced rates until March 1, 1914, leaving the provision unchanged for free sugar in May, 1916.

Slightly increased rates on finer cotton goods, reclassifying the whole cotton schedule and changing the silk schedule from an ad valorem to a specific basis.

Provided for an administrative force to handle income tax collections without regard to requirements of the civil service.

Struck out a countervailing duty on wood pulp.

Greatly reduced rates of the metal schedule.

PRAY FOR ME

THOU hast prayed for me, I know it.
I have felt the cooling stream
From before the throne of mercy
Where the living waters gleam;
I have heard the voice of angels
Whispering softly in the night—
"God will keep thee, weary pilgrim;
He will guide thy steps aright."

Surely prayer and supplication
Have ascended to the throne;
There my every want and weakness,
By a faithful servant shown,
Has been laid before the Master,
And his gentle mercy sought;
Peace and mercy have descended
By his rich atonement bought.

Oh, my friend, continue praying,
Bind me to the throne of grace;
There my weak and weary spirit
Finds a welcome resting-place;
Pray that he may send his angels
Round about the way to camp;
Let the beacon of his mercy
Be my only guiding lamp.

Much a righteous man availeth
When below the mercy-seat
He has bowed in humble reverence
For some other to entreat;
So if blessings wait upon me,
Comforts heal my every care,
I shall know thy soul is waiting
In a sacred hour of prayer.

horse. A hundred women are washing their clothes by beating them and spreading them on the sand to dry. There are little huts of reeds heaped full with melons. All along the shore are coffee houses where the people are idling their time away.

Below Mosul the country is rolling; Arab encampments begin to appear. Along the shores are great fields of barley and maize. Bridges across the river are few, but the ungainly ferry boats are frequent. At one ferry the toll is as follows: For a poor Arab, two cents; for a prosperous Arab, four cents; for a soldier, ten cents; for a pilgrim, twenty cents; for a European, eighty cents. The scale of prices for nearly everything along the way is similar. But many of the Arabs are so poor that they prefer to swim across in the ancient manner. They bind several old gourds together, and then, sitting upon them, paddle their way along.

A day's journey below Mosul and we pass the large mounds of Nimrud, and two days later, Assur, the oldest of the Assyrian cities. The next large town is Samarra, and here you must stop to visit the home of the great caliphs, for this town shares with Bagdad the honor of being the home of Haroun-er-Rashid. The old city walls are still well preserved, and also a conical tower of bricks, with a spiral stairway on the outside, leading to the summit, as if it were the old tower of Babel. From its summit you may look down upon the golden dome of a most sacred mosque, for Samarra is a holy city.

Four days more and the raft brings you to Bagdad, as far as it will go. Farther south the river is sluggish and it so slowly winds its way over the level Babylonian plain that the journey to the Persian Gulf would be difficult. Here the raft is broken up; the poles are sold to builders for roofing purposes; the goatskins are deflated and carried back up the river to be used again. A week in Bagdad sounds attractive. It is the home of the great caliphs, the scene of the tales of the Arabian Nights. The very name conjures up pictures of Oriental splendor and revelry and cruelty, and recalls the stories of Aladdin and Sindbad. Here we seem to be in a different world. The rolling hills give way to the level alluvial plain. Date palms line the shores of the river. The irrigating plants fill the air with their creaking. The camel, the water buffalo, the humpbacked cow, the large white donkey and the beautiful Arab horse are on every hand. Here all is Arabic.

Just before we enter the city, on our right, is Kathemieh, one of the most sacred of the Moslem shrines. Should you wish to visit it, the guide would show you the domes only from a distance, for if you should pass along the street before the gateway, you might be attacked by the fanatical pilgrims.

We enter the markets of Bagdad. They are a labyrinth of narrow, winding streets, lined with little open booths, and crowded with men and animals. Sometimes a carriage, bearing a Turkish official, is recklessly driven through the crowd. Oriental rugs, silverwork, embroideries, precious stones, old swords and antiquities, tempt you to part with your money. One old merchant you might fancy is an Arab from the Arabian Nights. There is the Persian with his high felt hat, and the Hindu in a long gown, and the Jew with yellow turban. Listen to the Jew and he may speak to you in Hebrew, to say that he is a descendant of the Hebrew exiles of old. But the old days of Bagdad are passing away, and when the German railroad is completed, the old Bagdad will be no more.

On the shore of the river is a little round boat shaped like a bowl, but strong enough to hold a dozen men. We climb into it, and the boatman with a single paddle spins us over the water to the steamer which will take us farther down the river to Busreh. The river boats are large and flat, drawing but two or three feet of water, for the river is exceedingly shallow. The channel of the river is constantly changing, and the boat frequently runs aground on the sand bars. In the bow of the boat stand two men with long poles, feeling the way along, and they shout back to the pilot the depths of the water. Our fellow passengers are a motley crowd. Each brings his bed and stove and fuel and servants, and even sheep to be killed and eaten on the way.

The voyage of 1,520 miles to Busreh down the river is uninteresting. The country is flat; the shores are high. Now and then the Arabs run along with the boat, begging for food. Few ruins are visible. The great arch at Ctesiphon tells of the Persian rule. The canal, called the Shatt el-Hai, reminds us of the flourishing Babylonian days. A large building, known as the tomb of Ezra, recalls to mind the Hebrew exiles, and thither the Hebrew pilgrims now flock. Then we come to the meeting-place of the Tigris and Euphrates, and if our boat would stop we might step ashore in the "Garden of Eden," so the natives say.

Down the united stream we come to the date gardens of the world. The shores are lined with forests of date trees. Busreh stands among them, just as it stood a thousand years ago, when it was the Balsorah, from which Sindbad set out on his wonderful expeditions. In the river, ocean-going steamers are flying the flags of distant lands. From here you may sail to Bombay, or to Aden and the Red Sea. Beyond Busreh the river widens and finally merges into the hot Persian Gulf, and you are on your way home.

ON CALVARY

AS a lamb was Jesus taken;
From judgment he was brought;
Rejected, scorned, forsaken,
And "we esteemed him not."
Dear Lamb without a blemish,
Accused, but naught to say;
What mocking and derision,
What griefs were his that day!

O heart with sword-thrust riven!
O love so freely poured!
Borne down, thine utmost given!
Thou crucified—my Lord!
O wounded One, sore broken!
O Nazarene despised!
What have I as love's token
For thee, my God, disguised?

On Calvary uplifted,
Man's load of guilt to bear!
Sin's gloom forever rifted,
And glory everywhere!
Praise him, the King of heaven,
Who holds death's power in thrall!
To him all love be given,
And hail him King of all!

MR. FRANK A. BRICK.

MOTHER MINE

I LOVE each furrow in thy face,
The silver in thy hair;
There's naught but beauty I can trace,
There's none that's half so fair.
The love shines out from those dear eyes,
How well I know the sign
Of kindness, sweetness—all that's good—
Dear mother—mother mine!

You nursed me through my infant years,
You loved me as a child;
You shared with me my hopes and fears,
With counsel good and mild.
And when my erring footsteps strayed,
How sad that heart of thine!
You loved me better than before,
Dear mother—mother mine!

And now, when those dear eyes grow dim,
And pain clouds that dear face,
The love that you still have for him
Who oftimes fell from grace,
Will yet bear fruit a hundredfold
In love, dear heart, like thine,
More precious far than virgin gold,
Dear mother—mother mine!

SANITAS

THE MODERN WALL COVERING

THE walls of the house of today are as fresh as the rest of the home, because they are covered with SANITAS.

Wipe it with a damp cloth and it is clean and bright as new. When the up-to-date man and his wife put in their white open plumbing and hardwood floors, they look for a wall covering of the same standard.

SANITAS

is as lasting as the walls themselves — as easily put on as the dusty old paper — the last word in interior decoration, yet hygienically clean. It cannot fade. It does not wear out. It has the substantial beauty of really good things.

And the sweet, fresh cleanliness of these walls keeps the air of the house pure, the family healthier of body and mind.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S MEETINGS

NOTES ON THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR, EPWORTH LEAGUE AND BAPTIST YOUNG PEOPLE'S UNION TOPICS

Choosing Chums*

NOW that the school year has begun, the question of choosing our closest companions for the next few months of school life is interesting and serious. As a matter of fact the expression, "choosing chums," is hardly accurate, for choice implies something voluntary, and the companionships of life are largely involuntary. I do not mean that circumstances control these selections, but that they are always the result of things that began years before. Year after year we are making our own personalities. In this business we exercise practically unlimited freedom. And the friends we have at any given period in our lives are the people who have been drawn to us at that time by what we are.

If you have had an ambition this year to have the really best people at your school for your closest friends, you have been, perhaps unconsciously, fitting yourself for those friendships. The things you have thought about, the things you have read, the things you have become most deeply interested in, the things you have tried to do, the things you have planned to do, the music you have listened to and tried to learn, the sermons you have heard and tried to follow, all these things have helped to make you what you are, now that the school year has begun. And what you are will determine who your friends will be.

Of course, the thing works both ways. Others will be attracted to you and you will be attracted to others. It is not to be seriously thought of that any earnest Epworth Leaguer would willingly choose a companionship that would do him harm. Since Christ has promised to be our closest and best Friend, he will help us and advise us in making our school friendships. He may want us to become well acquainted with some one who may not be an earnest Christian in order that we may win him to the Saviour. But we must be very careful and very prayerful in every such friendship. Matters of influence are most subtle. And we must test every friendship by its effect upon our friendship with Christ. The real purpose in every companionship must be either that our friend helps us to know Christ better or that we help him in the same way. If we find that any companionship, no matter how precious, is luring us away from Christ, we must put an end to it unless we can have a reasonable hope that we can resist in the future this pull away from the Saviour and can begin to draw our friend toward him.

A word should be said about the snubbed and neglected students that are, unfortunately, found in every school. As you see them and meet them, keep asking yourself: "What would Jesus do?" Don't you think he would look them up and try to make them feel at home and try to get them into the interesting things of the school life? This is sweet and delightful work and often some of life's best friendships begin in this way.

Friendship is a beautiful word. The inner circle of the closest friends should not be large. Seek the highest things for yourself and you will find yourself surrounded by choice and inspiring friends and will yourself be an inspiration to others.

Asleep, awake, by land or sea,
The friends I seek are seeking me;
No wind can drive my bark astray,
Nor change the tide of destiny.

The stars come nightly to the sky,
The tidal wave unto the sea;
Nor time, nor space, nor deep, nor high,
Can keep my own away from me.

* "CHOOSING CHUMS: ITS INFLUENCE ON LIFE, CHARACTER AND DESTINY." Epworth League Topic for Sunday, October 5, 1913. I Sam. 18: 1-4; II Chron. 10: 10-16; II Cor. 6: 14-18; John 13: 23.

The Christian's Co-operation*

THERE is in some story or biography a sane statement made by a thoughtful man, explaining why he joined the church. He said that he would no more think of trying to live his Christian life and do his Christian work alone than he would think of shouldering his musket and marching alone against the enemy in time of war instead of enlisting in some regiment of his country's army.

That is a very ridiculous picture—a man going to war alone. But it is no more ridiculous than the picture of a man planning to wage his part of the spiritual warfare of life entirely separated from others. Of course, the Christian should be brave and independent, willing to stand alone if need be. But Christianity is, in its very nature, a social matter. We are saved one by one; we are to come, one by one, into personal friendship with God. But Christianity is for society. It is for the home; for the community; for circles of friends; for the groups that we call the church. And all through the Bible the fact is emphasized that the followers of God are to stand together and work together in fighting his battles and doing his tasks.

There is a surprise and mystery in co-operation something like the surprise and mystery of geometrical progression. "One of you shall chase a thousand," and two shall put not two thousand but "ten thousand to flight." When Jesus sent out his disciples, he sent them out two by two. The earliest missionaries after Pentecost made most of their expeditions in pairs. In his teachings about the wonders of prayer, Jesus had specified: "If two of you shall agree on earth as touching anything that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven."

Sin and fanaticism alike are apt to be lonely experiences. The sinner's friends, though they may be many at first, gradually become fewer and fewer; the Christian is making more friends all the time. Fanaticism takes a man away from his best and most helpful and most spiritual friends. One of the truest guides in the difficult problem of the divine leading is the advice of our most spiritual friends. You may well hesitate about anything that you feel led to do if you find yourself unwilling to talk it over freely with those who have been your best spiritual counselors and to pray with them about it.

The "ideal Christian" is willing to listen to the advice of others; is willing to give way to the wishes of others, unless conscience forbids; is willing that others should get full credit for their share in the work; will unite heartily with others in prayer and effort and faith; will be anxious that others, as well as himself, shall reap the rewards of victory and that all together shall bring glory to the fair name of Christ. We are "laborers together," with God and with one another, in this mighty task of bringing the world to him.

"Let the beauty of the Lord our God be upon us. And establish thou the work of our hands upon us. Yea, the work of our hands, establish thou it!"

* "THE IDEAL CHRISTIAN. X. HIS CO-OPERATION WITH OTHERS." Christian Endeavor and B. Y. P. U. Topic for Sunday, October 5, 1913. Col. 4: 1-18. (Consecration Meeting.)

SIR OLIVER LODGE ON IMMORTALITY

ONE of the most distinguished figures in the scientific world to-day is Sir Oliver Lodge. When it was announced some weeks ago that Sir Oliver, as president of the British Association, would deal in his inaugural address with the subject of the future life and would make some startling announcements, interest on two continents was deeply stirred. At the meeting of the association in Birmingham, England, on September 10, Sir Oliver delivered the promised address to an audience of over three thousand, in which both sexes and practically all classes were represented.

He announced as his subject, "Continuity." He began by summarizing the present attitude of science on the subject of man's continuous existence and its tendencies to negative generalizations, to vague forms of statement, to shrink from the mysterious and the obscure, and to deny the existence of whatever does not appeal to the organs of sense and to laboratory experiments. He held a belief in ultimate continuity as essential to science. Scientific concentration he pronounced an inadequate basis for philosophic generalization; he believed that obscure phenomena may be expressed simply if properly faced; and he pointed out that the non-appearance of anything perfectly uniform and omnipresent is only what should be expected, and is no argument against its real substantial existence.

He characterized the present age as one of "rapid progress and fundamental skepticism." Not, however, skepticism in a theological but in a scientific sense. He reviewed a large line of controversies in science and philosophy. Ours is an age "in which old postulates are being pulled up by the roots." Science is incompetent to make comprehensive denials; it should not deal in negations; nothing based on abstraction ought to presume to deny outside of its own region. He severely censured the school of arbitrary scientists who attempt to account for all things by precise scientific laws. "But," he asked, "do they account for everything completely? Do they account for our own feeling of joy and exaltation, for our sense of beauty, for the manifest beauty existing throughout nature? Do not these things suggest something higher and nobler and more joyous, something for the sake of which all the struggle for existence goes on? Surely there must be a deeper meaning involved in natural objects. Orthodox explanations are only partial, though true as far as they go.

Some of the most notable passages, quoted below, were delivered toward the close of this remarkable address. Sir Oliver said:

"Either we are immortal beings or we are not. We may not know our destiny, but we must have a destiny of some sort. Those who make denials are just as likely to be wrong as those who make assertions; in fact, denials are assertions thrown into negative form. Scientific men are looked up to as authorities, and should be careful not to mislead. Science may not be able to reveal human destiny, but it certainly should not obscure it. Things are as they are, whether we find them out or not; and if we make rash and false statements posterity will detect us—if posterity ever troubles its head about us.

"I am one of those who think that the methods of science are not so limited in their scope as has been thought; that they can be applied much more widely, and that the psychic region can be studied and brought under law, too. Allow us, anyhow, to make the attempt. Give us a fair field. Let those who prefer the materialistic hypothesis by all means develop their thesis as far as they can, but let us try what we can do in the psychical region, and see which wins. Our methods are really the same as theirs — the subject-matter differs. Neither should abuse the other for making the attempt.

"This is not the place to enter into details or to discuss facts scorned by orthodox science, but I cannot help remembering that an utterance from this chair is no ephemeral production, for it remains to be criticized by generations yet unborn, whose knowledge must inevitably be fuller and wider than our own. Your president therefore should not be completely bound by the shackles of present day orthodoxy, nor limited to beliefs fashionable at the time. In justice to myself and my co-workers, I must risk annoying my present hearers, not only by leaving on record our conviction that occurrences now regarded as occult can be examined and reduced to order by the methods of science, carefully and persistently applied, but by going further and saying, with the utmost brevity, that already the facts so examined have convinced me that memory and affection are not limited to that association with matter by which alone they can manifest themselves here and now, and that personality persists beyond bodily death.

"The evidence to my mind goes to prove that discarnate intelligence, under certain conditions, may interact with us on the material side, thus indirectly coming within our scientific ken, and that gradually we may hope to attain some understanding of the nature of a larger, perhaps ethereal, existence, and of the conditions regulating intercourse across the chasm. A body of responsible investigators has even now landed on the treacherous but promising shores of a new continent.

"The methods of science are not the only way, though they are our way, of arriving at truth. Many scientific men still feel in pugnacious mood toward theology, because of the exaggerated dogmatism which our predecessors encountered and overcame in the past. They had to struggle for freedom to find truth in their own way; but the struggle was a miserable necessity, and has left some evil effects. And one of them is this lack of sympathy, this occasional hostility, to other more spiritual forms of truth.

"Men and brethren, we are trustees of the truth of the physical universe as scientifically explored; let us be faithful to our trust. Genuine religion has its roots deep down in the heart of humanity and in the reality of things. It is not surprising that by our methods we fail to grasp it; the actions of the Deity make no appeal to any special sense, only a universal appeal; and our methods are, as we know, incompetent to detect complete uniformity. There is a Principle of Relativity here, and unless we encounter flaw or jar or change nothing in us responds; we are deaf and blind, therefore, to the immanent Grandeur around us, unless we have insight enough to appreciate the Whole, and to recognize in the woven fabric of existence, flowing steadily from the loom in an infinite progress toward perfection, the ever-growing garment of a transcendent God."

TRAIN THE YOUNG IN THE OLD BIBLE

I HAVE received The Pictorial Life of Christ. I am sure it will greatly interest younger people in the story of His life.

If there is anything that can bring back into child life the knowledge of the Bible and the work of the early Christians, which those of us who are old used to have, it will be one of the very best things that can be done for the present generation of children. Men have not only deserted the church, leaving it largely to women, but naturally the influence of the desertion of men and women both is being felt in the child-life, and I have noticed that all of our young people who are taking up public work to-day have very little knowledge of the Scriptures. They don't know how to quote or to refute a quotation when it is not correctly given. I consider that one of the very best helps for public speaking and public work is a facility to quote passages of Scripture and to use them to refute the statements of adversaries. I greatly rejoice in anything which induces our young people to study the life of Jesus and the works of the early church.

Most Likely to Follow Proper Eating.

As old age advances we require les food to replace waste, and food that w not overtax the digestive organs, whil supplying true nourishment.

Such an ideal food is found in Grape Nuts, made of whole wheat and barley b long baking and action of diastase in th barley which changes the starch into most digestible sugar.

The phosphates also, placed under th outer coat of the wheat, are included i Grape-Nuts, but are lacking in white flou because the outer coat of the wheat dark ens the flour and is left out by the mille These natural phosphates are necessary to the well-balanced building of muscle brain and nerve cells.

"I have used Grape-Nuts," writes a Iowa man, for 8 years and feel as goo and am stronger than I was ten years ago

"Among my customers I meet a man every day who is well along in years and attributes his good health to Grape-Nut and Postum which he has used for the last 5 years. He mixes Grape-Nuts with Postum and says they go fine together.

"For many years before I began to eat Grape-Nuts, I could not say that I enjoyed life or knew what it was to be able to say 'I am well.' I suffered greatly with constipation, but now my habits are as regular as ever in my life.

"Whenever I make extra effort I depend on Grape-Nuts food and it just fills the bill. I can think and write a great deal easier."

sufficient, sufficient now and forever? Is it adequate as your answer to the question, What is man's chief end? Is yours a life that moves to gracious ends, because it is hid with Christ in God? Is yours a life self-controlled, because Christ-controlled? Is it a life so shepherded by God that whatever be the earthly fortune, only goodness and mercy can be the ultimate issue? Or, is it empty of any high purpose, whose root is selfishness, whose motive is passion, whose god is appetite, whose end is destruction?

Men speak indulgently of the thoughtlessness of youth; and some of the young men are putting away the personal application of all this on the ground that there is time enough to think of these things, and that meanwhile it is enough to rejoice in thy youth, and let thy heart cheer thee in the days of thy youth, and walk in the ways of thine heart and in the sight of thine eyes. But if you are ever to be thoughtful, if you are ever to make anything of life, when is there a fitter time than now to consider? Not when habit has organized itself into life, and when tendency has hardened into habit. It is not for youth to be thoughtless; let age be if it may, but now, when destiny hangs on the decisions of these days and hours, it is the wilfulness of folly to shut the eyes and to harden the heart.

Rather, there is infinite truth in the thought which lies at the heart of Goethe's profound couplet,

What a man desires in his youth, that he shall have in age, as much as he will.

Among the Workers

—Mr. and Mrs. Tollma, of Randolph, Wis., have a very old copy of the Scriptures, which they have read through seventeen times. They celebrated their golden wedding two years ago, and say they "enjoy the reading of this dear old Book more than ever before."

—Evangelists Hart and Magann of Fairbury, Ill., commenced the last of their spring engagements at Herrin, Ill., with a great union tabernacle meeting, which began with great enthusiasm and large crowds. They are now booking engagements for the fall and winter.

—Evangelist Lewis Shellhorn, of Ashland, N. J., after a successful revival at Wanamie, Pa., proceeded to Blakeslee, Pa., for a similar campaign. There he found that many of the best church members in the place were converted in meetings held there by him ten years ago.

—Four churches of Rolla, N. D., a town of 600 inhabitants, recently invited the Rev. Francis E. Smiley, of Denver, and Mr. W. P. Hanson, singer, for special revival services. These lasted two weeks, and more than 125 persons professed conversion. In the second week certain society people who organized a dance lost $16 for hall rent and music. A vaudeville troupe played to an empty house although the Methodist Episcopal Church was packed. This experience was repeated next night. The moving-picture man closed up rather than risk loss.

—The Rev. Eugene P. Hall, pastor of the First Baptist Church, Long Island City, N. Y., accomplished great things during his first year there. He found 26 cents in the treasury and a debt of $400. His first congregation consisted of two women and a little girl. Within a year all debts were paid, improvements costing $1,400 had been made in the church edifice, fifty members had been added to the church by baptism, and the average attendance at services is 150. Mr. Hall plays several musical instruments, and goes into saloons and on to street corners to get his congregations and his converts; he learned his methods in the Salvation Army, in prison work, in work among soldiers and at branches of the Y. M. C. A. Needless to say, he is an active exponent of house-to-house visitation and personal appeal to all kinds of people at all kinds of times and seasons.

AFTER 12 YEARS

This "Liquid Granite" Floor is Still Bright and Lustrous

Pittsburgh, Pa., March 4, 1912.

"Some 12 years ago I put down in my residence a hardwood floor and in finishing it used Berry Brothers' Liquid Granite. Three years ago I decided to refinish. Soap, ammonia and warm water were used to prepare the floor, but had no effect on the varnish except to clean and brighten it. We are now using the floor with the original "Liquid Granite" and still find it superior to any finish we have ever seen."

Questions and Answers

D. E. L., Augusta, Ill. Joaquin Miller's religious poems are meager, yet they suffice to show that he was deeply stirred at times by the religious spirit. In a little group of poems, eight, or at most ten, altogether, we have a somewhat dim outline of the poet's beliefs. These poems are "At Bethlehem," "The Last Supper," "Faith," "Hope," "Charity," "Beyond Jordan," etc. In these, there is an recognition of the divinity and mission of Jesus. But there was another side to the poet, as any one may gather who reads his "In the Indian Summer," and similar pieces. He was a poet of nature, whimsical, and apt to tune his song to a somewhat pagan strain; yet the glimpses we catch here and there of his mind in more serious mood convince us that he had well-defined beliefs. In one of his poems he asks:

"Did I the religion assail? Gainsay
One creed that is taught or life hard hand,
Or teach aught else then as Christ taught? Nay;
There is little enough of love in the land;
There is little enough of Faith for me,
There is little enough of Charity."

C. W. D., Pensacola, Fla. We should regard the statement that nearly half the earth's population do not believe women have souls as greatly exaggerated. The Mohammedan population (which is said to hold that belief) is estimated at 200,000,000. It is possible that such a belief may be held by some of the still unenlightened tribes of Asia, Africa and South America, but any sweeping statement like the one quoted can not be entertained without further evidence.

H. A. L. K., St. Augustine, Fla. The "seven spirits of God" (Rev. 3: 1) is interpreted as meaning the fulness of the Spirit, "proving or implying his Godhead and his infinite power to convict of sin and of a hollow profession." Seven is the symbolic number of completeness. The "Seven Stars" (in the same passage) has been variously interpreted as seven active energetic zealous churches, or that perfectly consecrated Christian ministry which is the fruit of the gifts of the Holy Spirit.

Mrs. J. L. J., Sandusky, Mich. We are sending you a clipping from The Christian Herald of May 21, giving an answer to the question about unknown tongues. We feel that it is very likely that no modern church possesses this gift, as there seems to be now no reason for its continuance. It would be unfortunate, however, if any division of the congregation should occur from this controversy. The spirit of brotherly love and the promised gift of divine wisdom will solve any problem of this sort. "The wisdom that is from above" James declares to be "pure, peaceable, gentle, easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits." He distinguished it sharply from the wisdom that is not from above. (See James 3: 15-18.) There are many promises in the Book of definite divine guidance, and the united prayer of all the members of your church should bring that gift of wisdom to solve the problem that is perplexing you.

Mr. W. H. Mansur, Chillicothe, Mo., writes: "You have capped the climax in your article by Emma Gary Wallace, entitled 'A Panoramic Sunday School Parent.' Suppose we suggest to Auburn, N. Y., to repeat the present when we celebrate the opening of the canal at San Francisco and add a fleet for Uncle Sam at the rear of the procession. Auburn should be voted the best world's Sunday school convention."

W. A. C., Hurdin, S. C. Rom. 8: 1, as far as the last clause is concerned, has been the subject of much commentation as to its authenticity, and is not found in MSS. of the seventh, but only in MSS. of the ninth and tenth centuries. However, when we read Gal. 5: 18, 19, it is apparent that Paul did write both.

R. P., Tyrone, Kans. Some commentators have interpreted the passage in Lam. 2: 5, 6, taken in connection with the statement of the rainbow in chapter 9: 12-15, to mean that up to that time there had been no rain on the earth, that the soil had been watered solely by dews and mists, that a great physical change took place in the atmosphere which permitted rain for the first time after the cessation of the Flood, and that the rainbow was then first seen. There are other authorities who reconcile this view and who hold that the appearance of the rainbow was not new, but that a new meaning was given to it by the Creator, who (according to careful consistency of Gen. 8: 15) "gave" or "constituted" it as the sign and token of his covenant of mercy. 2. The "sons of God" and "daughters of men" are interpreted as referring, the first to the godly progeny of Seth, and the second to the descendants of Cain. 3. Paul in Heb. 2: 7 says "Thou hast made him [man] a little lower than the angels." See also Ps. 8: 5. Your other question leads into the realm of speculation.

S. E. C., Waukee, Iowa. In the account of the calling of Abram (Gen. 12) in whatever form the call may have come—whether in a dream or a vision or by a visible manifestation—Abram himself was fully convinced that it was a divine communication. We read, however, that it was the Lord who appeared unto Abram (verse 7). This was the first of the series of appearances or special manifestations of deity to the patriarchs—made, as some commentators hold "in the person of the Angel of the Covenant the Revealer of God, who introduced and conducted the opening dispensation."

H. M. J., Sunderland, Ont. 1. The representation of the French as a nation of atheists is an exaggeration. There are many excellent Christian people there. Write to Pastor Charles Wagner, Paris, for information. 2. There is not at the present time any notable movement among the Jews looking to the acceptance of Christianity, although there have been a considerable number of conversions both here and abroad. Prophecy seems to indicate that the race will ultimately accept Christ, but when the transformation will take place no one can foresee.

J. B., Avon Park, Fla. The word "bungalow" comes from India, where it is used of a one-story house, thatched or tiled, surrounded by verandas. The Hindu form of the word is "bangla," meaning "of Bengal," and probably indicating that this form of architecture was first used in Bengal. In American architecture the term is used somewhat loosely of one or one-and-one-half story houses, with more or less ornamental roofs and broad verandas.

Subscriber, Siloam Springs, Ark. The passage relative to nations beating their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning-hooks can be found in Isa. 2: 4; also in Joel 3: 10 and Micah 4: 3. In Isaiah the passage is interpreted by most commentators as a prophecy of Christ's kingdom.

Pastor Sheldon's Announcement

How He Came to Write the Story, "Jesus Is Here!" and the Strange Inspiration Under Which He Wrote It

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has asked me to write a brief explanatory note for its readers concerning the new serial story, "Jesus Is Here!"

The story In His Steps was written during the summer of 1896 and read to my congregation during the fall and winter of that year. It was published in serial and book form in 1897, and it may interest The Christian Herald's readers to know that within the last sixteen years it has been translated into fifteen languages and printed by more than one hundred publishers in the United States, Great Britain, and Europe.

During all the years since In His Steps was written I have been brooding over a continuation of the story, which would include the person of Jesus living in actual daily contact with the men and women of to-day. It has seemed to me, as I dwelt upon it, that without irreverence, and as a natural result, Jesus could be imagined as being here to-day, facing our problems and sharing our troubles and entering into our earthly life.

Under the constant pressure of this thought I have written for The Christian Herald this story, which carries forward the life stories of the principal characters of In His Steps, with Jesus as the Central Figure.

With the exception of Chapter I, all the rest of the story was written practically at a sitting. I did no other writing for two months, and seemed driven day and night to go on. As I think back upon that period, I sometimes have a strange feeling that some one else is the author—and I sometimes felt, in my study, late at night, while writing, as if some one else was in the room.

My prayerful hope for the story is that in the reading of it Jesus Himself may become a more real and vital presence, and especially that His disciples in His Church may have a vision of real discipleship. Christianity is the greatest thing in the world. Jesus is the greatest personality among men. My daily prayer, as this story is being read by the hundreds of thousands of your readers, is that it may be used, as In His Steps was used, by the Spirit to help the disciple in his earthly struggle and reveal Jesus as the most permanent and powerful factor in history.

During the appearance of the story in The Christian Herald, which begins in your issue of October 22, I shall welcome letters from the readers, and pray with them for the power of Jesus to be revealed mightily in the church and the world.

Charles M. Sheldon

Topeka, Kansas.

I. W. W., Wentworth, Wis. Can a person be a Christian and not study his Bible and Sunday school lesson, although always ready to learn from hearing others talk and never forgetting to go to God in prayer? 2. Mrs. C. B. P., Harmony, Minn. Please inform me what is the best way to study the Scriptures—from the Bible, or from books giving it in a more simple form, more easily understood.

These questions should be answered together as they both indicate a somewhat mistaken point of view with reference to the Bible. The Christian should go to the Bible just as a sheep goes to pasture or a thirsty man to water. We should cultivate the feeling that in the Bible God is speaking to us personally, and read for ourselves, expecting to find definite, personal messages for our own souls. Hearing others talk about the Bible or explain it or preach from its texts can never take the place of reading it for ourselves. But we ought ever to be mindful of the fact that preaching and teaching are the most important functions of ministers and preachers. They are highly trained, are specially endowed to that end, and their explanations of texts and passages, being the result of careful and prayerful preparation and research, have the weight of authority and should be accordingly valued. Helps and commentaries are also useful, but we should not get into the habit of relying upon them or of reading them to the exclusion of the Bible itself. Many people, particularly young Christians, are apt to become discouraged about the Bible reading because they begin with the most difficult instead of the simplest parts. A good book to begin with is the Gospel of Mark. This is a straightforward account of the life and death and resurrection of Jesus. After reading this several times you will become interested in reading Matthew's and Luke's account of the same events, and will read John to get the deeper and more spiritual conceptions of the Master and his wonderful conversations reported at greater length here than in the other Gospels. At the same time he reading the book of Acts, which is plain and intensely interesting. Read Isaiah and the Psalms for devotional use. In Paul's epistles a good place to start is the letter to the Philippians, which is full of joy, and contains plain and important teachings about the person of Jesus. Ephesians and Colossians contain rich spiritual teaching, and Romans and Galatians give the foundations of Paul's doctrine. Starting with this foundation you will be better able to understand and enjoy all the other epistles of the New Testament. Gradually you will grow familiar with the Old Testament, history and prophecy alike, and will soon come to find Bible-reading a delight, particularly if you have passed through a definite experience of conversion through faith in Christ's blood and are seeking all the time to come, through faith and obedience, into closer fellowship with him.

J. M., Lake City, Minn. The poem beginning:

"This world is all a fleeting show,
For man's illusion given" was written by Thomas Moore, and can be found in any collection of his works.

G. C., Scranton, Pa. Whether Jephthah paid his rash vow by the sacrifice of his daughter's life, or whether she was permanently immured and deprived of all contact with the outward world, as some believe, cannot be determined. Josephus, the Jewish historian, says: "He sacrificed his daughter as a burnt-offering, such an oblation as was neither conformable to the law, nor acceptable to God."

Miscellaneous

Reader, Arnot, Pa. We know of no book on the subject you mention.

J. N. P., Junction City, Ohio. See the full explanation of your question in Gen. 9.

M. G., Crediton, Ontario, Can. There is nothing in Scripture to support such a claim.

E. T. R., Montague, Mich. See answer to same question from another correspondent.

H. B. M., Hill Top, Col. See the information you want in Dr. Sheldon's letter on this page.

Mrs. E. B., Brooklyn, N. Y. Mohammed was born in Mecca, April, 571, and died in Medina, June 8, 632.

C. O. H., Huntingdon, Pa. Shetland ponies are originally from the Shetland Isles, north of Great Britain, but they can be bred elsewhere successfully. Write to Fiss, Doerr & Co., or Van Tassell & Kearney, New York.

Mrs. A. A., Fort Jackson, N. Y. The windows in the ark were presumably mere openings, closed with shutters against the storm, and used for light and ventilation. Glass was not invented till long afterward.

C. S., Tuppan, N. Y. The typographical custom of capitalizing all pronouns that referred to deity has been greatly modified within the last ten years, apparently by general consent. We confess to a liking for the old way, however.

H. D., Lagrangeville, N. Y. In Palestine to-day there is a mixture of races, nationalities and religions including Turks, Syrians, Jews, Arabs and Egyptians, with a sprinkling of Occidentals. A majority are Mohammedans, but there is a fair proportion of Christians.

Mrs. C. J. T., Dayton, Tenn. Under the Mosaic law, there were many offences liable to punishment by death. In the New Testament the subject of capital punishment is not discussed, except that Christ, according to Matt. 26: 52, paraphrases the old Mosaic law on the subject as found in Gen. 9: 6, and says, "For all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword." But the authority of the law of the land is acknowledged, and the duty of obedience to law is fully recognized.

UP AND DOWN IN OLD ARMENIA

BY PROF. EDGAR J. BANKS

HE Armenian who brings to us the rich embroideries and rugs from the Orient is not generally considered of the people of the Bible, but e is a strong probability that s a descendant of the old, erful nation of the Hittites. , he is of a double interest to Bible student. His ancient king- , once a power in the world, is divided between Russia, Per- and Turkey. He is without a try, but of his lost country snow-capped peak of Ararat ot far from the center.

Russian Armenia, to the h of Ararat, almost in the low of the great mountain, the little village of Etchmiad- There, in the religious cen- of the Armenian world, one see the Armenian at his best. claims to have been among the t to embrace Christianity, and dates many of his churches m almost the beginning of the ristian era. From the Russian town of Erivan, we had driven through the Araxes Valley to this old monastery. It was long after dark when we ived, yet the gates were opened to us, and we were taken to a building erved for strangers, where food and lodging are provided free all who come. The Catholicos, or head of the Armenian urch, commissioned a priest to attend us. There are a re of buildings of which the Armenians are proud. The ests proudly show the vestments of past centuries, hly decorated with rubies and emeralds and rls. There are rare gifts from all parts of the rld, including what they claim to be wood from Cross, and a bit of the ark of Noah. The w stone library contains several thousand ient Armenian manuscripts, the contents which are little known. In the museum are neiform inscriptions from twenty-five cen- ies ago. Going south from Etchmiadzin, we vel through the heart of old Armenia. We ss the base of Mount Ararat, always within ht of the snow-capped summit. Beyond the rkish border the little Armenian villages are re squalid. Along with the Armenians, in e same villages, or in others more squalid, live e Kurds. Strange are the tales of cruelty which e Armenians relate of this old enemy of eirs. Whenever there is an Armenian massacre, e Kurds are employed to do the slaying. If an rmenian be found straying alone, his life is in nger. A German botanist was recently robbed the Kurds and left half dead. Their only defense as that they thought he was an Armenian. In a wagon awn at twilight into one town, I saw the bodies of two rmenians. The Kurds had just killed them, and I was assured at it was too common an occurrence to attract attention. Among e Armenian peasants the old patriarchal system prevails. The tire family of a score or two of people of several generations ves beneath a single roof. Together both men and women till the lds in a primitive manner, and when the grain is ripe, they take a sheaf to e roadside that the passing stranger may give a present and thus bless their op. Their houses are of stone roughly laid, or of mud, or frequently they e half underground and from a distance their dome-like roofs resemble the ounds of a prairie dog settlement. A week's journey south of Etchmiadzin is the old capital city of Van. High in the mountains, five thousand feet above the sea, it stands by a beautiful lake. Though it has more than fifty thousand people, it consists chiefly of one wide street reaching from the lake for miles up the gentle slope. About are walls of massive stone as old as Nineveh, and decorated with cuneiform inscriptions. High on one of its sides, where no man may climb, is the famous bilingual inscription of Xerxes, king of Persia. Cut into the solid rock are several palaces which excite the wonder of the traveler. Semiramis, whom tradition calls the wife of Ninus, the founder of Nineveh, or Shamiram, as the Armenians call her, may have built them. On the summit of the rock we found an ancient, headless stone statue, now broken in two, that may have come from her time. The present glory of Van is the mission. Some forty years ago, three American missionaries appeared at the Armenian capital; one of them, Dr. Reynolds, is still there. During the massacres of 1896, the lives of thousands who fled to the mission grounds were saved; thousands of orphans were fed, taught a trade and sent out to earn their way, and in the mission schools thousands of others are given a Western education. In the large hospital, headed by Dr. Ussher, the sick are restored to health. It is now the hope of the missionaries to build a college, and thus extend their influence. Some years ago, Dr. Reynolds was attacked by Kurds, robbed and bound and left to die. In some way he released himself and bound up his wounds. Years later the Turkish Government gave him an indemnity of three thousand dollars, and with that money he built the church. Thus the Kurds who sought to destroy the missionaries made their influence greater. On the shores of Lake Van is the snow-capped Mount Sipan, and near it is Nimrud Dagh, the second largest crater in the world. For miles about the country is covered with lava beds. There are fully twenty streams flowing into the lake, but not one flows out. The water is exceedingly bitter, and so heavy that to sink in it is difficult. A century and a half ago, when the lake possessed an outlet through a natural tunnel, it was much smaller than now, but during a quarrel the Kurds filled up the tunnel with bags of wool. Since then the lake has risen one hundred and fifty feet. The villages along its shores have been covered. Old churches, the oldest in Armenia, stand beneath the waters. The high places formed islands, and the waters are rising above them. Millions of acres of farm lands have been lost, and the very best of Armenia is now submerged. Still the waters are rising, and they must rise six hundred feet more before they can find a natural outlet. Before then the old city of Van and even its high castle rock with its inscriptions and palaces, will ultimately be buried. Dr. Ussher is now trying to persuade the Turkish Government to tunnel through the rocks to form a new outlet below the present level. If he succeeds, the old Armenian city will be saved. It is a beautiful ride of ten hours across the lake to Tadwan, a little Armenian village where life in all its simplicity

SHAN KIVE

THE CURIOUS MIDSUMMER RITE OF THE COLORADO INDIANS

BY FELIX J. KOCH

SQUAW AND PAPPOOSE ON THE WAY TO THE SHAN KIVE

UTE INDIANS ON THE T FOR PIKE'S PEAK

EVERY year the Ute Indians are brought to the Pike's Peak region from their reservation to dance at the Sacred Springs of the Manitou, among the red rocks of the Garden of the Gods. During the Shan Kive, as the celebration is called, some notable event of Indian history is commemorated along with the parade and the carnival features. Last year the Indians and some old pioneers, marshaled for the purpose, dedicated the Ute Trail, the oldest Indian highway in the United States. This year they united in placing a stone and tablet on Cascade Avenue, in Colorado Springs, to mark the spot where, on September 3, 1868, the last big massacre of the whites by Indians began.

Another event of this year's Shan Kive was a great Marathon race up Pike's Peak, in which Indians and cowboys competed. The plainsman and the pioneer fraternize with their old foe, the Redskin, among the grotesque forms of the Garden of the Gods at Shan Kive—if at no other time. For example, there is a great camp at which the veteran cowboys of the range are entertained as guests of the countryside. Seldom less than five hundred of these sons of the early West go into the camp. Tents are provided, a chuck wagon is set up, with a good cook in charge, and all the cowmen of the range are entertained free; while frontier feats, such as rough-riding, roping and horse-breaking, serve as pastime for the men.

After all, however, the Indians hold the prime interest of the stranger at Shan Kive. Primitive conditions among the American Indians are now rapidly disappearing, and in another generation will be traditions even to the sons of the Red Men. It has been for the purpose of offering visitors from other parts of the world—to whom the Indians are a novelty—an opportunity to see nearly the last of those still living in tribal condition that the Shan Kive was organized. The Utes are particularly fitted to the festival, because their race held all the mountain region hereabouts for unknown centuries, and to retain it constantly had to fight the Arapahoe, Cheyenne and other Plains Indians. At that time the region was alive with game, and as the Indians held the soda springs sacred, they all coveted the surrounding land and it was a bloody battleground.

The Utes have always been friendly to the whites, and it was this friendship that enabled the early settlements to continue during the war of the Rebellion, because the plains tribes were afraid of their ancient enemies. It is in remembrance of this long friendship that the Utes are invited to come to the old home each year and hold the Shan Kive.

At the last of these celebrations a band of seventy-five Utes mustered for sacred dances at the springs. Shan Kive corresponds to the carnival time of other nations. The pleasure-loving people of this bright and sunny land break into gaiety, such as is, perhaps, equaled anywhere for picturesqueness of action and setting unless it be at nival time in southeastern Europe. One who knows them best tells us s interesting facts about these Utes who hold the Shan Kive. "Of all the Ind in the great West," he says, "none were more difficult to understand. Everytl they did or attempted to do of a personal nature was kept a secret a themselves. They would not permit an outsider to learn anything about t personal characteristics if they could prevent it. A Ute would not even his name or that of any member of his family, nor would he mention the p put on one of his daughters when she was to become the wife of one of tribe. It was known to the father and husband only. Everything a Ute seemed to be surrounded by mystery, and for that reason less was knowr them than of any other Indian tribe in the West.

"The Utes had one peculiarity which was unlike any other nation or tr namely, the great secrecy they observed in their funeral ceremonies; for white person, so far as I know, has ever seen the funeral of a Ute. When of them died the corpse vanished.

"Whether even they themselves, genera knew the resting-place of their dead it difficult to decide. It was believed by most of those who knew most about th and observed their ways that the bodies the dead were removed during the night a buried secretly in some cave or in ground, though this is merely a surmi At any rate they would secretly get rid the bodies in some way. It is my opin that they buried them deep in holes in t earth during the night, and so carefu covered them, after interment, as to lea no trace of the burial spot.

"The men wore their hair long and son times braided in queues; the women c theirs short. Nor did they paint themsel like other Indians. The men wore the c tomary breechcloth and a pair of moccasi which, with a robe of buffalo or of so other animal, constituted their dress for t winter."

UTE INDIANS DANCING AT THE ANNUAL SHAN KIVE

ORPHANS AMID WAR AND FLOOD

From a Missionary Correspondent in China

IN TIMES of much rumor and uncertainty here in China we are privileged to send you a greeting from your little CHRISTIAN HERALD children, wishing to inform you that they are all wonderfully well. There was imminent danger threatening in May through the approach of the Mongolian devastating hordes. At first they overcame the Chinese soldiers and made an advance to attack the city of Paoteo, which caused an awful stir in that city, the terror-stricken inhabitants fleeing by the thousands. In three days about 30,000 left the city and sought a refuge elsewhere.

Saratsi, being only thirty miles distant from Paoteo, was of course affected by the rumors, and a few of the nurses left us, thinking it was safer in their country homes. The Mongols were, however, repulsed by a plucky official, who trusted in the protection of the living God, and our district was saved from the invasion of the enemy. Since then, peace has been restored and we have been enabled to go on.

Your little orphan girls are all well and happy. On the 4th of July we managed to get the children out to a mountain five miles distant. There, on the mountainside, beside a little stream and in the shadow of big willow trees, we spent some bright hours with them. They had not had a picnic for two years, and you may imagine their great delight. But having so many children, as we have, it is not easy to take them out. We had fifteen carts hired for the purpose and formed quite a procession. Still, seeing little faces beam with joy and hearing the children's joyous chat, one felt rewarded for whatever trouble such a journey might involve.

One of your eldest girls, who has just returned from the Huhcheo High School, has wonderfully developed during the time she has been away, and is now a very promising girl. Remembering how she was picked up outside of the Paoteo city walls, one cannot but praise the Lord for that which the Gospel and Christian love have done for her.

Our orphanage has just been visited by "China's Sorrow"—the Yellow River. The orphanage owns a tract of land—1,800 Chinese acres—not far from its banks. We had a most promising crop growing on it two weeks ago—the best since we bought the land—but the river rose and inundated the whole farm, and the crop is completely spoiled. The granary, with a large quantity of millet, and the houses were threatened, but were saved, for which we are thankful. It is remarkable that a neighbor's houses, although situated higher than ours, were destroyed by the overwhelming mass of water.

Many were the appeals that those days went up to the throne of grace during our flood peril. The little orphans, knowing that their farm was threa ened by the water, joined in prayer. A chorus silent petitions went up with the audible on That the total loss of a year's crop will be keen felt goes without saying, but we have committe it to Him who knows, and who surely has means supply what has been taken away by the flood.

We are aware of the great responsibility of hav ing so many little lives to care for, and we woul shrink from this task of ours, if we didn't know th faithfulness of our Lord and that his people are co operating with us.

We thank you for all help and loving kindnes you have extended to us in the past.

GOOD SUMMER'S GOOD ENDING

EAKING at the Ninth "Converts' Rally" of ıe New York City Evangelistic Committee in arnegie Hall on September 15, Former Conressman William S. Bennet said that some go, while attending a service in the Mormon at Utah, he was amazed to hear the leader ce in a matter-of-fact way that a certain in the audience, evidently hitherto unin-
, would deliver the sermon. Mr. Bennet struck him then that if a Mormon were to get up and deliver a religious address y occasion, surely a "Presbyterian elder" to be able to do the same thing.

work of the committee is truly cosmopolitan.
)red here in the neighborhood of these well-torches and on Wall Street, as well as in neigh-)ds notorious for poverty and vice. In one y a gang of tough boys had been transformed gh the influence of the tent meetings into a class. The tent preacher, speaking at the gie Hall rally, asked the members of this to stand up, and they did so manfully. An-worker told of a young girl, once the leader )and of girl rowdies, who tried last season to b the meetings, who is now a loyal supporter tent work and a faithful helper.

Arthur J. Smith, the superintendent of the ittee's work, told of a young Italian who ht a murderous looking knife to the evangel-
.ying that since he had given his heart to Jesus
t he had no further use for it. Dr. Robert F. Y. Pierce, pastor of the Second Avenue Baptist Church, in telling of the remarkable meetings held in co-operation with the committee upon the steps of his church, said that he had received letters from a number of young men declaring that they were on the verge of suicide when they were redeemed through the influence of the meetings. Another worker told of a street which a few years ago was a scene of frequent brawling and occasional murders, having been transformed into a quiet and orderly neighborhood largely through the influence of the Gospel summer tent. Dr. Vincent P. Pisek, pastor of the Presbyterian Bohemian Church on Seventy-fourth Street, reported that twenty persons had joined his church as a result of the meetings this summer. Dr. Carstensen told of a Bible class of thirty men organized to meet during the noon hour for the winter as a result of the summer meetings on Wall Street.

Carnegie Hall was a place of life and joy and song on the evening of the rally. The evangelistic chorus of five hundred voices, under the leadership of Benjamin F. Butts, was seated on the platform. Above them hung a great banner upon which were the words, "Be ye reconciled to God." A corresponding banner was draped along the great balconies in the rear of the building. Upon the main floor were seated the converts and their friends, arranged in groups about banners which indicated their nationality and the location of the tent or other service in which they had found the Saviour and worshiped him.

Mr. Stephen Baker, chairman of the committee, presided, and after conducting the preliminary exercises, introduced Dr. Smith, who gave his report and called upon many workers to give brief accounts of their summer experiences and in some cases to call upon special converts for personal testimony.

Superintendent and workers agree that there has been an unusual eagerness on the part of the people this year to hear the Gospel message. The total attendance at the various tent, open air and shop meetings was almost double that of two seasons ago. This year 646,214 persons stopped to listen to the message; in 1911 the total count was 325,210. The committee was also encouraged to find that though the attendance had almost doubled in the two years, the expenses of the campaign had been reduced by more than two thousand dollars.

As is apt to be the case where God's people are meeting to praise him for his blessing, the taking of the collection was one of the most enjoyable parts of the program. The great chorus sang softly "I Gave My Life for Thee, What Hast Thou Given For Me?" "I Need Thee Every Hour," and "I Love My Saviour's Name." Many choirs are paid to sing, but the spirit of this choir was made clear when it was announced during the collection that each member of the choir would pledge a contribution of a dollar for the continuation of the committee's work. Dr. Smith related an incident of the rally a year ago. A young college student was sitting in a box with his father and mother while the pledge cards were being collected. "How much are you going to give?" he asked his father, who had not been deeply interested in religious matters. "I'll give ten times as much as you do," the older man replied. The boy figured his allowance carefully, and with a determined hand put down fifty dollars, whereupon his father pledged his five hundred.

The committee has in its possession nine thousand names and addresses of persons who during this and other seasons have signified their desires to become Christians. The winter work consists largely in following up these names, enrolling the converts into Bible classes and getting them connected with the local churches.

Among the striking musical numbers was Mr. Butts's rendering of his own impressive song: "It's All Right Now," a charming solo by Miss Minnie Steinmetz, "Christ Will Never Fail," and, just before the hallelujah chorus, the doxology, sung first in English, then in Hungarian, then in Bohemian, then in Italian, then in German, then in Spanish, then in Chinese, in French, and in English. THE OLD HONESTY AND THE NEW

IS the fashion nowadays to deplore the gen-ral want of moral principle and to lament the lecline of old-fashioned honesty.

But, really, how about this old-fashioned sty?

is always easy to see a saint in a dead relative, as it is easy to see a statesman in a dead cian.

andfather's virtues, like grandfather's clocks, be a badge of respectability, but in our own
they are not always in good running order.

r forefathers were no better than we are. Into judge from some criticism of their contemries, they were a good deal worse.

ıe world in which old-fashioned honesty lived singularly uncomplicated. Smith knew Jones
Jones knew Smith, and if the one did not cheat )ther there was every chance that each would in the odor of respectability. Individualism he limits to old-fashioned honesty.

e need this individualistic honesty to-day, and ıave it. But we need to-day a very much big-sort of honesty—an honesty which sees that our obligations are set not alone by our relations with one another, but also by our relations with municipalities and States, with a nation and a world.

Such honesty is not any too common, but it is growing.

Men have gone down to their mausoleums labeled honest millionaires, who were directors in corporations whose methods would bring blushes to the cheek of a confidence man. According to the standard of old-fashioned honesty there was nothing to be said against these honest millionaires. But from the point of view of the new honesty they were thieves, though they robbed legally.

Morality is always a generation or two ahead of legality.

The number of offenses against the moral and legal codes is increasing constantly.

Moral principle never cut so large a figure in the affairs of this American people as it does to-day.

We have twenty moral qualms where our godly ancestors had one.

It never occurred to them that a lottery was wrong, or that it was wicked to drink whisky, or to whip a child or a wife, or to enslave the black man and cheat the red man.

Nine out of ten of the little conscientious niceties of life are discoveries of the last fifty years.

More societies to do all sorts of good and work all kinds of reforms have been created in the last two generations than had been formed or thought of before from the beginning of the world.

We are getting better. No doubt about it.

But there is still plenty of room for improvement.

JESUS AND OUR DAILY WORK

*A SERMON BY REV. JOHN H. C. FRITZ

TEXT: "Jesus said unto them, Cast the net on the right side of the ship, and ye shall find." John 21: 6

MUCH is made in our day of a so-called social program of Jesus. This program calls for a practical application of the principles of Christianity to the everyday life of man. The advocates of this program are seeking to lighten the burdens of life, especially of that class of people commonly known as the working class. The proposition sounds well. In itself it offers no objectionable feature. The fact, however, is that the advocates of this so-called social program of Jesus are leaving Jesus very much out of the program. They have a program of their own. Their program runs like this: Improve the housing conditions; establish well-regulated playgrounds, public baths, public parks; regulate the working hours of men, women and children; give due attention to the sanitary condition of public buildings, public thoroughfares, and the home; legislate against the abuse of intoxicating liquors, against evil resorts, dives, gambling and the like.

If it were said that these things should form part of the program of the state, of the legislatures, or of civic organizations, we would at once agree, and as citizens be ready heartily to co-operate. When this is made the program of the church, however, and called the social program of Jesus, we must object. The purpose and duty of the church is to save souls, to build up a spiritual kingdom; not to make a paradise of this world, but to make the sinner a fit subject for the paradise of heaven. The so-called social program of Jesus, as outlined before, goes to make only for the outward and temporal well-being of man, and even in this largely fails, but it cannot save one single soul. To do this, God has given unto his church but one means, the Gospel, the preaching of the glad tidings to the sinner, who, by the law, has come to a knowledge of his sins, that "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Every other means or scheme to save the sinner will and must fail, as experience has also amply proved.

A Gospel for Everyday Use

Of course the Gospel should be practically applied. The public preaching of the Gospel is, in fact, such a practical application. The Gospel should, and if it be but faithfully preached will, enter as a transforming and life-giving force into the very life of the people. The real social program of Jesus is that in which Jesus is "the Way and the Truth and the Life." The program of Jesus, and, therefore, of his church, runs like this: Convert the sinner from his evil ways unto the living God by faith in Christ, the Saviour, so that he will not get drunk, lie, steal and murder; so that as a Christian employer he will not overwork and underpay his workingmen; so that, as a Christian workingman, he will render faithful service, not as unto man but as unto God; and so that, as a Christian citizen, he will seek the best interests of his country.

Right here lies the duty and also the power of the Christian Church. The church does not first of all supply the loaves and fishes, but that spiritual food of the soul which is man's greatest need, knowing that unto those who eat this spiritual food the loaves and fishes will not be denied. In this way the church does, and in no other way can it, make not only for the eternal but also for the temporal well-being of man. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness and all these things"—food, clothing, house, home—"shall be added unto you." In these words Christ has himself outlined his program.

Accordingly we find Christ, the loving Saviour, present among his disciples also in their everyday life, blessing them, lightening their burdens, and making life cheerful. This very lesson is taught us by our text. We learn (1) that the Christian should be engaged in daily work; (2) that the Saviour is with the Christian while he performs his daily work; (3) that the Saviour abundantly blesses the Christian's daily work; (4) that the Christian should recognize the Saviour's presence and blessing, and give thanks.

*Pastor Lutheran Church of Our Saviour, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Our text brings to our view a scene at the Sea of Tiberias, also called the Sea of Galilee. We see seven disciples of the Lord standing at the seashore. One of them is speaking. "Simon Peter saith unto them, I go a-fishing. They say unto him, We also go with thee." These men did not go a-fishing for pleasure or pastime. They had been fishermen by occupation. While they were waiting, after the Lord's death and resurrection, to be given the special gifts of the Holy Spirit and to be sent out into the world as fishers of men, they followed their old occupation to get a living.

Christ Beside the Willing Worker

We should also go a-fishing. Our discipleship does not take us out of this world nor away from our secular calling. When the mechanic becomes a Christian, he is not to lay down his tools, nor is the clerk to leave his desk, nor the professional man to forsake his profession. The Christian is to perform the daily work of life, and thereby get his living. "If any would not work, neither should he eat." I fail to find that the Bible exempts any from this rule. We all belong to the working class; the millionaire no less than his chauffeur, and the millionaire's wife no less than her kitchen-girl.

While the Christian is engaged in his daily work, the Saviour is present. "When the morning was come, Jesus stood on the shore." The risen Saviour had not forgotten nor forsaken his disciples. He desired that they should see him. He appeared unto them. It was the "third time that Jesus shewed himself unto his disciples, after that he was risen from the dead." At first "the disciples knew not that it was Jesus." This fact made his presence not less real. The Saviour is present at our daily work. While the Christian wife and mother is doing her housework, getting the meals ready, setting the table, washing the dishes, sweeping the carpets or rugs, doing the family washing and ironing and sewing, dressing the little ones or getting the older children off to school, the Saviour is at her side. While the Christian husband and father is at his day's work, getting a living for the family, the Saviour is also there. He is with the laborer on the street, with the mechanic in the shop, with the clerk at his desk, with the lawyer in his office, with the physician at the bedside, with the teacher at the school. We may think to be alone, but we are not. "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world," is the gracious promise which he gave us just before ascending unto heaven.

The Saviour looks on silently but not indifferently. He is present to bless. He well knew that his disciples "that night caught nothing." Lovingly, as one much concerned also about their bodily welfare, he asks, "Children, have ye any meat? They answered, No. And he said unto them, Cast the net on the right side of the ship and ye shall find. They cast, therefore, and now they were not able to draw it for the multitude of fishes. . . . Simon Peter went up and drew the net to land, full of great fishes, an hundred and fifty and three. And for all there were so many, yet was the net not broken."

All Our Needs Bountifully Supplied

Our work, without the Lord's blessing, results in nothing. Labor alone is not the creator of wealth. The farmer needs the sunshine and the rain, and protection from hail and tempest, from fire and flood, else he will not be able to harvest a crop. Sunshine and rain are not of the farmer's making, nor are the elements in his power. To the miner's boring and digging there must be added the gold and silver and copper and coal, else his boring and digging will be in vain. These he will find only where the Creator has put them. The carpenter and the mason and the iron-worker need wood and stone and iron, else they cannot work at their trade. But wood and stone and iron God only can supply. The grocer and butcher and baker, the bank clerk, the insurance man, and the stenographer must have the products of the farm and of the mine and of the manufacturing industries, else they will have nothing to buy and sell, no money to handle, no buildings to insure, no letters to write.

Even the unbeliever has nothing which G[od] not given him. "God maketh his sun to rise [on] evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on t[he] and on the unjust." By his goodness God lead the ungodly unto repentance. The Ch[ild] however, enjoys the blessing of his Saviour, unbeliever does not. It was man's sin tha[t] God say, "In the sweat of thy face shalt th[ou] bread." Through sin work has become a unto man. Many would rather play than Many work simply because of selfish m[o]tive Through Christ, who removed the curse of sin has again become a pleasure unto us. The tian renders cheerful service unto God and What one loves to do, one does with ease.

To the Christian, God has given the promis[e] all he needs for the wants and support of th[is] "shall be added unto him." Or such a pro[mise] this, "All things whatsoever ye shall ask in p[rayer] believing, ye shall receive." Such direct, ab[solute] promises and privileges the unbeliever ha[s no]t Therefore we hear the Psalmist say: "I have young and now am old; yet have I not seen the eous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread." is well borne out by experience. The large ar[my] beggars who are walking our streets, coming doors and making demands upon public charit[y] not the righteous, nor are they our church mem[bers] The righteous need not go about begging The Christian may be reduced to want, but the supplies that want, though, like Elijah, he sen[ds] to the brook for water and command the rave[n] bring him food. After all, if the Lord woul[d] us, as he asked his disciples, whether we ever l[ack] anything, would we not with them have to an[swer] "Lord, nothing"?

In All Things Acknowledge Him

The Saviour supplies a net full of fishes; he a full supply. A full supply, of course, doe[s not] mean that every Christian will be made a mi[l]aire, and it would not be good if he were; but it mean that the Lord will give us all that our a[ctual] need calls for, so that we can eat and be filled. As a rule, he gives more. There will not only b[e] remaining crumbs but an over-supply, that we [may] also give to him that needeth. "It is more bl[essed] to give than to receive."

What the Lord supplies, he would have us e[at]. "As soon as they were come to land, they saw [a fire] of coals there and fish laid thereon and br[ead]. The Lord had already begun to prepare the [meal]. What they had caught, they were now to "Bring of the fish which ye have caught." the Lord's invitation goes forth, "Come and d[ine]; come and enjoy my blessings. Food, drink, c[loth]ing, house, home, money, goods: all these th[ings] which the Lord has given, the Christian shoul[d] joy in the measure in which they have been stowed. It is the Lord who says, "Come and d[ine]."

When God has blessed our daily work, we sh[ould] not vaunt ourselves and say, "Mine own hand h[ath] done it," but we should know and thankfully knowledge that it is the Lord who has blessed. "That disciple whom Jesus loved said unto Pete[r] It is the Lord. . . . And none of the disciples d[urst] ask him, Who art thou? knowing that it was Lord." Even among men there is spoken a si[lent] "Thank you" in acknowledgment of a gift. blesses us purely out of fatherly love and di[vine] goodness and mercy, without any merit or wor[thi]ness in us, for all which it is our duty to thank praise, to serve and obey him. This is most tainly true. We have been taught to pray, "[Give] us this day our daily bread" in acknowledgmen[t of] the fact that God gives us all that we need to ply the wants of the body. Even unto the wic[ked] God gives daily bread; but we, who are God's c[hil]dren, should receive our daily bread with tha[nks]giving. When the Lord has set our table, should sit down and pray, "Come, Lord Jesus, thou our guest, and let thy gifts to us be bless[ed]." When we have eaten and are filled, we should forget the Lord, the Giver, but say, "We thank th[ee] Lord God, heavenly Father, for all thy gifts

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR

BY REV. J. H. JOWETT, D.D.

SUNDAY, October 5. I Corinthians 10: 1-12. "Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed." We are always in peril of falling when we are sitting in judgment upon others. The steps of the throne of judgment are the most slippery places in the world. Our peril is this; we fuse criticism with virtue. We "feel good" when we are only denouncing another man's sins. We think the lofty life consists in looking down on him. The Pharisee felt himself to be full of virtue when he regarded the publican, when all the time he had fallen below him. If ever it be necessary for us to judge, our judgment should always be accompanied by a noble supplication. When we see another man fall it must be our part not to exult but to pray: "Hold thou me up, O Lord, and I shall be safe!" When we are careless in our sense of security we are always in the gravest peril. There is a confidence which easily passes into pride, and "pride goeth before a fall." There is an irreverent assurance, such as the Worldly Wiseman had, and it is vulnerable to all the assaults of the world and the flesh and the devil. The assurance which is born of grace is always accompanied by prayer, and is thereby preserved from the perils of self-conceit.

MONDAY, October 6. Numbers 12: 1-9. "Hath the Lord indeed spoken only by Moses? hath he not spoken also by us?" That was not the witness of gratitude, it was the speech of envy. It was not the expression of holy praise, it was the conceit of jealousy. And thus jealousy can be born in religious circles. In the very place where Jehovah is worshiped, near the altar, may be found "the image of jealousy." In the home of sacred privilege an unclean spirit may be bred and nourished. A serpent may hide in a garden. A devil may come to the table of the Lord.

When Satan can do nothing else with the saints he incites the spirit of envy. It breaks out among elders and deacons. It appears among ministers, one servant of God disparaging another, and seeking by insidious ways to bedim his fair name. And when Satan has begotten envy he can leave it to multiply its own foul offspring. For envy and jealousy never go alone; they breed a foul retinue of vices which riot in wickedness. Every sin is the helpmeet of these, and marches with them in common purpose. Once envy or jealousy is enthroned in the soul, only the almighty grace of the eternal God can destroy its sovereignty, and set love again in its rightful place.

TUESDAY, October 7. Numbers 12: 10-16. "And the anger of the Lord was kindled against them." That is the constant teaching of the Scriptures; if we sin against the Lord of love his love becomes unto us as consuming fire. Love must burn uncleanness; what else can it do with it? Holy love will not caress it, it will not decorate it, it will not attempt to make it appear seemly. Holy love must hate it, and burn in righteous anger about the soul in which it dwells. When Miriam and Aaron became infected with jealousy, God's anger was kindled, and the unclean thing was committed to clean flame, so that in the mercy of holy wrath the soul might once again become pure.

There is, therefore, a very real sense in which we may give thanks for God's holy anger. Our friends smile upon our sins and so help to nourish them. They are tolerant with our stains, and so keep us from purity. But God loves us in such wise as to be intolerant of everything that would destroy us. What our friends look upon as harmless trifles he sees to be the very seeds of hell. His love is not afraid to oppose us, to put hornets in our way, to surround us with the fire of hostile judgment. "The angel of the Lord stood in the way for an adversary." But that angel was appointed by love, and its mission was a ministry of mercy, to turn the transgressor into the way of life and peace.

WEDNESDAY, October 8. I Corinthians 3: 1-8. "He that planteth and he that watereth are one." And how absurd it is that they should quarrel with each other as though their labors are in antagonism. They are fellow laborers in a common ministry. He that conducteth a boys' club and he that teacheth the Word of life are one. He that distributeth a tract and he that preacheth a sermon are one. He that opens up the wonders of nature and he that opens up the wonders of grace are one. These all find their union and their unity in the Lord, in reverent homage to his will, and in common dependence upon his blessing. Why should the sword quarrel with the trowel? Why should the reaper quarrel with the sower? Why should the pinnacle quarrel with the foundation-stone?

When we are envious and quarrelsome in our work, the work had better never be done. A bad spirit can never do finished work. Our disposition determines the quality of our labor. After all, spiritual issues are the only things that matter, and where the fountain is bitter the streams can never be sweet. If the laborer is envious his work can never be whole. His work can never be well and truly done, for he himself is not of the truth, nor is there any truth in him.

THURSDAY, October 9. Nahum 1: 2-8. "The Lord is slow to anger." Our anger is too often mere irritation and it flashes into resentment. There is no thought in it, no cool, pure purpose; it is just the retort of wounded vanity or pride. We are eager to wound again, to repay in the same coin, and to "give back as good as we get." So our anger is uncontrolled; it is more a prairie fire than the hot cauterizing instrument of a surgeon. It blazes in heedlessness; it is not directed by any noble and sovereign will.

Now God's anger is never a bonfire, it is never a mass of indiscriminating flames. It is governed and controlled by holy purpose, and it destroys nothing which is good. It is not kindled in the presence of injury; it is kindled in the presence of sin and in the consciousness of holiness. True anger is not the child of vanity but of love. It is the heat of the purest flame. And thus do I see that if I would refine my wrath I must enrich my love. If I would have noble resentments I must dismiss every base affection. My anger must be like the flame of oxygen; it must never blacken even though it consumes. And for all this I must seek the grace of Him who is life and light, who is "slow to anger and of great mercy."

FRIDAY, October 10. Psalm 38: 10-22. "I am ready to halt." Ready-to-halt is the name which John Bunyan gives to one of his pilgrims in the King's way. Even small difficulties daunt the poor man and set him all a-trembling. He seems to consort with others like unto himself: Mr. Desponding, Miss Muchafraid, and Mr. Fearing. They talk to one another and foretell bad weather, and they scan all the dark omens in the sky. They can see a menace, but they are short-sighted concerning a promise. They hear the alarm-bell, but they cannot as clearly hear the voice of Jesus, "like bells at evening pealing," calling sweetly "o'er land and sea." They can see the hobgoblins, but not "the angel of His presence." And thus are they ready to halt!

"Forsake me not, O Lord!" And this was the prayer of Ready-to-halt: but only rarely could he believe it was answered. In those rare seasons he danced along the road with the lightness of the fawn. But the dance was soon over and he labored again. He halted at every obstacle lest it should fall upon him and crush him. So do we defeat our own prayers. When we have prayed we must venture, and in the venture we shall find the answer to our prayer. Strength does not come while we halt: it comes as we walk on! When we trustingly stride along as though we had all the power of God about us we shall find we have it. "Believe that ye have it" and ye shall possess it.

SATURDAY, October 11. Hebrews 3: 1-12. "Moses was faithful." What a noble biography was enshrined in that phrase! Who can covet a higher judgment at the end of his days! It is the Master's own blessed eulogy upon the disciples who prove loyal to his will: "Well done, good and faithful servant!" The benediction is not given to the merely successful but to the gloriously faithful. Many men and women are faithful who are never counted successful by the world. They have "nothing to show for it!" They win no material garland or crown. When evening closes in upon life their purse is almost as empty as when they began. They are unsuccessful, they do not "get on": but they are faithful, and always "get up."

Faithfulness is dependent upon faith. One is the creation of the other. Faithfulness is the stream of which faith is the spring. When faithfulness becomes scanty it is because there is drought at the fountain. If we wish to enrich our faithfulness we must begin by strengthening our faith. A firmer trust in the Lord will inspire a more loyal obedience. We shall "endure as seeing him who is invisible."

ings, through Jesus Christ, our and Saviour." When we receive weekly or monthly wages, when income has been increased, when fields have yielded returns, and we are given health to enjoy moral blessings, we should know admit with the disciples that it is Lord who thus favors us.

ere words of thanksgiving, how- will not suffice. Our words ld be the expression of our heart. his be true, the words will turn deeds. And, moreover, the depth ur gratitude will not be measured he amount of our gifts or of our ice, but by our ability and will- ess to give and to serve. As e is a readiness to will, so there ld then also be, and will be, a performance out of that which one has. "If there be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not." He gives the widow's mite, not who gives little, but who gives in the same spirit in which the widow gave. She gave all that she had. The Lord does not require this of us, but he does look for an amount of service or money proportionate to what he has given us. To the Corinthians Paul wrote, "Let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him." The Christian is a blessed man; he should also be a blessing unto others. In the service which we render unto others, we give evidence of a heart grateful unto God for the blessings he has bestowed upon us.

In conclusion, the great truths of Christianity can and should be applied to our everyday lives. If this were done more than it is, the lives of millions would be far happier and sweeter than now, and many of the social evils would disappear. The greatest service which the church can render unto the world—in fact, the service which it is called to render—is the service of faithfully preaching the Gospel of salvation to sinful mortals. The real social program of Jesus has Jesus in it as "the Way, the Truth, and the Life." He who has redeemed our soul from hell by laying down his holy and precious life on the altar of the cross, so that now, by the grace of God, through faith in Christ we have forgiveness of sin and everlasting life, has also given us assurance that, while yet here below, we shall enjoy his loving care as to our temporal wants. He who has taken the greatest burden, our sin, from us, will not suffer us to break down under the much smaller burdens of this earthly life. He who himself was a laborer at Nazareth, is even now with us in our daily work, and blesses us until our life's work has been finished, when he will come and take us to the eternal mansions above, where we shall forever rest from all our labors.

Heavenly Companionship

THE great secret of continuity and progress in the Christian life lies in having daily companionship with Christ himself. Paul discovered this on the road to Damascus, and never afterward was he parted from that divine and uplifting association. Thomas à Kempis in his monastic retreat made the same discovery, and so also did Bunyan in his cell in Bedford jail, "a den," he called it, but a luminous and glorified den as it proved, lighting up the paths of countless multitudes. Henry Drummond, too, found out to his great joy that living with Christ makes one like him, deepens and broadens life, invests it with new meaning and nobler purpose. He found, moreover, that the transformation in our own lives could not be permanent and complete except by "abiding in Him" constantly. Then, we should be in a spiritual atmosphere where sin would cease to have power; where old, evil influences could not penetrate to mar so pure a friendship; where not servile imitation but a sincere and zealous desire for service would effect such a transformation in us that all the world might know we had "been with Jesus."

If the Christian life means anything, it means not following Christ afar off, indifferently, and at intervals, but living with him in constant daily companionship, putting ourselves under his influence in the most direct and unreserved way, as we might do with some dear friend whose love and counsel we held as very precious. It means having him by our side during all the duties and trials of the day; looking in his face when we need guidance and inspiration; telling him our hopes and aspirations as well as our troubles. It means squaring our every word and action with our appreciation of his estimate; and through his higher vision, communicated to us, getting a finer outlook on the daily problems of life, a better angle on things that ordinarily ruffle and perplex, a clearer faith, reaching over the things that merely seem, to the things that are.

And then, what a joy to us to know that this glorious companionship is not a privilege to be bought by wealth or secured by influence! It is open to the very poorest and humblest, as well as to the highest and the greatest. Drummond in one of his addresses tells of a great statesman who testified before the world that he lived with Jesus as the daily Companion and Friend from whom he drew all his best ideals and his rules for the conduct of life; who was his constant and unfailing adviser in all the difficulties he had to face, and whom he had learned to love with a love he could not express. All that part of his career which had been worth while had upon it the stamp of this conscious association with Christ. The rest he regarded as dull, valueless, withered. And this is the experience of all who have learned to live in Christ and to realize the great truth that it is the only life worth living.

Huerta's Message

ALTHOUGH the lapse of time has taken the acute edge off the Mexican situation, as may be gathered from the message of General Huerta, sent to the Congress on Mexico's Independence Day, the tangle is still far from being unraveled. It is true the provisional president announces the purpose of his administration to do what lies in its power to secure a fair and honest election, and he even goes so far as to assure the nation that he would consider it the greatest triumph of his administration to surrender his office to his successor, with peace and order restored; but up to the present time peace, it must be confessed, is still hidden far beyond the horizon. In one respect the message is hopeful and coincides with the view expressed in Washington that General Huerta means to keep the peace negotiations open. Referring to the "strained relations with the United States, he says that while they have caused Mexico to suffer "unmerited affliction," and have retarded pacification, yet he has "good ground to hope for an early solution of the differences between the nations." The "tenseness" of our diplomatic relations he regards as having reference only to the attitude of our government and not to that of the American people.

This last declaration, taken in conjunction with the suggestion that his government should refuse our visiting warships the privilege of prolonging their stay in Mexican waters, may be regarded as "playing to the galleries." They were obviously included in the message with the view of making political capital by stirring up Mexican patriotism. As a matter of fact, our warships made no formal request but simply availed themselves of a common courtesy extended by one government to another in all civilized lands. Our warships will remain as long as they are needed there, not as a menace, but for the safeguarding of American interests until there is such a radical change in conditions as will warrant their withdrawal.

The Lost Pearl

JESUS told about a merchant who came across a pearl so precious that he sold all his possessions in order that he might buy it. The other day in London, two men went from one publichouse to another trying to exchange a pearl worth something like twenty thousand dollars for a glass of beer or a package of cigarettes. The barkeepers refused to accept the "marble" for even the smallest quantity of their merchandise, and in the negotiations the pearl was lost. Three pearls are still missing from the necklace, said to have a valuation of at least $650,000 (which was found recently in London by a laboring man). The finder turned it over to the police, but in some way three of the precious pearls were lost. And he tells of the careless way in which he and his brother tried to dispose of one of them which he found in his pocket after he had taken the others to the police station.

He was an extremely foolish man, you say. Yes, but how much wiser are you? You may have a possession in comparison with which the rarest jewel of earth is as valueless as any mere marble, such as the London bartenders thought this pearl to be. You may have in your soul the grace of God, the gift of loving him, the priceless treasure of a clean heart, the assurance of immortality. All these are summed up in the one transcendent word—Jesus. Friendship with him is the one "pearl of great price" for which the shrewdest merchant on earth will do well to barter, if necessary, all his goods.

Have you found this pearl? If you ever found it, did you exchange it for some unworthy thing at the world's or the devil's bar? Did you part with it? Did you lose it?

Thank God; you may find it again. Or if you never possessed it you may receive it now. Christ is holding it out to you in his hand. Take it, will you not? Back of it is a love that led him to die for you. He wants you to be rich with a kind of wealth that time cannot touch. The pearl of great price is yours for the asking.

Our Growing Family Circle

WELL, our mid-year coupon subscription ended September 30, and as a resul CHRISTIAN HERALD is now being read weekly i thirty-five thousand homes where it had neve read before.

Think of it! thirty-five thousand families ferent parts of the country, regularly feeli influence of a Christian weekly with whic have been formerly unacquainted. THE CHR HERALD is usually read by all of the member household to which it is sent, so that the tian Herald Family has gained in strength b one hundred thousand members in the last months.

This was accomplished through the earnest of thousands of workers who have stood by favorite journal for years, and it is an indic of the far-reaching influence of the Chr Herald Family when it can add so many new r to its membership in such a short time. Ou perience convinces us that once a new member izes that he or she has become part of such a army of Christian workers, there is never an sire to drop out of the ranks. On the other there is every reason in the world for such a strength to become permanent. And this yea believe the percentage of new members who wi come permanent will be larger than ever before

It is quite true, as many of our friends hav marked, that the habit of reading THE CHRIS HERALD becomes a fixed one with most people gives them something they can find nowhere and which they do not want to be without. weekly visits are a perennial source of spiritua freshment and invigoration. It lifts them above the sordid things of life into a higher at phere. It helps to make existence worth whil linking them with the forward movement thr out the whole world.

Quite a list of attractive features is arra for the coming season. Then there is that derful story by Pastor Charles M. Sheldon, "J Is Here!" the first instalment of which will pear in our big anniversary number, which be issued on October 22. We are confident no one who begins this story will want to l it unfinished. It is a story that will spirit grip the readers right through to the end, and k ing this, we would again urge every membe the Christian Herald Family to induce as m friends and acquaintances as possible to read it you desire to send copies of the opening chapte other friends just drop us a postal and copies be forwarded. As Pastor Sheldon says: "Cl tianity is the greatest thing in the world," and an opportunity to convey it into new places an so convincing a manner does not come often eve the Christian Herald Family.

P. S. To all who desire to increase the numbe readers of Pastor Sheldon's great story we will m the following concession:

Pacific Enters Panama Canal

THE last remaining barrier at the Pacific end of the Panama Canal was blown up by dynamite the morning of August 31 and the waters of the Pacific Ocean touched for the ne the solid masonry of the Miraflores Locks. four thousand eight hundred pounds of 45 it. dynamite constituted the blast, which was the largest ever used in the construction of nal. THE EXPLOSION WHICH LET THE PACIFIC INTO THE MIRAFLORES LOCKS, PANAMA

Poisoned Candy for Children

HAT is believed to have been an attempt to murder children with poisoned candy in the ionable section of Atlantic City, N. J., the other was frustrated by two servants. The domes- noticed that a man was acting strangely. ldren were coming toward him, and he laid down ice box of chocolates and then ran away. The dren picked up the box, opened it, and were ut to eat the chocolates when the servants ran hem and took the box away from them. They a policeman the suspicious circumstances and took the candies to headquarters, where each colate was found to contain sufficient bichloride nercury to kill a person. Four policemen were t to hunt for the man, who was not found. There ittle doubt that the man was insane. No one is right mind, with no motive for doing so, could n the murder of sweet children. There is a good l of poisoned candy put in the way of children the destruction of their morals nowadays, and horrible to say, put there on purpose for the money there is in it. The dangerous moving picture, the low dance, the penny in the slot, the saloons which boys in their teens may enter, are all boxes of poisoned candy put in the pathway of the boys and girls of our land. Fortunately there are parents and pastors and teachers and friends, who love God and their fellows, who run to the children and warn them against the poison and save them from it. Offenses and crimes against children are strongly condemned by Christ.

But whoso shall offend one of these little ones which believe in me, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depth of the sea. (Matt. 18: 6.)

Widowed Mothers Receive Pensions

SEVEN widowed mothers of Mercer County, N. J., received pension grants the other day from Judge Gnichtel, under the new Nichols law, and the applications of four others were laid over for further investigation. The money will be payable on October 1. The allowances are from $14 to $30 a month. A number of the States have adopted the system of pensioning widowed mothers. The last session of the New York legislature appointed an important committee on investigation with the object of reporting facts and plans for the passage of the wisest law on the subject. Fifteen thousand dollars was voted for this committee of investigation. Besides the benevolent feature it is wise economy to keep the home intact and raise the children to a healthy citizenship there rather than separate the families and turn the children over to institutions of public charity. Those responsible for making such provisions may well appreciate these words:

The blessing of him that was ready to perish came upon me; and I caused the widow's heart to sing for joy. (Job 29: 13.)

Masterpiece Shelters Chicken Coop

ZIEM, the well-known painter, died recently, and among the old furniture and rubbish that were about to be carted away to the second-hand store was found a picture used to protect a leaky spot in the roof of the artist's chicken coop. The thick dirt, the accumulation of perhaps half a century, was cleaned away and the canvas revealed an authentic portrait of a woman by Manet. Men and women, beautiful pictures, images of God himself, are like the portrait of the artist put to such inferior uses. They may not give themselves up to bad habits or to base occupations, but they devote their lives to little and comparatively unimportant things, to uses far below those for which their endowments qualify them, and to which they have been called by a divine providence. They waste their time and fritter away their faculties upon the things that do not count and become as near nothings as possible, yet they are the masterpiece of the Infinite Artist, made to adorn the halls of science, literature, and art, the home and the temple of God. Instead of becoming precious stones in the structure of Christianity, pillars in the temple of God, they are contented to become patches in the roofs of unworthy or useless social structures. The apostle thus refers to the exalted and holy uses of a human life:

Ye also, as lively stones, are built up a spiritual house, an holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ. (I Peter 2: 5.)

Says Starvation Threatens Race

IN AN address at Birmingham recently, H. N. Dickson, professor of geography at University College, Edinburgh, and president of the Royal Meteorological Society, said that if there were not immediate steps taken to improve the food supply of the world, the race would die with starvation in a hundred years. He noted the fact that the wheat supply was not keeping pace with the increase of population. He recommended a substitute for wheat and called for the most intensive farming for the mighty population of the planet that might not get food or clothing enough to supply it. He also said that the coal would all be exhausted in three centuries. A note of pessimism is sounded by another scientist, Dr. J. H. Kellogg of Battle Creek, who, in an address at the convention of the American Public Health Association, claimed that the birth rate is decreasing so alarmingly that the race will eventually die out. These two scientists with arguments and figures have alarm from opposite conclusions: one is that the race will die of starvation with its marvelous increase of population; the other that it will decrease to the vanishing point for lack of births. We do not share the alarm of either. A hundred years from now there will be a marvelously increased population, and it will have an abundance to eat and to wear; there will be millions of babies to take the places of the babies of to-day. God, who made the world and its peoples, will care for them and make each generation nearer like his Son.

Thou shalt keep them, O Lord, thou shalt preserve them from this generation for ever. (Ps. 12: 7.)

Killed in Husband's Laboratory

THE interest taken by Mrs. Gottschalk of Woodbridge, N. J., in the progress of experiments her husband, Dr. Louis Gottschalk, was making, was responsible for her death the other day. The husband had been trying to manufacture artificial rubber in his laboratory. He had filled tanks with gases and fluids under compression. Early in the morning the doctor and his wife applied heat to increase the pressure, and then went into the house to eat breakfast. Mrs. Gottschalk finished first and, being so deeply interested in the experiments, went out into the laboratory while her husband finished his meal. He heard an explosion and ran out to find the building wrecked and his wife dead in the ruins. The sudden death of this talented and worthy wife and her sad removal from her husband's companionship call to mind these words:

Two women shall be grinding together; the one shall be taken, and the other left. Two men shall be in the field; the one shall be taken, and the other left. (Luke 17: 35, 36.)

A WEEK IN THE WORLD'S NEWS

Independence Day in Mexico

MEXICO observed its national Independence Day with an unusual amount of enthusiasm this year, although there was nothing in the nature of an anti-American demonstration. President Huerta's message to the Twenty-seventh Congress, which was read on September 16, expressed a hope that the "fratricidal struggle which has been draining the nation's blood" would soon be terminated. He referred to the "tenseness" of Mexican relations with the United States, but did not go into details, satisfying himself with the statement that the Mexican government "has well-grounded hopes that an early solution will be found of the difficulties which just now hold in suspense the relations of good and long-standing friendship, destined, we hope, to bind us for the indefinite future with our powerful and civilized neighbor." He suggests that the special permission of the Mexican Government for American warships to remain in Mexican waters (which expires in October) should not be renewed. The remainder of the message is devoted to business matters, including a land grant to a new Belgian syndicate for railroad construction, to a land distribution among the peasants in the State of Morelos, and to labor questions involving the employment of women and children in factories. The message makes a favorable report of Mexican finances, showing a large increase in the revenues. While full returns of the Federal disbursements are not yet in, the message implies the probability of a surplus of 22,850,000 pesos. The government has contracted abroad for ten military aeroplanes, seventy-seven armored automobiles, fifty unarmored automobiles, and two armored transports. The government is declared to have the rebellion well in hand in all except two States, Sonora and Durango.

A Political Leader's Tragic End

ONE of the sad tragedies that occasionally shadow the lives of active politicians was brought to light lately in New York City. Timothy D. Sullivan, who had risen from the humble rôle of a newsboy to be a big political leader, had in late years become an invalid. His affliction was diagnosed as incurable brain trouble, and he was constantly under surveillance. On August 31 he disappeared from his room in Eastchester Road, Fordham, and a frenzied search began which was kept up for many days. It was not until September 13 that almost by accident the body of the once popular politician was found in Bellevue Hospital Morgue. It had lain there for two weeks and was about to be interred in the potter's field. Investigation showed that Mr. Sullivan had been run over and killed by a New York, New Haven and Hartford freight train, between Westchester and Baychester stations, probably within an hour after he escaped from his room. He leaves a large estate estimated at $3,000,000. Seventy-five thousand, representing all classes, attended his funeral in New York.

A Famous Orientalist Dead

THE distinguished traveler and Orientalist, Professor Arminius Vambery, died at Budapest, Hungary, on September 15 in his eighty-second year. Professor Vambery's writings have had wide popularity among two generations of readers. While a young man he traveled through Central Asia disguised as a dervish, and acquired a wide knowledge of their customs and languages. He was a wonderful linguist and profound scholar and his remarkable talents were recognized by many scientific and educational bodies throughout Europe. In Constantinople he was an effendi with the name of Rashid. The Hungarian Academy of Sciences gave him a subsidy to travel and investigate from Mecca to Persia. He was made a professor of Oriental languages by the University of Budapest. The European public knew him through his lectures and books of travel, among the latter being Wanderings and Adventures in Persia, Sketches of Central Asia, Manners in Oriental Countries, The Turkish People, and Western Culture in Eastern Lands.

American Refugees in Mexico Safe

A RUMOR was received from the United States Consul at Saltillo, Mexico, that a hundred American refugees, including women and children, who left Torreon en route to Saltillo, had fallen into the hands of the rebels. There were no official advices on the subject, and our government at Washington was hopeful that the American party, which was well armed, might have been able to get through in safety. The party was headed by Deputy Consul General J. C. Allen of Monterey, who went to Torreon to notify the Americans there of President Wilson's warning to leave. They were traveling across the plains, there being no railroad communication available. A later report states that the entire party reached Saltillo in safety.

On September 15 a joint resolution appropriating $100,000 to bring Americans from Mexico passed the Senate by unanimous consent. As the House has already passed the resolution, the money was made immediately available.

Pacific Islands Disappear

STEAMSHIPS arriving at San Francisco from Australia have brought the news that the Falcon and Hope Islands, of the Tonga group in the South Pacific, have wholly disappeared. Their absence was first discovered by trading vessels. There were several hundreds of natives on these islands and a number of white men. It is feared that they have all been swept away in some volcanic disturbance which probably submerged the islands so suddenly that there could have been no opportunity to escape. Seismographs at Sydney are rep have recorded a series of shocks some time before the disappearance islands became known. The occurrence recalls the fate of Krakatoa Straits of Sunda, between Sumatra and Java, which sank in the sun 1883 as the result of volcanic eruptions, causing the death of over persons.

EVANGELIST GIPSY SMITH THROWING A BALL

REV. CAMPBELL-MORGAN TAKING PART IN A BALL GAME

"ALL work and no play makes Jack a dull boy," says the old proverb, and this applies to the men of studious mode and habits as well as to the more athletic. At the big conference at Winona Lake this year, in the intervals between meetings, services, lectures, conferences, etc., the preachers and evangelists who had sung and prayed alongside of each other in the spiritual field spent a pleasant hour or so on the athletic grounds, where, for the sake of relaxation and recreation, they were pitted against each other in a game of ball. Our photographers have caught two interesting figures in the field, the Rev. Campbell Morgan, one of the most eloquent and earnest of modern divines, and Gipsy Smith, the evangelist whose deeply spiritual meetings have been a means of inspiration and uplift to thousands. The Winona audiences seem to think it the most natural thing in the world that these grave and reverend men should relax and join for a brief hour in the recreations that are nowadays a feature of the Winona gatherings.

The Use of the Peace Palace

In his address of August 28 at the dedication ceremoni the Peace Palace, Jonkheer van Karnabeek, the president of the Car Foundation, deprecated the idea of a standing permanent International C with universal obligatory jurisdiction. From the point view of the pr cal statesman, M. van Karnabeek unquestionably stands on safe ground. the world at large will nevertheless persist in believing that the develop of such a supreme court of the nations was one of the main purposes of construction of this great edifice, and will continue to cherish this ideal it shall have become a reality. The practical purposes for which the P Palace will be used are not as yet completely determined. Primarily it of course, serve as a home for future international tribunals, more particul The Hague Tribunal. If, at the Third Hague Peace Conference of 191 permanent court of international justice shall be agreed upon, it will prob be the meeting place of that body. THE GOSPEL BY THE SEA

MR. W. E. STEPHENS ADDRESSING THE THRONGS ON THE BOARDWALK AT BRIGHTON BEACH

MARVELOUS Gospel work has been done this season at Brighton Beach on Coney Island. The multitudes have been attracted to the Gospel by the instrumentality of a rated business man, Mr. W. E. Stephens of assau Street, New York City, who believes in essive Christianity and the great need of the l of Christ for the floating masses of humanity. sought and obtained from the president of the lyn Rapid Transit Company the permission to h the Gospel on the lawn of the Brighton Hotel. Everybody thought it was chimeri- nexpedient, and from the start said: "It n't pay," "It is a waste of time," and ed to failure." Nevertheless, this stern man, ved by critics, undaunted by obstacles, se- an ideal spot where three ways meet, where vast throngs converge, and erected a stand which with his organ and a few helpers he d out a Gospel campaign for the multitude of rs-by. Although at first the results seemed ful and some of the talks were addressed to npty air, by perseverance and courage he soon to produce an effect. A few stopped to lis- few more tarried to hear, and soon there was at crowd around the stand; others leaned upon ence to hear what this "babbler would say." place chosen for the open air services proved to be an ideal spot, and the hours for holding them, from five to seven P.M., the most appropriate of all the day. The place is an irregular triangle in a corner of the lawn of the Brighton Beach Hotel. The great army of pleasure-seekers from Coney Island going north, the multitude from Brighton going south, and the immense audience from the Music Hall when the performance is over at five o'clock converge at this place chosen to fulfil the divine injunction, "Go out quickly into the streets and lanes of the city," and proclaim the Gospel of divine favor and love to the repentant sinner.

The services from the beginning grew in popularity, increased in attendance, and deepened in interest. The numbers who stopped to hear grew astoundingly. On June 22 there were 5,005; June 29, 6,390; July 26, 8,487; August 3, 10,750; and on August 31, the astonishing number of 15,649. These figures are not estimates, but actual counts with an automatic register, operated by an experienced person, who was instructed to register only those who tarried to hear the message.

Mr. Stephens gathered around him a band of efficient singers, speakers and workers. Among the speakers were Rev. William N. Richie, D.D., chaplain of U. S. Grant Post; Mr. George W. Carr, the evangelist; Mr. Will Houghton, actor, who, with his rich baritone voice and sharp Gospel thrusts, was a power for truth; Mr. Howard Richie, from the Moody Bible Institute; and the Rev. James F. Riggs, Jr., assistant pastor of the Lafayette Avenue Presbyterian Church. The singers were Mr. Ralph Duryea, who was also the organist; Mrs. Emma G. Singleton, a beautiful soprano soloist; and a thoroughly trained quartette, of which Miss E. T. Pell was leader; Miss B. Bedell, soprano; Miss E. Frost, alto; Mr. D. W. Bryant, tenor; Mr. E. Howard, basso. Another novel feature of these services was a little ten-year-old girl, Ruth Morgan, who possesses a phenomenal voice. Her little song, entitled "Jesus Promised Me a Home Over There," became the greatest favorite. Her fresh, pure voice simply captivated the audience.

This work at first was supported principally by Mr. Stephens himself, but subsequently some friends seeing the success attained and the great good being done became patrons to the movement. Among these are: Mr. D. W. McWilliams, treasurer of the Manhattan Elevated Ry.; Mr. Clinton L. Rossiter, of the Brooklyn Trust Co.; Mr. L. W. Minford, a Wall Street coffee merchant; Mr. Cleveland H. Dodge; Mrs. Florence N. Latin; Mr. Frank Huyler; Mr. Henry MacKay; Mr. H. K. Twitchell of the Chemical National Bank; Rev. David Gregg, D.D.; John T. Underwood, president Underwood Typewriter Company, and others.

—Two hundred peace delegates, representing 60,000 students, and known as the International Peace Workers, concluded their eighth international congress at Ithaca, N. Y., on September 17, and were entertained next evening by the New York Peace Society at a banquet. There were speakers from Austria, Porto Rico, Peru, Germany and other countries, and the addresses generally were hopeful of the future of the movement.

—G. W. Smalley, London correspondent of the New York Tribune, in a letter published September 14 in that journal, quotes a personage very near to the throne as saying: "There will be no Home Rule." This personage, whose identity is concealed, declares that the situation has changed and that the king would now "veto the Home Rule bill if it were sent up to him." The passage of the bill would mean the certainty of civil war if it became a law, and the king bas become convinced that it is his duty by every means in his power to avert that danger.

—The Home Rule situation in Ulster seems to be critical. It is claimed by the Unionist leaders that there is a volunteer army in Ulster to-day 100,000 strong, ready to take the field. Business men, manufacturers and others are insuring their property against damage by riots. Just what will happen in Ulster nobody seems willing to predict; but indications point to conditions of civil war, unless the imperial government take some step to relieve the present tension. Earl Loreburn, a leading Liberal, has suggested a conference of leaders of all the parties to take steps to avert a civil conflict.

—Baron Chinda, the Japanese ambassador in Washington, called at the White House on September 18, and had an interview with the President concerning the negotiations over the Japanese-California situation. It is not customary for a foreign representative to deal in such matters with the President direct, but with the Secretary of State. Baron Chinda did not express any impatience over the long-drawn negotiations, but politely informed the President that "the Japanese are a patient people." The suggestion has been made in certain quarters that a new treaty might be arranged with Japan; but the Ambassador intimated that his government would prefer that negotiations proceed on the present basis. It is understood that the courts will be asked to decide on a test case, as soon as one can be arranged. Japan is hopeful of gaining an acknowledgment that the California law violates the treaty of 1911 and is therefore unconstitutlonal.

—A Naples cablegram states that Professor Malladra and two companions on September 14 descended into the crater of Vesuvius to a depth of 1,200 feet, and spent an hour in making scientific observations. They explored the great funnel at the bottom of the crater and sounded it to a depth of 200 feet. They found it an enormous fiery cavern, the heat in which was so intense that it fused their thermometers and the steel rope they were using. Before this accident, however, they obtained a registered temperature in the funnel of 626 degrees, Fahrenheit.

—The periodical agitation in behalf of hymn-book revision is again making itself felt, and there is the usual unsparing denunciation of the old-fashioned hymns. Apropos of this sort of criticism, a reader of this journal (Mr. William Stonebridge, the Bronx, N. Y.), writes this interesting letter: "Not one of the high-salaried pastors, singers or organists who would exclude the grand old hymns ever saw or ever heard what a little bare-footed boy saw and heard some years ago. Wandering through the woods in search of his missing playmate, he faintly heard the sound of singing in the distance. Entranced by such music, he crept toward the sound. On hands and knees he crawled among the trees, through the underbrush for a quarter of a mile, slowly drawn along by the mysterious music. Suddenly he dropped flat on the ground and lay hidden under the friendly bushes. There, in the opening, was a group of little girls all dressed in white, holding hands. They were ranged in a circle around a small reddish clay mound, singing earnestly, devotedly, magnificently. The bright morning sun streamed down through the trees; wild flowers carpeted the open space, while gray squirrels came jumping boldly to the spot, and close to the boy's face a rabbit lifted its long ears and sat motionless as if petrified.

"'Shall we gather at the river,
Where bright angel feet have trod?
The beautiful, the beautiful river,
Flowing by the throne of God?'

sang the white-robed children, while hundreds of birds in the overhanging branches seemed to join in the chorus. And when they had all disappeared, the boy ran sobbing to his home and cried that the angels had taken Bessie away. It was the burial of little Bessie, a traveling preacher's daughter. Photographed in the boy's brain the picture remained, with the white-clad children and the wild bird chorus singing as clearly to-day as in the long ago. It is sincerely hoped that the church singers will not alter the course of the 'Beautiful River.'"

THE CROSSWAYS

BY OWEN OLIVER

A Story Complete in This Issue

THERE are many turnings along the way of life, but none turn back. The path, once chosen, leads us on. Francis Dean took a turning somewhat heedlessly, in the careless days of youth, and he found himself upon a long, unbroken road. Now, after many years, he had come to unposted crossways.

He sat in the arm-chair in his study, with his head upon his hand. The eyes of his mind followed two tracks in turn. The eyes of his heart followed the green track to the left. The eyes of his soul followed the hilly track to the right. He was a good man upon the whole, and he would not have flinched from the steep road, if he had been traveling alone; but there were little feet that followed him. To guide the little feet through pleasant places was his prayer, when he prayed a prayer.

He sat thinking and thinking. The shadows of evening fell unobtrusively round him; unobtrusively darkened, and shut him in. . . . He closed his eyes for a moment, opened them and saw a vague white figure in the unlit room. It bent over his shoulder and touched his arm gently.

"Come, and I will show you the road of life," it said.

Dean rose and took a long step, beyond measure, out of the familiar room. He heard his children laughing downstairs, and "mother" laughing with them. Then the places that he knew passed away and he stood beside the vague white figure upon a great white road, stretching like a long snake into the darkness. The rest was shadows, with a fresh wind blowing through.

He distinguished dimly two men who halted by the roadside. One was tall and clothed in tattered sheepskins. The other was short and richly clad.

"These," the vague presence said, in its still, sweet voice, "are your companions to the crossways."

"Who are they?" Dean asked. "And who are you?"

But, when he looked round, the presence was gone, and he stood upon the great white road facing the wind and the two strange men. The moon came out through a hurrying cloud, and shone upon them. Their faces contrasted strangely with their attire, he thought; a knave in furs and a king in sheepskins.

The tall man in the skins stepped forward first and greeted him.

"I hope," he said, in a big, rich voice, "that you may find me a pleasant companion."

He held out a strong right hand and gripped Dean's firmly.

The small man saluted him with a curt nod.

"I hope you'll be some company for me," he observed in a sharp, peevish tone. "This fellow is none."

Dean looked from one to the other of the ill-assorted pair.

"Then why do you travel together?" he asked.

"Heaven knows!" the small man snapped savagely; "or why we travel with you."

"Heaven knows," said the tall man, taking off his cap reverently, "and why we travel with you, friend. It is surely for the best."

The small man eyed Dean up and down.

"I hope you've means for the journey," he remarked. "I've only what I want for myself."

"I haven't even that," the tall man confessed; "but what I have you can share."

"Where are we going?" Dean asked.

"To the crossways," both answered. "He and I part there," the tall man added, "and you must choose your companion for the rest of the journey."

Dean bowed and said nothing. His heart warmed to the generous stranger; but his mind told him that the other was the wiser and the more likely to show him the road to prosperity, and he passionately desired to lead the little feet there.

They walked on along the wind-swept road. The tall man took the side to the wind. There was no need for three to get cold, he said, since he was big enough to keep off the worst of the blast. The small man asked Dean to walk a little behind the other to make a bigger shield, so that none of the chill blast might reach him. He cursed the road.

"It's all up-hill," he declared, and hung on to Dean; but the tall man put his strong hand at Dean's back, and pushed him, as if in helpful jest.

"We shall have an easy time," he prophesied cheerfully, "going down."

Presently they saw a little farm. The small man left them and ran ahead to secure the best room for himself. There was no other to spare, the man of the house said; but one could sleep upon a sofa, and one in the barn.

"Excellent!" the tall man cried. "Excellent! The barn will just suit me!" When Dean offered to toss for choice of the sofa, he would not listen to him.

"My dear fellow," he declared, "I like barns."

He invited Dean to share the plain food that he carried and they sat down on a bench and ate. The small man sat by the fire and devoured a rich meal, which he had ordered to be cooked for him. He had money to pay, he stated, shaking a fat purse.

The tall man pressed the best of his fare upon Dean. "It's the great pleasure of traveling," he asserted, "to help a fellow traveler. So you must not deny me."

The small man turned round from the wine which he was holding up to the light.

THE TALL MAN TOLD THEM STORIES AND BLEW WONDERFUL TUNES OUT OF A WHISTLE

"If you listen to him," he said, "you'll soon be out at elbows. Look at his sheepskins! A nice fellow to travel with, isn't he? Leave him and come with me to-morrow, and I'll show you places where you can pick up silver! Then you can buy a fur coat like mine."

"I wish I had a coat of that kind," Dean owned.

"Why," cried the tall man cheerfully, "so do I! I've often started saving to buy one, but something always comes along with a better claim on the money. It was nearly enough once, but I had the good luck to meet Brother Tom's widow before I'd spent it."

The small man sneered.

"The hussy wasted the money on finery," he declared.

"Well, well!" the big man apologized. "Fine clothes are a joy to a pretty woman. She was a joy to old Tom. He'd have laughed to see her admiring herself in her new hat and dress!"

The small man sneered again.

"What do you think of him?" he asked Dean.

"I think," Dean said, "he is a very good man; but I am afraid he is a little too good for this world."

"My dear friend," the tall man told him, "we aren't responsible for the world, and we are for ourselves."

"Exactly!" the small man retorted. "We are responsible for ourselves. Look at us, Dean! I have a fur coat and a full purse. He ha pockets and ragged sheepskins."

"You," the short man answered. re a fool over everything. He'll ver show you the way to Prosperity, ean. You must come with me at e crossroads if you want to go ere."

"I want to go there," Dean said. was a place where ways were made sy for little feet, he had heard.

He talked to the small man about rosperity that evening, while the tall an was mending a door for the land- rd, who had given him a bed of raw in an outhouse. Kindness was a debt of honor," he often observed, nd should be repaid at the first nance.

"If you want to get to Prosperity," e short man said, "you must lay up store of money to help you on the ay. You'll soon do it, if you'll ave our friend and follow me. He ours too many scruples into your ars, and you've enough of them al- eady. You've got to take the world s it is and do as other people do. hey look out for their own pockets, nd you must look out for yours. 'Do r be done.' That's the practical wis- om. You don't want to take their roperty, of course, but they're after ours, and offense is the best de- ense."

"You might take something from n innocent person," Dean protested; ut his mentor clapped him on the houlder.

"You needn't fear that, old man!" e said. "The innocent person never as anything to take. Look at our riend."

"There's a deal in that," Dean greed. "Of course, if any one starts ut to sell me, I don't mind selling him. Business is business."

He talked more to the short man after that, and even joined in some of his enterprises and received a small share of the spoils. "As much as you are worth to me," the short man said roughly, "and no more. Business is business!" Dean did not like his manners or his methods, but he liked the results, and results are important when they secure an easy road for the little feet that run after you.

"I have given hostages to fortune," he apologized to the tall man, when he was reproached by him for some questionable gain which he had shared with the short man. "You do for your children what you wouldn't do for yourself."

The tall man put his hand on his shoulder.

"Your children," he said, "can do for you what you cannot do for yourself. Their road in life will determine their companions. Would you prefer them to travel with me, or with the other man?"

"If they were his," Dean said slowly, "he would show them the road to Prosperity."

"And I," the tall man claimed, "would show them the road to heaven."

"I want to show them both," Dean urged. "Is it not possible?"

"It is possible," the grave voice answered. "But suppose they come to a parting of the ways? They will follow their father's example then."

"They will never know about it," Dean cried quickly. He was thinking of the "business" which he had pondered when he sat in his room.

"They will know you," the tall man assured him. "You will teach as you live."

In such ways Dean's companions talked in turn, as they traveled on. It seemed to him that he agreed with both in part, though at heart he inclined more to the tall man. He would certainly follow his ideas, he thought, if the world were to make; but it was made, and made a hard world; and you must do as others do, if you would reach Prosperity. Benevolence and self-sacrifice and high principle were good things in moderation; but carried too far they left you a penniless fool; and how was a penniless fool to provide for his children? Surely one might even sacrifice a virtue or two for them! A secret sacrifice that they should never know! "If I traveled alone," he declared, "I should follow the tall man; so far as human nature allows. . . . After all, I would rather travel with both. A man with no vices is only an angel—my tall friend is that, I think. A man with no virtues is a devil. My short friend is not so bad as that. He is very sensible; and he knows how to grow rich. I am neither angel nor devil, but just a man. Perhaps there is a third road that would suit us all!"

He wished that more and more as the journey went on; for the tall man put great thoughts into his mind, and the short man put jingling money into his pocket; and though he spent most of his leisure time with the former, the latter was a good companion when he wanted "a little sport."

But when they came to the parting of the ways there was no middle course. The green track lay to the left, as he had pictured it in his study; a very pleasant road; but, if the children noticed, there were some ugly things to pass; bodies that he must carry them over—"business" that was dirty business, though safe and profitable. That was what he had disliked about the road, when he looked at it in his study.

The track to the right was steep and stony. It would be hard to drag the little ones up the hill; and perhaps their little feet would be hurt. . . .

The tall man and the short man took him one by each hand as he stood hesitating.

"Come!" one said; and the other said "Come!"

"The way to Prosperity," the short man urged him. "It is just—just a stroke of business. . . . You and I didn't make the commercial world. . . . He's rich and it won't matter to him really. Besides, he's an unscrupulous scamp, and he'd do it to you! It's the custom along that road; just the ordinary course of business. Afterwards you can buy a fine carriage to carry the little ones. They'll never know. Look at the beautiful places along the road; the splendid guest-houses! Music and dancing and dainty things for the children. They all ride further on. Look where the road goes over the hill. Do you see the fine folk in their fine clothes driving along? Your little ones can have their hearts' desire in Prosperity! Watch the way I go, and follow me!"

He started along the green road, walking stealthily, with outstretched grasping hand, and teeth showing fiercely.

"Friend," the tall man said—and his voice shook—"I must go first. I pray to God that you may follow me. In your inmost heart your best thoughts are as mine. I cannot promise you riches or dainty fare for your little ones along the road; only that love shall ease their way; and that they and their children and their children's children shall grow into good women and men; and at the end— God's guest-house waits along that rough road! I am dearer to you than you know, friend. Heaven grant that your way may be mine."

He wrung Dean's hand heartily. Then he started up the hill to the right, bearing upon his staff heavily. The stones slipped under his tread. They were jagged stones, Dean noticed, and the little feet might be cut; and two gentle feet that walked close to theirs. She would only think of him and the children; but it was a rough road for her!

Dean watched one man and the other, till the shades of the coming night hid them; and then again he found the vague white presence at his side.

"You have traveled awhile with both," it said, "longer than you know, Francis Dean. This is the day when their ways part and never meet again. Choose you one of them."

"For myself—" Dean began; and stopped.

"You and yours, and theirs, and some who are yet to be," the presence said, "must travel henceforth with one of these companions. Choose between them, Francis Dean!"

Dean turned quickly to the form that loomed so vaguely in the dusk.

"Who are they?" he asked.

"Yourself!" the Presence said; and then it took his arm and drew him a long step beyond measure. He closed his eyes; opened them; found himself back in his study with his head on his hand staring at the two roads. A fur-clad man drove along the wide white way in a gorgeous carriage; a man in ragged sheep-skins toiled up the stony lane, leaning wearily upon his staff. Dean made a sound like a sob.

"Such tender little feet!" he said. "O God! Such a hard road!"

The door opened suddenly, and the light of a candle shone in. There was a tempestuous rush of three small children to say their prayers at daddy's knee. "Their road to heaven," the voice of the woman he loved whispered in his ear. He laid his cheek against hers softly; and both cheeks were wet.

"That road!" he cried. "That road!"

"THE HIGHEST TYPE"

No paper comes into our home that brings more news to me. It is brim full of the highest type of Christianity. Nothing about it savors of narrow sectarianism, but rather it has the flavor of the Holy Spirit in its general operations for the whole human race. The two years I have been a reader of it has caused me to grow very fond of its weekly visit.

This Handsome Book contains the interesting story of Crisco, its discovery and manufacture. In addition — and you will be especially interested in this—it contains 615 original tested cooking recipes, and 365 dinner menus, by one of the foremost authorities in the country, Marion Harris Neil.

How many times have you asked "What shall we have for dinner?" Miss Neil's Calendar of Dinners answers the question. The menus tell what, and the recipes tell how. The menus are dated, so that each is seasonable. They are not elaborate; they are such as the average family would desire. The book is bound in stiff blue and gold cloth, with a cover design by Brehm; attractively illustrated throughout, and is something which you will use constantly.

UP AND DOWN IN OLD ARMENIA

may be seen as it was two thousand years ago. Farther south, a day's journey from Lake Van, is Bitlis, another mission station. It is a beautiful place on the Bitlis Su, one of the headwaters of the Tigris. Way back in the time of Xenophon, when the ten thousand Greeks marched on their way to the sea, they passed Bitlis, and even then the Kurds hurled stones down upon them from the castle rock.

A MISSION SCHOOL IN PROCESS OF CONSTRUCTION

At the present time the Turkish Government is building a good permanent road through the Armenian Mountains, and it is a picturesque country through which it passes. There are high mountains, streams bounding over the rocks, quaint villages perched in precipitous places and inaccessible during the winter time. At Sert, in the mountains farther south, I was told that a wagon had never been seen; even the horseman must climb over steep rocks, leaving his horse to follow him.

Still farther south, and we are no longer in Armenia. The Armenian language gives way to the Arabic. The faces we meet are of a Semitic type; the prominent nose and the peculiar conical-shaped head of the Armenian are left behind. Now we find the Arab, and the Nestorian descendants of the Assyrians, and the strange, devil-worshiping Yezidis. But, like the Jews, the Armenians have wandered far. Even in Mosul and distant Bagdad, colonies of them are found.

A new era seems to be opening up to the Armenians. Their long-lost country is being exploited for its rich mineral ores. New roads make the larger towns accessible during all the year. European influence is fast entering, and the Armenians who have gone to Europe or America return with wealth and new ideas.

Probably the Armenians will always be a subject nation without a country of their own; but, as with the Jews, the world will be their home. Long persecutions have sharpened their wits, and fitted them to take a foremost rank in every field of endeavor. There is a common saying in the Orient that "it takes ten Christians to outwit a Jew, and ten Jews to outwit an Armenian," and those who really know the Armenian believe it.

Bitlis, Armenia, September 6, 1912.

ADDRESS

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

Among the Workers

—EVANGELIST J. N. NEWSOM, of Roanoke, Va., was formerly a railroad conductor. While working on his train he undertook the necessary studies to prepare himself for Gospel service. He is now an ordained minister of the Baptist Church and ready for evangelistic work on any field.

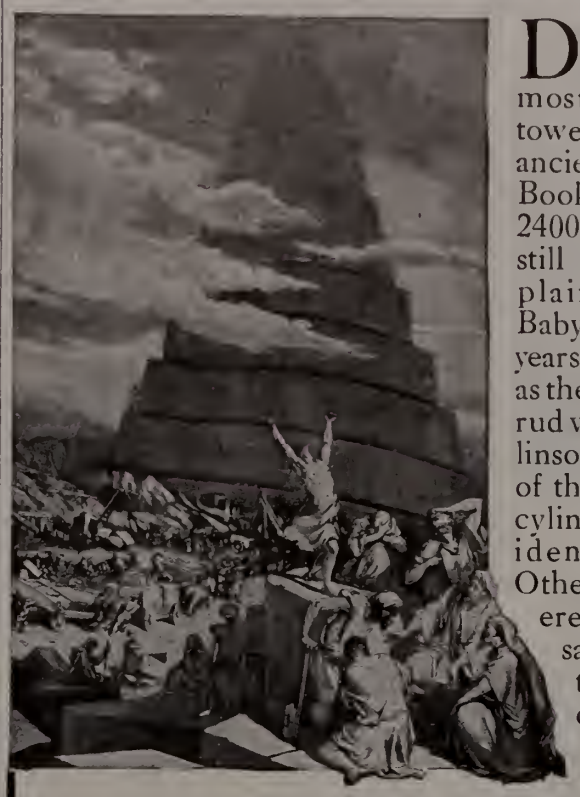
—M. E. B., DUNKEL, Lucknow, Pa., writes that a young ministerial student, H. A. White, employed in the Transfer Division of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company at Harrisburg, has been holding song and prayer service among the workingmen at the midnight lunch hour with good results. His fellow workers have shown their appreciation by presenting him with a handsome Bible, and a friend has added a set of books. Mr. White (who is colored) is studying for the ministry and working his way meanwhile.

—LYNN D. HILL, a missionary of the American Sunday School Union in Mississippi, writes: "My territory is in Southern Mississippi, where I find two classes of people—the widely scattered old settlers and an influx of newcomers, from about twenty States of the North and West. It is of the greatest importance that Sunday schools be organized. I find a great scarcity of Bibles. One young man had been married eight years and had no Bible. His wife had frequently said they ought to have a Bible, but they did not know where to get one. They bought of me—the first opportunity he had had in eight years. A young woman, hearing we had Bibles to sell, came and told of her grandmother a few miles away, who had three daughters and two grandchildren and only a fragment of a Testament for them all. It has been used so long it was falling to pieces. She said grandmother every evening took her glasses and the leaves of the Testament and sat down to read. I was glad to give her a large-print Testament. A young man whose wife had recently died hought a Bible and pocket Testament for himself and copies for each of his three children and their grandmother. A pleasant incident of the work of last Sunday was meeting on the road in a grove of tall pine timber, two young men on their way from Sunday school. Upon talking with them I found one was a Christian and the other was truly seeking to be one. Opening the Bible I showed him one of God's promises, and by that means and the help of the Holy Spirit, he has been led into the light."

—MRS. AGUSTA MITCHELL CHANCE, who died recently while visiting her son, G. W. Chance, at Staten Island, N. Y., was, with her husband, the late Jeremiah C. Chance, the founder of the Olivet Covenant Presbyterian Church in Philadelphia. For many years she was a devoted and enthusiastic member of this church, leading and assisting in its enterprises. On the occasion of her funeral appreciative addresses were delivered by Dr. L. Y. Graham, who was for nearly thirty-six years her pastor, and by Rev. Matthew J. Hyndman, the present pastor. Resolutions were passed and printed by the church session, by the Sabbath school, of which Mr. Chance was formerly the superintendent and in which Mrs. Chance labored faithfully for many years, and by the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, of which she was elected the first president in 1874. The church which Mr. and Mrs. Chance founded fifty-six years ago has sent out ten ministers of the Gospel and many missionaries, has a magnificent property, costing well over $110,000, has contributed large sums to religious and reform work, and is one of the foremost Presbyterian churches in Philadelphia. Besides doing an endless amount of good in her church and charity work, Mrs. Chance was a writer of both verse and prose, and dedicated this as she had her other talents to the service of the Master.

—AT THE INTERNATIONAL CONVENTION of the Christian Church recently held in Louisville, Ky., Mr. A. E. Corey, a missionary to China, told the thrilling story of the campaign for a million dollar missionary fund, its inception, its success, and practical completion, all due to prayer. He said that one of the missionaries in China was taken seriously sick with typhoid fever. God spared his life, and during his convalescence, two words were constantly before his mind's eye, "Opportunity, Need." These could not be forgotten. Finally he told his fellow workers that they must ask for $200,000 for their work in China. They kept praying for four months, and as they were praying, word came that a woman living in Beatrice, Neb., had given $6,000 for a Bible school for China. This encouraged them mightily. Difficulty after difficulty was removed. Finally Mr. Corey was appointed to come to America to secure $500,000 for all the fields. The first person he spoke to of it said: "It's not enough." He went to one man who said: "I'll not give you a dollar on a half million dollar campaign, but if you will raise it to a million dollars I will give you a thousand dollars." A hundred business men to whom the question was put advised making the effort for a million dollars. It was finally decided to undertake a million-dollar task for God. This was to be over and above every other gift to local, State, or national organization, each giver pledging that his special gift should in no way affect any other contribution. Already about $700,000 has been subscribed.

The Tower of Babel is Still Standing



DO YOU realize that 4,000 years after this most wonderful of all towers was built by the ancients (according to the Book of Genesis about 2400 B.C.) its seven stages still rise high above the plains near the site of Babylon? Until a few years ago it had been known as the mound of Birs Nimrud when Sir Henry Rawlinson discovered in one of the stages the inscribed cylinders which made the identification possible. Other expeditions uncovered many of the thousands of curiously interesting records and documents contained in the great work—

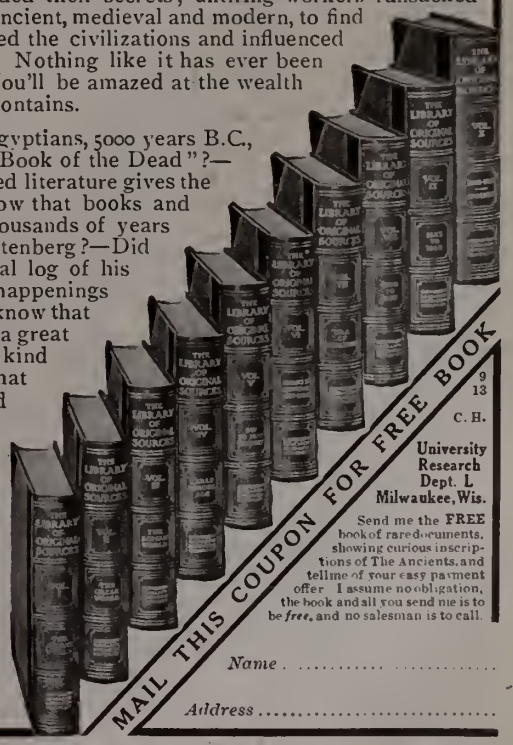
THIS MARVELOUS WORK gives the authoritative, rock-bottom sources of our knowledge on all subjects of human interest from the earliest civilization down to today—the inside facts which the average person has never even heard of.

OVER 100 RESEARCH SPECIALISTS spent 10 years gathering the contents of this great work. Ancient and remote and forgotten civilizations in all parts of the globe were uncovered, and age-buried hieroglyphics on monuments, tablets, sun-baked bricks and palimpsests yielded their secrets; untiring workers ransacked the hidden literature of every age, ancient, medieval and modern, to find the "original documents" that shaped the civilizations and influenced the thought and life of the world. Nothing like it has ever been attempted or thought of before. You'll be amazed at the wealth of information this unique library contains.

DO YOU KNOW that the old Egyptians, 5000 years B.C., had a Bible which they called the "Book of the Dead"?—Do you know that the Assyrian sacred literature gives the story of the Creation?—Do you know that books and newspapers were printed in Asia thousands of years before printing was invented by Gutenberg?—Did YOU ever read Columbus' personal log of his great voyage—filled with strange happenings and ominous forebodings?—Do you know that there occurred in medieval England a great socialistic protest—the first of its kind ever known?—Do you know by what unique process Harvey demonstrated that the blood does not stand still in the veins, as everyone then thought? Do you know who Machiavelli was, or what world famous treatise he wrote?



YOU'LL FIND THEM ALL—and thousands of others equally as curious and important—in the Library of Original Sources. Every document is in the exact words of the original, translated; every contribution is from the actual eyewitness or person who took part; every idea is in the words of the thinker, investigator, discoverer or inventor.

ROOTS OF BITTERNESS*

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

"MIRIAM and Aaron spake against Moses because of the Cushite woman whom he had married" (verse 1). Jealousy is the microbe that attacks every form of human love. It seems almost incredible that it could find its way into the heart of her who had been the little mother that had guarded her baby brother as he lay in the tiny ark of bulrushes. It has long been known that the change of relations through marriage not infrequently brings about bitterness of feeling. Are we therefore to abolish marriage? Not by any means, but instead, we must seek a remedy for jealousy. Moses' marriage to "the Cushite woman" had been a most honorable action, for she who became his wife was Zipporah, the daughter of Jethro the priest. We would say "she was a minister's daughter." And she had borne a son to Moses. (Ex. 2: 16-22.) Moses did not love Miriam the less, but he loved his wife the more. It is a strange thing about human love, that new forms which it takes on do not necessarily destroy the old loves nor even make them any less. There is nothing to be compared with the expansive power of love. We have no patience with the parents or family friends who assume that brothers and sisters are jealous of the new baby. But rather we commend that spirit that led a little girl to clap her hands and exclaim at the first sight she had of her little brother: "Oh, aren't you glad you're born?"

"We put you beside E—— in our love," was written to a newly wedded wife by one of her husband's nearest relatives. And the reply was: "Nothing could be sweeter than that." We knew of a family where the wife's mother was always spoken of by the husband as "my mother-in-love," and never as my "mother-in-law."

Not only Miriam but Aaron was jealous of Zipporah, the wife of Moses. But from the sequel we should judge that Miriam had a more deadly attack than Aaron. "Hath Jehovah indeed spoken only with Moses? Hath he not spoken also with us?" (verse 1.) Jealousy became virulent, and envy developed, which threatened their vital relation to God. If not checked, they would soon declare that God was unjust to them in continuing to regard Moses as he was under the influence of Zipporah. "And Jehovah heard it," not only their words, but saw their trend of thought. "And Jehovah spake suddenly unto Moses, unto Aaron and unto Miriam" (verse 4). And he told the three of them to come to the tent of meeting (the Tabernacle). And Jehovah came down in a pillar of cloud to meet them. Then and there God greatly commended his servant Moses (read verses 6 and 1). And he condemned Aaron and Miriam (verse 8). This scene is to be compared with God's condemnation of Adam and Eve. (Gen. 3: 9-22.)

"And behold Miriam was leprous, white as snow" (verse 10). The sinfulness of her heart was thus pictured by the vile disease of her body. And she was cast out of the camp as Eve had been cast out of Eden. Why Aaron did not share her fate suggests several reasons: (1) He probably was not so deeply affected with jealousy and envy as was Miriam; (2) the downfall of Miriam may have been needed by other women who had been associated with her in the musical festivals celebrating the deliverance of Israel (Ex. 15: 20, 21); (3) Aaron's punishment may have been all the greater by seeing the misery of his beloved sister; (4) Aaron was needed as the peacemaker. (Num. 12: 11).

"Heal her, O God, I beseech thee" (verse 13) was the prayer of Moses in response to Aaron's apology and request for intercession with God. "And the people journeyed not until Miriam was brought in again" (verse 15). Thus Miriam's punishment was made a matter of national significance, because she was a leader in Israel.

"Now the man Moses was very meek" (verse 3). Moses' attitude during the bitter attack not only upon his family but upon his political position was a marvel of self-restraint. Our Lord Jesus was meek when he stood in the midst of the false witnesses before Caiaphas. He held his peace when Caiaphas challenged him, "Answereth thou nothing?" And when he was reviled he reviled not again. When we think of Christ, we shall understand Moses better. Also we shall understand Moses' meekness better if we will read again the indications that he had a fiery spirit, as shown at the time when he slew the Egyptian. (Ex. 2: 11-12.) This will make his self-control all the more wonderful. There has been a recent discovery in science that may help to illustrate this point. It is the Dussand (cold light) lamp, which consists of a series of tungsten-filament lamps mounted on a disk, which is turned by a motor. All of the lamps are successively and intermittently lighted. The motion is so rapid that the effect of a steady light is produced, and the time so short when each lamp receives the current that the slight amount of heat is quickly dissipated. Force in character is as necessary as light for illumination, but if we can keep anger out of force as we can keep heat out of light we shall do well.

Let us think of love as a disk on which five lamps are fixed. We will think of the Holy Spirit as the motor power that keeps the disk turning. First lamp, love suffereth long and is kind; second lamp, love rejoiceth in the truth; third lamp, love beareth all things; fourth lamp, love endureth all things; fifth lamp, love never faileth.

The Dussand lamp is mainly useful in throwing pictures upon a screen, where much light and little heat is desired; also it can be used upon the human body without fear of burning to discover foreign substances which have found lodgment. So one who has the disk of love operating in his life will be able to fulfil all righteousness, even though he may have a hot temper.

Put the disk of love with its five or more lamps in contrast with the burning glass which draws the heat of the sun to a focus and produces the most stinging, burning pain if applied to the human body or sets fire to paper or any substance on which it may rest. Envy and jealousy are the burning glass applied to souls, only the fire which they draw is that of Satan.

"What is the source of envy?" We recently saw a statue that answers this question. The "Jesus-Kirken" is one of the most beautiful churches in Copenhagen. It would seem that the painter's art and the sculptor's art had been quite exhausted in order to make the interior of that church exquisitely beautiful. On one side of the churchyard is a hedge which a neighbor has placed there, and also a hideous bronze statue of Satan with the passage, "The devil goeth about as a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour," engraved upon the pedestal. The hedge is cut away, so that all who enter the church cannot fail to see the statue. Envy is one of Satan's most deadly weapons for devouring the good in mankind.

What are some of the ways in which envy is shown? By failing to speak words of appreciation, by speaking slightingly of what others have done, by being fault-finding instead of helpful, by lack of sympathy with those who are trying to do their best.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

How does envy find a place in Christian work? When one seeks his own honor rather than the cause he is apparently trying to advance.

Why does envy cause unhappiness? Because it disturbs the atmosphere of love which Jesus Christ brought into the world.

Why will envy keep one from admiring beauty of character? It is like a black cloud that hides the light.

Why will envy hinder one's own advance? Because we become like the people with whom we associate—in our thoughts as well as in our lives.

With what other sins is envy closely connected? With jealousy, lying, gossip, theft and murder.

Why is envy murmuring against God? Because our lives are ordered by God, and if we complain of our lot it is finding fault with him.

How is envy to be overcome? By prayer to God for his help, by accustoming ourselves to say or do something kind every day we live, by counting our blessings instead of our disappointments.

When we wish to light a room, we do not first try to drive out the darkness but we just carry the light into the dark room, and it is filled with light without any effort to do something with the darkness.

Let us take a glance through the Bible and see how men who have been given to us as examples have conquered the demon of jealousy and envy. There was Jacob, who was very rich in cattle. He dug wells to supply them with water in a land where water was very scarce. His enemies filled up his wells with rubbish, or quarreled with his herdsmen about them. Jacob did not contend with them but moved on and dug other wells.

We have recently been learning how the life of Joseph abounded in love and kindness to his envious and jealous brothers. Neither as the favorite son in his father's family, nor as the preferred ruler in Egypt, did he show any resentment towards those who were doing all they could to make his life miserable.

Let us read about Stephen (Acts, chapters 6, 7), how he was chosen as one qualified by his just and kindly spirit to quell the jealous dissatisfaction of those who thought they were not getting their rights. Also, let us read how angelic with quiet repose was his face when brought into trial by those who were jealous of his good deeds and reputation. (Acts 6: 8-15.) Let us read about the meekness of his spirit even when his jealous enemies were stoning him to death. (Acts 7: 54-60.) Stephen had learned from Jesus how to deal with envy and jealousy. (Compare Luke 23: 34 with Acts 7: 60.)

Let us read about Saul, who was such a zealous Hebrew that it was his special mission to persecute Christians. (Acts 9: 1-2.) Let us continue to read about him in his changed life as he became Paul the apostle to the Gentiles. (Acts 9: 3-31.) Indeed, we shall need to read to the end of the Book of Acts to learn all there is to be known of how he met and overcame the demons of jealousy and envy among many people in many lands.

Now let us read our Bible to get a picture of a man who made no effort to conquer the demons of envy and jealousy, but allowed himself to be conquered by them. Saul was anointed by the prophet Samuel to be king over Israel. (I Sam. 9: 15-27; 10: 1, 24; 13: 1; 14: 47, 48.) So it appears that Saul was a king of martial prowess and glory. He was certainly feared by his enemies. But Saul disobeyed God and an evil spirit came upon him and dethronement was decreed. (I Sam. 15: 1-3, 9-11; 16: 1.) Saul became despondent, and a player upon the harp was sought to quiet him. Young David, whom Samuel had already anointed to be king in Saul's place, was brought. But Saul did not know this, and he was refreshed by David's music. Shortly afterward there occurred David's victorious encounter with Goliath (I Sam. 17). Then the women came out to sing in the streets of the cities, while they made music with timbrels. They sang:

> Saul hath slain his thousands,
> And David his ten thousands.
> —I Sam. 18: 6-16

The demons of envy and jealousy were aroused in the heart of King Saul. It has been said it was not David's excellence that maddened him, but the plaudits it received in public. Envy is not so apt to dwell upon another's superiority as it is upon the acknowledgment of it by those around. From that day forward he sought to kill David. Let those who will read the whole story of the miserable workings of Saul's envy to be found in I Samuel from chapters 19 to 31. It would be well to assign these chapters to some member of the class to read and put the contents in the form of a short story, or let the teacher do it if no scholar is found sufficient for the task. In preparation for this, the teacher would do well to read "The Tragedy of Saul" by Robert Browning.

OUR SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS' ROUND TABLE

—A LADY IN SPRINGFIELD, MO., writes: "I am a reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. I have long been interested in reading our Sunday school lesson by you and Mrs. Crafts. I am a teacher of twelve girls in our rural church. I desire very much to teach them the Christian religion and make it so interesting that they may become earnest Christians. Will you write me how to win these pupils to Christ? Take the subject at the first step and give me as full and complete statement as you understand it."

We will try to make the way very plain for this teacher and others who may have the same desire, but have not expressed it. The first thing of course is to pray for the pupils, and the next is to prepare the lessons with great thoroughness to make them attractive, interesting and impressive, getting the best lesson helps, especially some good illustrations such as can be found in the lesson books of Peloubet and Miss Tarbell, and in the Sunday School Times. No carpenter would expect to make a success in building a house who did not supply himself with good tools. He would even economize on his food rather than work with clumsy tools. Jesus said: "If a man has no sword, let him sell his garment and buy one." It is not enough to simply exhort the children. They must be thoroughly instructed and interested, and almost every lesson should be taught in such a way as to incline pupils to think of their duty to decide for a Christian life. They should not be asked to do this simply for their own happiness, but for the sake of doing good in the world. That is the best appeal to make to a company of girls, especially as they pass into their teens, which is the period of altruism. Teachers should visit pupils at their homes and seek to interest their parents, so that teachers and parents can work together. If the pastor does not preach with a view of helping the children, the teacher may well ask his aid. There ought to be, in order to bring children to a Christian life and train them afterwards, a mid-week afternoon meeting for children, with good literature, for if older people need such a meeting, certainly the children do. Surely the most effective way to get young people to make the decision to be Christians is by a quiet conversation with each of them separately after an impressive lesson, or at some other favorable time. Some will need the strong tide of a revival to bring them in. Some will accept the invitation easier than others, and so one thing that is essential to winning your class is persistency, which should be exercised in such a way as not to make it seem like nagging, but rather individual interest in the welfare, usefulness and happiness of the members of the class.

THE RIPENED LEAVES

SAID the leaves upon the branches,
One sunny autumn day:
We've finished all our work, and now
We can no longer stay.
So our gowns of red and yellow,
And our cloaks of sober brown,
Must be worn before the frost comes
And we go rustling down.

We have had a jolly summer,
With the birds that built their nests
Beneath our green umbrellas,
And the squirrels that were our guests.
But we cannot wait for winter
And we do not care for snow;
When we hear the wild northwesters
We lose our clasp and go.

But we hold our heads up bravely
Unto the very last,
And shine in pomp and splendor
As away we flutter fast.
In the mellow autumn noontide
We kiss and say good-by,
And through the naked branches
Then may children see the sky.

MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

Gifts That Helped Many

"THERE is that scattereth and increaseth yet more," says the good old Bible proverb, and it finds abundant illustration in the many benevolences of CHRISTIAN HERALD readers. Hardly a week passes in which some one does not give evidence of the joy and satisfaction that comes of doing the Lord's work cheerfully and with a whole-hearted generosity.

On July 30, Mr. N. H. C., a reader in East Ryegate, Vt., who had on previous occasions been a liberal contributor to various good causes, forwarded a check for $99.66, "to send more supplies for the Gospel Train." Of this sum $60 was applied to Foreign Missions (including China, Labrador, the Philippines, and Liberia, West Africa) and $39.66 to Home Missions in various States, the apportionment having first received the donor's approval. On August 5 the same donor sent a check for $69.18, which, with the donor's approval, was distributed among seven worthy Home Missionary enterprises in several States and seven in the foreign mission field, the latter including India, Japan, Persia, China, Bulgaria and Burma.

Another reader, Mr. D. E. H., of Canyon City, Ore., on July 4, sent a check for $50, which he wished to be divided among unfortunate women and orphan children. With his approval, the Cremorne Mission, the Door of Hope and the China orphans were made the beneficiaries. On August 12, the same gentleman forwarded a check for $175, to be divided "in the same proportions" as the original gift. This was done, but the list of beneficiaries was increased to ten, including the Sunday Breakfast Association, Philadelphia; Pacific Garden Mission, Chicago; Soul-Winners' League, Wilmore, Ky.; Florence Crittenton Mission, New York; Navajo Indian Mission, Tolchaco, Ari.; City Rescue Mission, Grand Rapids, Mich.; CHRISTIAN HERALD Children's Home, Bowery Mission, Balkan Relief Work and China orphans.

Checks for all the gifts were promptly forwarded to the different recipients.

IT INTERESTS THE WHOLE FAMILY

The longer your splendid magazine comes to our home the more it is appreciated by all of us. Our three-year-old girl first calls for the "KIDDIES HERE." and "weeds it" by carefully looking at the beautiful pictures; the older girls like the stories; the boys are interested in the world's happenings, and wife and I gladly read many of the useful and interesting departments.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is a clean, bright, up-to-date home magazine, and we consider its free Almanac worth what the paper alone costs us.

A New Howard Watch

THE E. HOWARD WATCH WORKS begs to announce for limited sale, a new watch—the HOWARD 12-size Carvel, 17-jewel, extra-thin, open face, solid gold, at fifty-five dollars.

This new watch is thinner by one and one-third millimeters than the regular 12-size extra-thin HOWARD. The movement is adjusted to three positions, temperature, and isochronism; cased in a single-joint solid gold case of special design, exceedingly flat and compact.

Selling complete in 14K solid gold case at $55 — it is the only gold cased, 12-size HOWARD that you can buy for less than $75.

The small number that we are able to offer this year is due to the time and care given to all HOWARD movements and the necessarily limited output of an organization devoted to fine watches exclusively.

Your representative jeweler will doubtless have a few of these watches on exhibition during the next thirty days.

If you are interested in a reliable watch of the new thin-model type and possessing elements of the distinguished and the unusual, we advise you to make inquiry at an early date. It is an opportunity to own a 17-jewel HOWARD cased in solid gold at the very moderate price of $55.

A Howard Watch is always worth what you pay for it.
The price of each Watch is fixed at the factory and a printed ticket attached—from the 17-jewel (double roller) in a Crescent Extra or Boss Extra gold-filled case at $40, to the 23-jewel at $150—and the EDWARD HOWARD model at $350.

Not every jeweler can sell you a HOWARD WATCH. The jeweler who can is a good man to know.

THOUGH THEY COME FROM THE ENDS OF THE EARTH"

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER, JR.

OH, East is East, and West is West," sings the ballad, "and never the twain shall meet."

But they come very near to each er right here in New York—on a fectly ordinary desk ered with an inky blue tter. For when I open letters—some of them hey carry me away m the city, away to North and to the uth, to the midst of a ngle clearing, and to topmost mountain ak.

This letter is from a n who lives in Seattle, ash. He says:

"My wife, who was visng in New York, showed the copied poem, ich was written by our sixteenar-old son." I am quoting the rses:

Margaret E. Sangster, Jr.

BEFORE IT IS TOO LATE

Author Unknown

If you have a gray-haired mother
In the old home far away,
Sit right down and write the letter
You've neglected day by day.
Don't wait until her tired steps
Reach heaven's pearly gate,
But show her that you think of her,
Before it is too late.

If you have a tender message,
Or a loving word to say,
Do not wait till you forget it,
But just whisper it to-day;
Who can tell what bitter memories
May confront you if you wait,
So just make your loved one happy
Before it is too late.

We live but in the present
While the future is unknown,
To-morrow is a mystery,
To-day is all our own;
The chance that fortune now bestows
May vanish while you wait,
So grasp your opportunity
Before it is too late.

The tender word unspoken,
The letters never sent,
The long forgotten messages,
The wealth of love unspent;
For these some hearts are breaking,
For these some loved ones wait;
So show them that you care for them
Before it is too late.

This letter comes from our extreme outhwest. The writer is obliged to t all day long in a wheel-chair, and think that we strong, happy people ould take her message to heart. I m giving her letter to you, word for ord:

Oh! let me tell you how it hurts to have very one watch you as though you were a reus animal! All night I lie awake thinking f the people who pass and stare at "that girl the wheel-chair." Some time, won't you tell e girls to whom you are writing how hard it to see every one pass and just stare? No mile, no good-morning, no bow—they seem to ink that I would not care.

This letter is from one of my busiess girls. She has discovered a way o settle the question of modern dress —in an office:

By my own example I have avoided all exremes in dress—worn "common sense" shirtvaists—by no means "mannish," but rather irlish, and have had a love for the beautiful all he time—having a tasty supply of jabots and ollars, and other accessories to take away any ppearance of plainness or undue severity. And wish you knew what a helpful influence it as had on the girls in our employ. One girl elt that she must wear extreme short sleeves nd low neck—both winter and summer—and s a result barely escaped a serious illness durng the first season with us. But after a frank alk with her, she saw it in a different light, nd from being a careless, indifferent girl, oing to extremes in the clothes she bought, he now dresses neatly and with a great deal of aste. The credit does not belong to me—far rom it. Every one in the office has contributed o it, for as each new helper comes in, each older worker tries to co-operate in making the office a place where we need not be ashamed because others may "see" us. And it has helped the girls in their moral and physical and spiritual well-being. All last winter not a single girl was "off because of a cold"—all well and happy at their work.

This letter comes to me from the Pacific Coast. My friend is very much in love with her homeland—and who can blame her?

"When we get a beautiful sunset here," she writes, "it looks as though the great Artist had poured his vermilion pot over the top of old Mount Baker. I see sights every day that the poor humanity of cities long for."

Here is a message from Canada. It comes from a lonely girl who is away from her family and her own country: "I do not think that I will stay here for another year. It is too lonely and the winters are too hard. Forty below zero, an icy snow, and a howling, mournful wind are not things to be played with."

I have a dear little girl, a pen-and-ink friend, who is beginning to teach school. She writes from her Middle West:

"My school began last Tuesday, and I like it. I am already in love with my scholars (there are twenty-three of them, and I have every grade but the seventh, with music and nature study, too. Of course there isn't much time that is wasted. My eighth grade is fine—five of them—but I think my favorite class is the third grade, three little boys. They are so bright and interested, and so quick to respond."

Can you imagine how much good such an instructor will do the children? For she has the ability to teach, and to learn, and to love!

I had a letter from South Africa to-day. A message that warmed my heart and made me feel like smiling. It is from a missionary among the Zulus:

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is always a welcome visitor to us in this far away land. As missionaries, we seldom have a new book to enjoy and so appreciate your magazine even more fully; we enjoy every page. The Lord has blessed our work among the natives (Zulus), and we have seen many transformed from darkness to light.

And last of all is a dear little note from one of my newest girls, who lives in my own State. She says very sweetly:

In your pieces in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD I have noticed that you say some of the girls who write don't sign their names. I wonder why? I want to be your friend!

"Oh, East is East, and West is West, and never the twain shall meet." I wonder!

A WELCOME WEEKLY VISITOR

I do not know how long Mrs. Somerville has been a subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. It has been coming to us here for sixteen years. We received it in Winona for several years, perhaps ten, from 1887 to 1897. Prior to 1887 my recollection is we took it at Carrollton, Miss. It has been continuous. We have put it into several homes. It has always carried light and comfort. We congratulate you, in advance of the celebration of its birthday, upon the great good it has accomplished. It must have been coming into my home for twenty-six, perhaps thirty years, possibly longer.

NEW PLANS FOR CHRISTIAN ENDEAVORERS

BY REV. FRANCIS E. CLARK

President of the World's Christian Endeavor Union

THE last few years, especially the last few months, have been times of great activity among the Societies of Christian Endeavor, when new plans have been developed and carried out as never before in the history of the movement; and I believe that the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will be glad to know something of these plans, and will rejoice with the society in its recent activities and enlargement.

Four years ago the watchword at the great International Christian Endeavor Convention in St. Paul was "Increase," and the Increase Campaign, there launched, added within two years ten thousand new societies and more than a million new members to the ranks of Christian Endeavor. Two years ago at the International Convention at Atlantic City "Efficiency" was the watchword, for it was felt that this multitude of new members needed special training for general efficiency in the Lord's work.

The campaign of efficiency developed many new plans. A rating was devised for the societies by which they might know their present standing and measure their future advance, and on a scale of 100 per cent. the different lines of committee work, the prayer-meeting with its outspoken allegiance to Jesus Christ, loyalty to the church (as indicated by the midweek meeting, the Sunday service and devotion to the missionary activities of the church) all were recognized as making up the 100 per cent. efficiency for a society. At the same time the idea of training individual members to become expert Christian Endeavorers was advanced, and a very large number of young people in churches of all denominations have passed their examinations with credit, and have received the novel degree, "C. E. E." (Christian Endeavor Expert), which means more, perhaps, for the future of the church of Christ than many a college degree means for the advancement of his kingdom. These examinations have usually been conducted by the pastors, and they embrace all lines of work which are appropriate to active young church members.

These efforts for larger efficiency have stimulated not only the local societies and made them far more active in all kinds of religious work, but naturally have stimulated the local unions and the State unions, which have never before been so flourishing as during the past two years. In great numbers in many parts of the country the young people have come together for their State conventions to discuss suggested plans, to propose better ones, perhaps, to stimulate each other by personal experiences of their work in the efficiency campaign and by planning, with the Lord's blessing, each year for larger and larger results.

The local union meetings and the county conventions of Christian Endeavor have also felt the stimulus of these new and definite plans for greater efficiency. In Massachusetts, for instance, on the 19th of April, when in almost every county of the State a Christian Endeavor Convention is held, the meetings during the last year were larger than ever in the past, and in some counties the attendance was numbered by thousands. The same report comes from local unions in many other parts of the country. The very gratifying success of these plans for increase and efficiency in Christian work naturally led at the last international convention in Los Angeles to a proposition that during the next two years, and, in fact, for all the years to come, "increase and efficiency" together should be the watchword of Christian Endeavor.

A special advance step for the new year will be the observance of "Christian Endeavor Week," the first week of February, the week in which the first Society of Christian Endeavor was formed thirty-three years ago. The idea of this week is not the glorification of Christian Endeavor, or the reckoning of its exploits, but that then every society shall round up its activities, take account of stock, see where it stands as an efficient or inefficient society, and resolve, with the help of God, to do larger and better things in the months to come. An outline for each day of "Christian Endeavor Week" is proposed, which it is hoped will result in bringing many young people to decide for Christ. The first Sunday evening of this week shall be an Ingathering Evening, when the young people of the community shall be canvassed for active and associate members, and when everything shall be done to lead them to feel that they have responsibilities to the church as well as to the school and to business life.

On the evening of the midweek prayer-meeting of the church, it is hoped that every society will make special efforts to rejoice the heart of the pastor (and perhaps surprise him) with an unusual attendance and more hearty participation than ever before on the part of the young people; while the following Sunday, with which the week closes, after the enthusiasm and spiritual interest which it is hoped will be generated by the week, decisions will be asked for in the anticipation that many young people will then decide to say in the words of the Christian Endeavor pledge: "Trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ for strength, I promise him that I will strive to do whatever he would like to have me do"; and that also, in the words of the Christian Endeavor Recruits' pledge, some will say: "Feeling myself called by the Holy Spirit, and trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ for strength, I promise him that I will from this day forth strive to shape the plans of my life so that I may give myself wholly to the service of Christ and the church." This means the ministry, mission work at home or abroad, or some Christian life work.

These are some of the advance steps which the Christian Endeavor Society has taken and is taking for the coming year. Not only in America, but in many other lands, these efficiency plans have been adopted, and will be to a larger and larger extent.

The next World's Convention of Christian Endeavor, to be held in Sydney, Australia, in March, 1914, promises to be the greatest religious gathering ever held in the Island Continent. It is expected that twenty-five or thirty persons from America, who are interested in the spread of the kingdom of our Lord, and especially in the work of the young people, will take this long journey across the Pacific, touching at Honolulu, Fiji, and New Zealand, where some days will be spent in Christian Endeavor meetings, then on to the great convention in Sydney. After that the journey of most of the party will be continued to South Africa, where, in many important cities, Christian Endeavor conventions will be held before the return around the world by way of Europe to America.

Much interest is manifested in this Endeavor journey around the world, which starts from Boston on the 14th of January next, and there is still an opportunity for those who are interested to join the party who will take this unique and interesting trip, which has never before been undertaken by a party of American Christians, a journey which will give an opportunity to spread far and wide around the world these new plans for Christian Endeavor increase and efficiency.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S MEETINGS

NOTES ON THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR, EPWORTH LEAGUE AND BAPTIST YOUNG PEOPLE'S UNION TOPICS

Favorite Verses*

THE thirteenth chapter of I Corinthians is one of the wonder-spots of the Bible. It is marvelous as a piece of literature; it is marvelous in its ideals of human life; it is marvelous in its spiritual truth.

The word "love" has been a favorite one for the poets and story-tellers of all ages, but the New Testament word for love is unique. It stands for an idea, an experience, a possession that did not exist before Jesus came. In fact, the word itself, the very letters of it, was almost new when the New Testament authors were writing. It was a word that the editors of the Septuagint Version of the Bible had used when they made their translation of the Old Testament from Hebrew into Greek about two hundred years before the birth of Christ. But the word is not found in classical Greek. It seems to be a word that belongs particularly to the Bible, and, especially, to the New Testament.

What did Paul mean by this wonderful word—love? It seems extremely unfortunate that the translators of the King James Version called it charity, for that English word has come to mean just what Paul distinctly says he did not mean. "Though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor"—that is charity, as the word is now used in English, and Paul was talking about something much higher than that.

But we may get an idea of what he did mean from a study of that very word charity. It comes from the Latin carus, "dear." Charity, then, stood for a feeling, a sentiment, an emotion. Some one was dear to some one else, and the emotion aroused by that relationship of dearness was called charity. But the translators of the Revised Version have done well to restore the simple word, so old, yet ever fresh, love.

But whom are we to love if we would have the New Testament grace? That is the real secret. It stands in the first place for the love a Christian feels toward Christ. Is Christ dear to you? Are your emotions stirred when you think of him? Could you answer promptly and emphatically and satisfactorily if he should ask you suddenly the question he asked Peter, calling you by name: "Lovest thou me?"

Notice how Paul values this emotion, this sentiment. It is greater than prophecies; they will fail. It is greater than wisdom, or than knowledge. It is greater than faith. It is greater than charity. It is greater than sacrifice. "Though I give my body to be burned and have not love it profiteth me nothing."

Long ago Samuel had said to disobedient Saul, the king: "To obey is better than sacrifice." And God has made it very clear what his first requirement is. Jesus emphasized it when the lawyer asked him to specify the greatest commandment. "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God," he answered, "with all thy soul and with all thy mind and with all thy strength."

The great German philosopher and theologian, Schleiermacher, insisted that religion was not a matter of the intellect nor of the will, but of the feelings. Religion is loving God. It is having a definite experience, a real possession, a positive sentiment in the heart, the sentiment of love for God.

Now since Jesus came, the matter is much easier. It is his presence in the world that has given that new meaning to the word love. The emotion and experience of a Christian is different than any the saints before Christ could have had. There is a warm, human element in the emotion they feel toward Christ. He is dear to them. They love him not only as a God but as a man. His presence and his friendship satisfy that great longing for fellowship with God, of which Browning makes David tell in his prophetic rhapsody sung before that same sad King Saul:

O Saul, it shall be
A Face like my face that receives thee, a man like to me
Thou shalt love and be loved by forever. A Hand like this hand Shall throw open the gates of the new life to thee. See the Christ stand.

Yes, see him standing there. Do you love him? Has he touched your heart, making that new and delightful emotion of considering him dear? If he has, then all the rest of this wonderful chapter comes easily in its turn. You have this warm, happy love for Jesus; then you realize that he wants you to treat others as you would treat him. He tells you that the people you meet every day represent him and that the way you feel toward them and the way you act toward them measure exactly your feeling and your action toward him.

Here is the jewel toward which the heart of man has turned, often unwittingly, since time began. Love! Truly it is, as the great modern apostle of New Testament love, Henry Drummond, declared—"the Greatest Thing in the World."

The poorest, the youngest, the least learned may have it. It is God's free gift to all the world. We are dear to him. He will transform our hearts so that he shall be dear to us, and so that our friends, our neighbors, the strangers, and the world shall be dear to us—because they are dear to him—because—he died for them. This is what Love means.

Forty Years in Japan*

AMERICA has a peculiar interest in Japan just now. Disquieting rumors arise from time to time that there is a strong anti-American sentiment among some classes and that some of the Japanese are so angry about the California land bills and some other matters, mysterious and unknown, that they want to fight us.

The date of this meeting will be a good time for a great wave of peace and friendship throughout these two nations. Thousands of young people, many thousands in the United States and fewer thousands in Japan, will be studying this lesson. The two countries ought to be the best of friends. The old and bitter antagonism against Christianity has largely passed away. It was the United States that opened the door of Japan to bring it into contact with the rest of the world. The people resented that then, but they see now what an incalculable gain it has been to them. Japan, in touch with Western civilization, has made astounding strides in these incredibly few years. Now there is a strong national Methodist Church, chiefly the fruit of Methodism in the United States.

Commodore Perry landed in Yeddo Bay just sixty years ago. Methodists have been at work in Japan for forty years. A new civilization and a new church have resulted. Let the American young people and the Japanese young people, praying and praising together, link hands and hearts for the further spread of the light and the truth and the peace of Christ.

WONDERS OF GRACE

AT THE recent convention of rescue mission workers in New York City many interesting and wonderful stories were told. Mr. Frank Ward, Sunshine Mission, Cedar Rapids, Ia., gave this account of the beginning of the work of that institution:

"For twenty years I was a newspaper and book agent on the Illinois Central Railroad, and was brought to God in a meeting conducted by Mrs. Van Cott. A little later I became a membership secretary of the Y. M. C. A., of Cedar Rapids, Ia.

"One day an unconverted printer came and told me of a practically destitute paralyzed drunken railroad conductor living in the town and asked me to visit him and help him if possible.

"I went to see him and talked to him about spiritual things and gave him a little help of another kind. He could not speak above a whisper, but as I pointed out the way of salvation to him, he gasped out the words, 'I come! I come!' Those were the last words he ever spoke, for during the remaining three months of his life he could not speak or hear. The incident made such a deep impression on my mind as showing the willingness of God to use me for the salvation of others that I decided, with my wife, to start mission work—first in a room in our own house.

"That was in 1895. To-day the mission property is worth $50,000 and contains a plant affording facilities for temporary lodging for homeless men, and for women and girls who find themselves in need of a temporary home, a day nursery, a lunch counter, a free employment bureau, and other agencies of ministry and help. On the top of the building is a large electric sign showing the words: 'Jesus, the Light of the World.'"

Northfield Anecdotes

By the Northfield Campfire

AT a "Round Top" meeting, Melvin Trotter of the Rescue Mission, Grand Rapids, in an address on "Experience," said that before he was converted he was "so low down he had to reach up to touch bottom!"

Mother Love

Three angels were sent to gather and bring to heaven the most beautiful and lasting thing of earth. They scoured faithfully the haunts of men and the scenes of beauty. One of them caught up an armful of American beauty roses. Another secured the smile of a child, while the third bore up from earth "mother love." When at last heaven was reached, the roses had faded away, the child's rare smile had disappeared; but "mother love" was accorded a place in heaven as the best that earth had known.

BE STILL

BE still!
You shall not suffer ill.
Cry not against the pain or loss—
Your Lord and Master bore a cross.
And yet his path of thorns and sighs
Led to a throne beyond the skies:
It was his Father's will.

Grieve not;
You are of grace begot.
In this assurance sweetly rest:
Your Father well knows what is best.
These things are blessings from above,
And each is measured by his love;
Then glory in your lot.

His own
Are never left alone
To bear the thorn which must abide;
He lingers ever near your side,
Unseen, perhaps, but always near,
To heal the hurt and dry the tear—
He never leaves his own.

ANSWERED PRAYERS

MRS. D. M. writes from Lovington, Va.: "I wish to acknowledge God's goodness in restoring me to health in answer to prayer after a long spell of nervous prostration. It seemed to me at first that the more I prayed the darker the clouds became. At last a voice said to me: 'Be of good cheer!' The words of the hymn came to me:

"Jesus, I my cross have taken.

Then the dark clouds rolled away; all doubt and fears were removed, and there is sunshine in my soul today, 'for Jesus is my light.' It all came to me through prayer."

Here are other testimonies from grateful mothers: A mother from Ohio thanks God for bringing her son and husband together after an estrangement. Mrs. H. E. C., of Husum, Wash., writes: "The Lord does answer prayer. I prayed that my son, who was away up in British Columbia, should come home. He did so, and I know it was in answer to my earnest plea." Mrs. H. B. writes from Ellis Grove, Ill.: "I wish to acknowledge God's goodness in answer to prayer. Just recently the necessity for an operation on one of our boys was avoided. We prayed that the Lord's will might be done, and he was restored to health. This is only one of the many things we have to be thankful for." W. A., of Baltimore, sends a letter that will appeal strongly to all those who love the old-fashioned camp-meetings and to those who believe we may expect God's help in all the little details of life. We must remember that nothing that is big enough to interest us is too small to interest him.

"For many years I have been attending one of the largest camp-meetings in Maryland. This year it did not seem as if I could arrange to go. I laid it before my heavenly Father and prayed if it was his will that I should go, my way should be opened. Soon after in a most unexpected manner my prayer was answered, and necessary funds provided. I thank God, who has answered this prayer and many others in the past fifty years. Praise his name!"

A subscriber from North Dakota writes: "I find great comfort in your Answered Prayer column, and wish to add my testimony. The Lord has averted a great calamity and danger from us. If we only trust him and tell him our troubles he will surely help us. I often think the lack comes from us; we do not leave our troubles with him."

Infancy and extreme old age share alike in the blessings of prayer. "I wish," writes Mrs. R. B. G., from Tacoma, Wash., "to acknowledge answer to prayer for my ten-months-old baby, who had bronchial pneumonia and was very sick for ten weeks." M. M. C., of Rossburg, Ohio, writes: "I am almost eighty years old and I enjoy reading THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. I am waiting for it each week. especially the Answered Prayer column. I want to tell the readers of the paper that the Lord has wonderfully answered my prayers all along the journey of my life and is keeping me, for which I give him all the glory. He is all in all to me. Praise his name forever!"

Acknowledgments of answers to prayers have also been received from:

M. I., North Bend, Neb.; A Reader, Jackson, Mich.; J. H., Auburn. N. Y.; A Reader, Oberlin, Ohio; An Old Subscriber, Sharon, Pa.; Mrs. R. V. L.., Richland Springs, Texas,

DIDN'T KNOW

That Coffee Was Causing Her Trouble

So common is the use of coffee as a beverage, many do not know that it is the cause of many obscure ails which are often attributed to other things.

The easiest way to find out for oneself is to quit the coffee for a while, at least, and note results. A Virginia lady found out in this way, and also learned of a new beverage that is wholesome as well as pleasant to drink. She writes:

"I am 40 years old and all my life, up to a year and a half ago, I had been a coffee drinker.

"Dyspepsia, severe headaches and heart weakness made me feel sometimes as though I was about to die. After drinking a cup or two of hot coffee, my heart would go like a clock without a pendulum. At other times it would almost stop and I was so nervous I did not like to be alone.

"If I took a walk for exercise, as soon as I was out of sight of the house I'd feel as if I was sinking and this would frighten me terribly. My limbs would utterly refuse to support me, and the pity of it all was, I did not know that coffee was causing the trouble.

"Reading in the papers that many persons were relieved of such ailments by leaving off coffee and drinking Postum, I got my husband to bring home a package. We made it according to directions and I liked the first cup. Its rich, snappy flavor was delicious.

"I have been using Postum about eighteen months and to my great joy my digestion is good, my nerves and heart are all right, in fact, I am a well woman once more, thanks to Postum."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Write for copy of the little book, "The Road to Wellville."

Postum comes in two forms:

Regular Postum — must be well boiled.

Instant Postum is a soluble powder. A teaspoonful dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly.

Grocers sell both kinds.

"There's a reason" for Postum.

College Foods

Puffed Wheat and Puffed Rice are favorite cereals on the tables of college students.

They are rarely missing there.

These foods were invented by a college professor. They embody the best that experts know about fitting grain foods for digestion.

They are always crisp and ready.

They are delicate and thin.

The taste is like toasted nuts.

And, where girls are concerned, one main appeal is their use in candy making.

Puffed Grains are scientific foods. Every granule is steam-exploded. They are the best-cooked cereals men have ever created.

But their chief attraction is their simple deliciousness. You will find them served wherever people enjoy the unique and dainty.

Such folks, young and old, are now consuming forty million dishes monthly.

Puffed Wheat, 10c
Puffed Rice, 15c
Except in Extreme West

With Cream and Sugar

Serve in the morning with sugar and cream. Or mix them with any fruit.

When you serve ice cream, try Puffed Grains as a nut-like garnish for it.

Try them as wafers in soup.

Try crisping the grains with butter sometime, to be eaten like popcorn or peanuts.

Like Crackers In Milk

For luncheons or suppers serve in bowls of milk. The grains are crisp and toasted, bubble-like and thin. And they are four times as porous as bread.

They are whole grains made wholly digestible, so they do not tax the stomach.

Note how these dainty grains melt away into almond-flavored granules.

LAODICEA THE LUKEWARM

THE RUINS OF AN ANCIENT BRIDGE OF ROMAN CONSTRUCTION AT LAODICEA

HE journey from Ephesus to Laodicea is a most interesting one. roughout the whole stance the railway fol- vs the valley of the eander, so famous in thology, or its scarcely s famous tributary, e Lycus, which joins the eander shortly before reach Laodicea. This the greatest fig region the world, for most of e delicious "Smyrna s" come from the Me- der Valley, and roughout almost its ıole length we see the autiful, shapely trees th their smooth white rk, which have con- buted for many centu- s so much to the alth of this province. tton and tobacco and aize are also raised in is fertile valley, and we k with constant inter- t upon the crooked Me- der, which winds in d out throughout the ıole length of the val- . Visions of college assics, of the mythical ories of childhood are brought to our minds by every rn of the meandering stream, and its banks in the ringtime, bright with millions of gorgeous anemones, ake it seem a fit abiding place for the spirits and the rites with which mythology peopled its shores.

Every town at which our train stops beckons to us to ave the cars and pay it a visit, for each one is full of assic interest. But we cannot linger to see the ruins old Magnesia, so old that it was destroyed by the mmerians more than 2,500 years ago; or Tralles, where e great Attalus once had his palace; or Sultan Hissar, ere Strabo, the historian to whom we are so much debted for our knowledge of ancient men and manners, ce went to school. The modern Turkish names of any of these stations on the way to Laodicea are most teresting. For instance, Balachik means "Little ace Up Above"; Diermenjik means "Dear Little Mill"; hile a station still farther south called Kuyukak means Dear Little Well."

At last, after a journey which had taken nearly the hole day, though we had covered only a little more than hundred miles from Ephesus, the conductor calls out Gonjeli," and we know that we have reached the station the foot of the great hill which is covered with the ins of Laodicea, where once was a proud, rich city, a ty that received the most scathing rebuke which was oken by the Spirit to any one of the Seven Cities of sia.

Laodicea, like Philadelphia, was a city of the open or. It was founded by Antiochus II some 250 years before Christ as a guardian of the great road from Smyrna and Ephesus to the Meander Valley, to Phrygia and the uplands of Anatolia. It had a commanding position on the lower valley of the Lycus, and all the merchandise, all the soldiers and their equipments, and all the officials of the Greek and Roman Empires in their turn, had to pass through this fortunate city on their way to the Far East, or on their return from the interior of Asia. To be sure, the great highway that passed through Philadelphia reached, in a measure, the same back country, but the pass to the uplands which was guarded by Laodicea was less steep and rugged than the road beyond Philadelphia, and the natural advantages were apparently altogether with the former city.

By reason of these advantages, Laodicea grew rich and prosperous. It became famous for its banking houses and its millionaires, but with all its wealth and prosperity it did not perform its mission as well as did poor Philadelphia. It seems to have made little impression on the Phrygian tribes and to have accomplished little in the introduction of the Greek language and civilization in which Philadelpha was so successful.

Laodicea was especially famous for two things, its wool and its medicine. A peculiar kind of sheep with long, soft, glossy black wool had long been bred in this neighborhood. The secret of raising this breed of sheep has now been lost, but in the days of St. John this glossy wool which came from Laodicea and was there woven into beautiful and costly garments was famous throughout the world. The city was also noted for its doctors and its drugs. An especial and noted school of medicine flourished in Laodicea. We are told that "this school of physicians followed the teachings of Herophilos, who flourished about three hundred years before Christ, and who, on the principles that compound diseases require compound medicines, began that strange system of heterogeneous mixtures, some of which have only lately been expelled from our own pharmacopœia." (Quoted by Sir William Ramsay.)

The fearful and wonderful combination of drugs given by some modern doctors would seem to indicate that they still belong to this school of Laodicea. One of the medicines for which Laodicea was famous was an ointment for "strengthening the ears," whatever that may

MAYOR GAYNOR'S BODY LYING IN STATE

THE funeral ceremonies attending the interment of the remains of the late Mayor Gaynor of New York developed into one of the most remarkable tributes which Americans have ever paid to any public man. On the afternoon of Saturday, September 20, the body was removed from the Gaynor home in Brooklyn to the rotunda of the City Hall. That evening five hundred school children from the East Side presented themselves at the City Hall and requested to see Mayor Gaynor's body. Though the plans were that the public should not be admitted until the following morning permission was granted the children to walk through the rotunda and view the remains.

Early on Sunday morning the formal lying in state began, and during that day over ninety thousand persons passed through the rotunda of the City Hall. Undaunted by the rain which fell heavily at intervals throughout the day, a line, which was at times over a mile in length, waited patiently and quietly to pass by the coffin of the late mayor. It was not a merely curious throng, for those who waited so patiently to pay their last tribute of respect showed their sympathy and their true admiration for the late mayor by their attitudes. This feeling on the part of the waiting throng was so evident that when Mayor Kline from his office window saw the thousands huddled under umbrellas in the long line, he said: "We will not close the doors at 10 o'clock as we had planned. Those good people out there have come to see Mayor Gaynor. They must see him, and we will keep the doors open for them."

The new mayor was greatly touched by the crowd that entered the rotunda. He saw cripples on crutches hobbling along with the others. He saw old men and old women. He saw thousands of children, many with sprays of flowers in their hands. There were the well dressed, with raincoats and umbrellas, and the tattered, who shivered in their scanty clothing.

"A most remarkable tribute!" Mayor Kline exclaimed. "I consider it one of the most beautiful compliments ever paid to the memory of any man. It is a tribute from the hearts of the people."

On Monday morning at ten o'clock the late mayor's body was taken from the City Hall to Trinity Church, where the simple funeral service of the Episcopal Church was held. The church was undecorated, save for the floral offerings which were banked along the chancel rail.

As soon as the pallbearers, led by ex-President Taft and Mayor Kline, had taken their seats, Suffragan Bishop Burch preceded the body down the aisle, reading the beautiful ritual of the Episcopal Church beginning: "I am the resurrection and the life, saith the Lord."

The services lasted a little more than an hour. The lesson was from the fifteenth chapter of the First Epistle of St. Paul to the Corinthians. After that the choir sang: "Yea, though I walk through valley of the shadow of death." The first hymn, in which the congrega joined, had been a favorite with Mayor Gaynor. It was Dyke's "Lead, Kin Light." When the ritual was finished the choir sang "I Heard a Voice fr Heaven," and Bishop Greer pronounced the benediction. The recessional w "Nearer, My God, to Thee," another hymn of which Mayor Gaynor was fo and this brought service to a close. mean; while another medicine of still more interest to the student of Revelation was the Phrygian powder, made in part from a peculiar kind of stone pressed into tabloids, afterward powdered and mixed with some unguent to be rubbed on the eye as a cure for the various diseases which afflict the optics in Eastern countries. The world-famous Galen speaks of both of these remedies in his pharmacopœia.

On this great hill under whose base the railway now runs once stood the proud and wealthy city of Laodicea. Its banks, its woolen factories, its medical schools, its impregnable fortifications, its garrisons of soldiers were famous in all the region round about. The noted men of the world visited it. Its products were sought for in the bazaars of all the nations. It was "rich and increased with goods and had need of nothing."

But what do we see to-day? It is the most desolate and God-forsaken of all the Seven Cities. The barren, utterly deserted hill, once so proud and populous, rises above the mean little Turkish village of Eski Hissar, and contains not a single inhabitant. No wandering shepherd even, so far as we saw, pastures his flocks among the ruins; no living creature picks a scanty subsistence from between the rocks which strew the ground so thickly that scarcely a blade of grass can grow.

At least this was the impression that we received when, late on the day of our arrival at the ruins, we picked our way over the historic blocks of marble and granite, and tried to reproduce in our imagination the ancient glories of Laodicea which have forever passed away. Its former greatness, however, is shown by its ruins. They cover hundreds of acres, and though they have been quarried for a thousand years by the villagers round about who have built their walls, their houses and their pigstys from the marbles of the ancient city, yet there is good building material enough left to erect another city to-day on the site of the ancient metropolis.

Here are the ruins of a mighty temple. Some of its stones I measured and found them to be fou feet long and three feet thick. Here, too, are th remains of a splendid aqueduct which brough water from a hill miles away through a valle which lies between the Hill of Fountains and Laod cea, and then carried the water, by a siphon syste which would do credit to any modern hydrauli engineer, to the top of a large stone tower, part which is still standing with the pipes yet visibl which tell of ancient Laodicea's splendid wate works. But this aqueduct also tells of Laodicea' weakness, for all the water had to be brought fro a distance.

But what impressed me most were the vast thea ters and the stadium, for they seemed to tell mor of the character of the people than any of the othe ruins. Two theaters are even now in a very fai state of preservation. Many of the great ston seats are still in place. Each one is roofless lik most ancient theaters, and is built in a natura

UTHERANS IN WORLD-CONFERENCE

FROM A CHRISTIAN HERALD CORRESPONDENT AT THE NUREMBERG CONVENTION

PROFESSOR LUDWIG IHMELS

THE fourteenth Convention of the General Conference of the Evangelical Lutheran Church was held during the second week of September in the city of Nuremberg, Germany. This city was the home of such gifted men as Hans Sachs, Albrecht Durer and Peter Vischer. Nuremberg was a leader in the Reformation period, and was the first to sign the protest to the decree passed at the Council of Spires in 1529, and also the first to sign the epoch-making Augsburg Confession a year later. In history, in industry and a wholesome church life, it is the foremost city of South Germany.

The purpose of the conference is to maintain and propagate the historic faith of the church in constructive theology and church life; to bring into close relations the church in the various countries; to discuss methods of practical congregational and institutional work, polity and administration. The attendance was made up of church officials, pastors and laymen and women from Germany, Sweden, Denmark, Finland, Russia, France, Austria, Holland and the United States. Interest centered chiefly in three phases of church life: the confession, the special problems confronting the church in this generation, and an exposition of methods and results. Professor Theodore Zahn of Erlangen University presented the first subject and gave the keynote of the conference in a paper on "Why Must We Hold Fast to the Confession?" With characteristic German thoroughness he reviewed the latest utterances on theological questions and made an impressive plea for a retention of the simple faith of the apostles. He expressed the conviction that the times, especially, and the immediate problems of the church demanded "a Christianity, not a religion for a hermit, not an academic opinion but a community-building and constructive religion, which develops itself from the Gospel through which all men may expect the grace of God in Christ." His summary was brief: "Jesus the Christ—this is the simple and ever-returning short confessional statement of the Evangelical Christian faith. The resurrection of Christ did not only precede the apostolic preaching in time, but was its foundation."

Lively discussion was awakened by the presentation of the subjects which inquired into the reasons why the church had not benefited more from the newly-awakened interest in religion, and what might be done to make her more effective. The genuine religious character of many alleged religious movements was doubted. The attempt of many thinkers to disregard sin, and the insistence by the church that sin and salvation are cardinal factors in any religion, create a gap. The church would have to eliminate the very essentials of the faith if it were to meet the demands of the cultured eclectics. In the case of genuine religious movements outside of the church, the institution was not held without blame for the situation. However, there was no pessimism because the church was surrounded by perplexing problems, and easily the best hated institution in the world."

Careful instruction of the youth in preparation for confirmation, faithfulness in pastoral service, and the preaching of solid doctrine, without letting the dogmatics become prominent, were the suggestions made. The emphasizing of the interests of this life by numerous writers is probably a result in part of the church's one-sided emphasis of the life in the other world. If this is true, the church can easily find the corrective. The numberless inner mission, that is, social service, institutions in Germany and the Scandinavian countries have given concrete testimony to the evangelical character of the church. This work is probably the most convincing argument against the enemies of the church. A leading German Social Democrat said of the late Pastor von Bodelschwingh, the most conspicuous inner mission worker of this generation, "No one has helped our work so much as Bodelschwingh and his deeds of love." This work is everywhere on the increase. The city missions of the foremost Scandinavian cities, Copenhagen, Stockholm, and Christiania, are voluntary organizations of the state church and are models of Christian enterprise.

Foreign mission work was also brought before the conference. Special attention was given to the problems in the Mohammedan countries. It was generally agreed that Islam, on the whole, was losing ground by the incoming of Christianity and the Western ideas of law and government. A brief survey of the foreign mission operations of the church since 1705, when Ziegenbalg and Plutschau were sent out from Halle to India as the first Protestant missionaries, revealed a work of great significance.

THE INTERIOR OF THE LORENZKIRCHE, NUREMBERG

At the evening session, when greetings were brought from the various countries, the international character of the conference was especially evident. This makes the church an important factor in bringing about eventual universal peace by arbitration, and the hope was expressed that the collects for peace would be used frequently and that, by sermons and addresses, pastors might help to increase international goodwill; also that systematic steps might be taken to preach peace, in such a manner, however, as to avoid even the appearance of politics.

An address by Baron von Pechmann of Munich, a prominent jurist, banker and churchman in South Germany, on "More Lay Service in the Church" was not only in itself a valuable contribution to the program, but also significant of increasing lay activity in many quarters. Favorable reference was made to the laymen's movement in America.

Separation of church and state came out in discussion. While the sentiment prevailed that the church would benefit by such a separation, no one was inclined to plead for immediate action. The proper instruction of the children in religion is a matter of deep concern. Both in this particular, and in the existence of so many church bodies and sects in America, the European finds problems about as serious as the unfavorable conditions present in the state church. However, it is one of the indirect purposes of the conference to train and accustom the clergy and laymen to work together in conventions and enterprises, independent of civil government, so that they will not be unaccustomed to it in the event of a separation. The question is discussed less in the Scandinavian countries than in Germany.

BISHOP VON SCHEELE

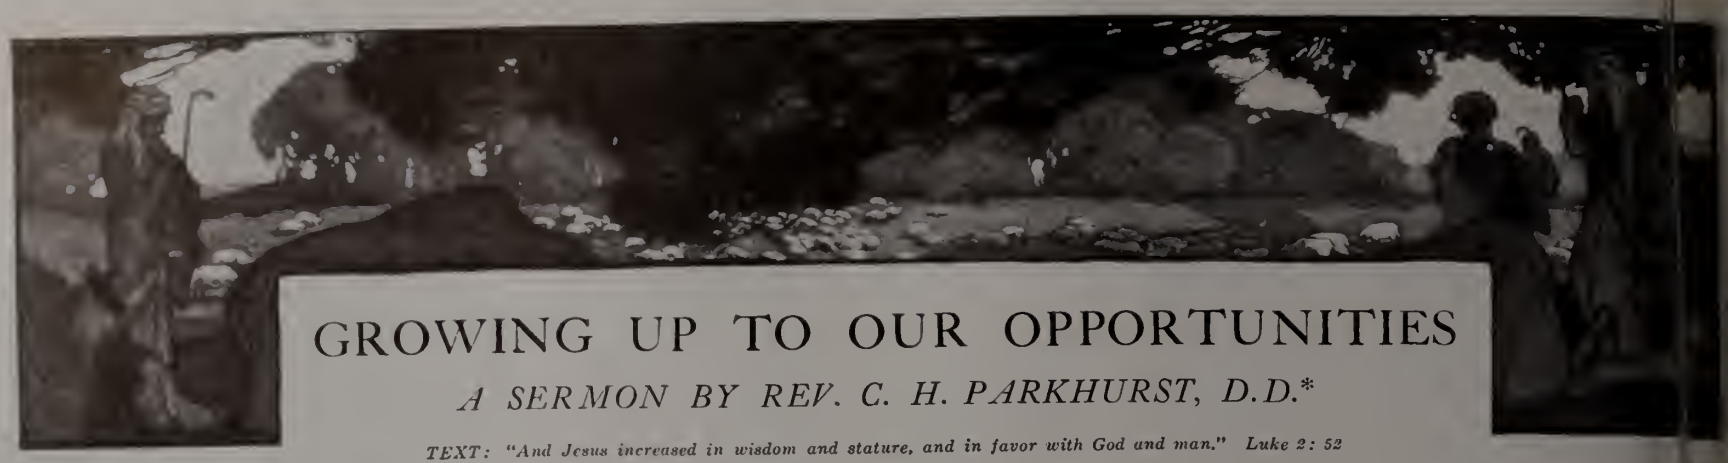
There was a thorough survey of activities and movements among the young people. In the effort to reach the youth of Germany successfully, there is a multitude of societies and leagues. The Young People's League there is organized and conducted very much in the same manner as the Luther League of America. The importance of the church's interest in student life at the higher institutions of learning was emphasized. The special conferences for students held annually are productive of much good. Foreign missions and social work, as well as the discussion of personal religious problems, are the chief features of these conferences. Sweden has also a series of conferences for young people who are not students. The most significant enterprises are the Crusaders' movement in Sweden and the university pastorates established by the Lutheran Church in America. The former is a movement which calls out more than one hundred students each during vacation to travel through the country and villages especially, mingle freely with the people, discuss religious subjects, distribute literature and address meetings. They usually go in pairs. In all their work, loyalty to the church is the watchword. Their slogan is "The People of Sweden a People of God." One of the bishops has written a stirring hymn which has contributed to the success of this unique movement.

In America the General Council felt the need of following the students of her faith to the colleges and universities and recently established three pastorates. One comprises Columbia, Harvard, Yale, Cornell and Syracuse; a second, the University of Wisconsin; and the third, the University of Minnesota. In addition to this, all pastors of churches in college towns are urged to make pastoral activity among the students a special branch of their work. The reception of this new work, both by the university authorities and the students, has been very highly encouraging. The work will be continued and extended, it is hoped, within the near future.

Professor Ludwig Ihmels and Bishop von Scheele, president and vice-president respectively of the General Conference in the present convention, are continued in these offices for the coming biennium. These able scholars were the leaders of this year's conferences. The former is professor of dogmatics in Leipsic University; the latter is Bishop of Gotland, the largest of the Swedish islands in the Baltic Sea, and was for forty-seven years a member of the Swedish House of Parliament.

The date and place of the next convention have not yet been determined, but the year 1917, marking the four hundredth anniversary of the beginning of Protestantism has been decided upon. The conference will, in all probability, be held again in Germany.

(Rev.) Howard R. Gold,
Pastor, University of Wisconsin.



GROWING UP TO OUR OPPORTUNITIES

*A SERMON BY REV. C. H. PARKHURST, D.D.

TEXT: "And Jesus increased in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man." Luke 2: 52

AGAIN we come back to Jesus—in this instance to the boy Jesus—as the model upon which to frame our character and life. A model is not in itself creative. Fingerboards are not a means of transportation, but if they are authoritatively placed and correctly printed and painted, they afford to the traveler that which is in a preliminary way essential, a knowledge of the direction in which he is to go. A definite plan, or at least a distinct purpose, goes far toward its own accomplishment.

The basal thought set forth in our text is that of growth. Jesus grew; grew in every way, inwardly and outwardly, in relations human and also divine. One advantage that he had over us was that he could give his attention to growth without having it distracted by the interference of sin. He had no wickedness of which to repent. His heart never ceased to be clean. There were no leaves, badly written upon, that had to be turned over. His whole thought could be devoted to work and to growing to the size of his work.

Cleanness Only Preliminary

But in mere cleanliness, however important it be, there is nothing constructive. It is a refined form of absence and emptiness. You insist that the page upon which you write shall be white and altogether free from blemish. But that whiteness, however essential to the uses to which you plan to put it, carries with it no meaning, except that it is thereby qualified to receive the written meaning that you propose to pencil or to print upon it. We will not underestimate the cleanliness of the page, but will be careful to estimate its value only with a regard for the uses which it is thereby fitted to subserve.

If one were to visit this planet from another realm of existence where there is no such thing as sin, and were to listen to our prayers and to the admonitions and exhortations expressed from the pulpit, such a one would be inclined to the belief that with us Christianity consisted substantially in getting over being bad; not in putting beautiful writing on a white page, but only in erasing the blots that prevent it from being a white page, as the same visitor from another sphere, if he limited his attentions to Blackwell's Island, would conclude that human life consisted in being criminal, blind, poor and insane.

This need not be interpreted as an underestimate of the significance of sin or of the importance or even the difficulty of becoming rid of it and cleaned from its stains. Our only contention is that recovery from depravity should be regarded by us not as the positive purpose for which life exists, but only as a negative preliminary to anything really deserving to be called life.

In our physical relations we never consider sickness to be life's normal condition. There are certainly chronic invalids, men and women, that are born invalids, live invalids, and die invalids. But as a rule if a person falls ill it is with no expectation of employing the remainder of his days getting well. To the general mind, physical life never is thought of as consisting in a struggle after health. It is not felt to be life altogether except as it is in a condition of health. Health is something which is presupposed. It is assumed as fundamental.

But in our moral and religious relations the situation appears to be conceived quite differently. If we can judge of men's ideas by the outward disclosures which they make of them, we should say that to be a Christian consists substantially in recovery from moral infirmity; that to become ethically fine is the supreme purpose of life, and that as we have presumably anywhere from fifty to a hundred years in which to accomplish it, we need be in no urgent haste, and should be satisfied if, between one year's end and the next year's end, we exhibit any of the feeblest evidences of progress.

Which plainly means that, when it is a matter of character, life that is truly sick does not involve the possession of health but only the pursuit after health. Which is clearly not the view taken by a man who is physically invalided, while lying in the hospital in impatient haste to recover in order that he may again be up and about and be in condition to achieve the true purposes of existence.

If it is true of physical unsoundness, still more does it hold of personal and moral unsoundness, that it infects the entire man and carries somewhat of its debility and taint into all his achievements. Only a perfectly good man can do a perfectly good work. Which means that character is basal and is all that can guarantee inward acquisitions of wisdom and power, as in architecture the masonry at the bottom is the only means of insuring the stability of what is placed upon it.

To be good is then not the purpose of life; it is only the preliminary to the attainment of its purpose, which is to grow large and strong as means of doing large and strong work. So that, having put the other matter in its proper relation, the more commanding question turns on the matter of growth and the means of promoting it, assured that the proportions to which we personally attain will be the exact measure of what we can do and the value of what we can do.

Growth is a process wherein a living object, of whatever kind, by means of its vitality is able to assimilate and make part of itself the nutriment that is supplied to it. Growth is regularly administered on that principle. It is the biological law. No one questions it when the matter under consideration is a vegetable body or an animal body or even the human mind.

It is only when it has to do with the uppermost sphere of our nature, what we call the man proper, the soul, the personality, that region within that permits us sometimes to speak of his power, of the royalty of his influence, etc.—it is only then that we seem quite to forget that law or at any rate to do anything toward its fulfilment. The consequence of which is that many people go through life possessing nothing but what they have physically inherited from their parents along with some little intellectual baggage that they have gathered up in the schoolroom—which is sufficient, to be sure, to enable them to exist comfortably, to meet their bills, pay their taxes, live reputably, and die respectably and becomingly, but without becoming a force in the community or an asset in the treasury of their times.

Spiritual Development

It is not the fault of the way in which they are made, of the possibilities with which their natures are originally planted. It is not the fault of an unwatered flower that it does not blossom, nor of an underfed boy that he does not develop into normal adult stature. Likewise of the soul, that organ of our being through which there are designed to go forth radiations of personal light calculated to make the world brighter, emanations of personal force fitted to put its stamp upon contemporary times and contemporary people, currents of personal vitality qualified to infect with fuller life those that stand in the range of such a soul's influence. All such capability comes from nourishment, from what has been offered to the soul from outside and which the soul has taken hold of, fed upon, assimilated and organically adopted into itself. Something cannot be expected from nothing any more at the higher level of our living than at the lower.

And the supply for that purpose is various and ample. There is no more need of our living a starved and wizened personal life and having a soul so contracted as to be discriminated from stomach and brain only by the expedient of a stimulated imagination, than there is of having a body that is composed only of cartilage and cuticle.

A sample of the nutriment germane to this species of growth is indicated in what Christ incidentally remarked to his disciples when they came back to the well of Samaria on their return from the city whither they had gone to buy bread and prayed him, saying, "Master, eat." In reply to which he said, "I have bread to eat that ye know not of; my bread is to do the will of Him that sent me." That is my sustenance, he said. That is what I live on and grow upon. That is the secret of my strength, my wisdom, my enlargement, my progre int larger and larger areas of influence and eff

Indispensable Elements

Such discipline becomes an ingredient of wer for in personal matters as in mechanical, soli y i a prime essential to the successful exerc o power. A lever long enough would pry the ar out of its orbit provided only you could have f crum so weighty and heavily ballasted that it b not flinch when the strain came. One of th rst things told us about Jesus is that he was sub t his Father and mother. He began to be the i exi ble Son of God by learning the lesson of obe ne to Joseph and Mary. What began at Nazar continued here at Jacob's well where he said, t i my bread to do the will of Him who sent me.'

That is exactly what the spirit of obedience e by which we mean the bracing of perso it against superior and righteous authority. F y thing in nature moves and acts with effect bec it is held under a reign of law. Everything o s. Its obedience is an unconscious obedience, b it obeys. It has an ordnance of the Almighty to ck it and buttress itself against. Nature is beau ul in its ongoings but its beauty is a stiff bea y. That is what guarantees its ongoings and the e curity and efficiency of its ongoings. The c Jesus was brought up. He was held under a cul of requirement that solidified him on the ill side of his nature. And when he had grown up had passed from under parental discipline, he ld himself steadily under a higher discipline. at was what made his movements commanding nd massive, and not to be diverted from the orbi e was destined to traverse. That was what ga a push to his words and momentum to everything at he did.

But it did more than that. Obedience alw does. Submission to authority, provided it be outward conformity but inward compliance, this singular property, that it serves as a chan of conveyance through which the spirit of the which is obeyed, or the spirit of the pers authority who is obeyed, is made over to us and comes within us a possession. It becomes means of a kind of constant rebirth into the qu ties, the personal wealth and power, of that u which or upon whom we obediently fasten; like bee which becomes laden with the sweetness of flower to which it clings; or—to use an illustra closer to our thought—like the face of Moses wh became bright from having looked up in chaste reverence into the face of God. That is simply law of nature translated into the realm of sup nature. That is mystery, but it is fact. We

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR

BY REV. J. H. JOWETT, D.D.

SUNDAY, October 12. Romans 15: 1-7. "The God of patience." God is so patient as to be "slow to wrath." He is so patient that he can wait "in order to be gracious." He tarries with Mr. Feeblemind and Mr. Ready-to-halt, and he is tender with them in all their fearfulness. He lingers patiently with the slowest and dullest pupil in his chool, and "he leads on softly." He graciously waits the unfolding of ur powers, and he lets in the light as our eyes are able to bear it. "I ave many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now": and he atiently waits until the hand is big enough to grasp the purposed gift.

And this "God of patience" is the fountain of our patience. "All my prings are in thee," and the spring of human patience is found in the eart of God. If any man lack patience let him ask of God that giveth to ll men liberally. Let us ask him for a healthy sense of proportion that ve may see things in a true and large perspective. Let us ask him for he gift of a sanctified imagination that we may see the finished city even vhile the foundations are just being laid. And let us ask him for that ove of completeness from which will come the patience that will wait for inished work.

MONDAY, October 13. Numbers 13: 1-3, 25-33. "And there we saw the giants!" "And Caleb said, Let us go up at once and possess it." Caleb was not to be daunted by giants. Difficulties were not repulsions but invitations. He felt the allurement of a tiff task. He rose refreshed on hearing a threat, and when foes multiplied he "put on strength and victory like a robe." He was not stupefied by "the children of Anak": he was never more alert and hopeful than when they were on the field.

It is the Caleb in every company who "makes things hum." He takes the initiative in every chivalrous enterprise. He is the man who moves positive resolutions: he is never recorded as moving compromising amendments. He is the pioneer, ever in the van, always ready to cut new tracks, and thus to "prepare the way of the Lord."

In whose company am I to be found—among those who retreat from difficulty, or those who greet it with a cheer? Am I with Caleb's band, hearing the call of the heights, and eagerly responding to the clarion peal? Or am I with the cowards who count every task too costly if it threatens to bruise and scratch my skin?

TUESDAY, October 14. Numbers 14: 1-9. "Would God we had died in the land of Egypt!" Such was the cry of the coward. The morrow was filled with difficulty, and they forgot the witness of yesterday. There wero giants ahead, and they forgot God. They had gained no fine deposit of faith from the providences of the past. The mere rumor of a difficulty filled them with fright, and they longed for a captain who would lead them back to "the fleshpots of Egypt."

And are we any better than these murmuring hosts of olden days? Are we entitled to sit as critics and judges, or must we take our place by their side? Have we ever retreated when religion was becoming too costly? Have we ever betrayed our Lord because loyalty might mean sacrifice and the shedding of blood? Have we ever thought of desertion when giants were named? These are questions which test the faith and quality of the soul. Our very hearts stand revealed by our attitude to stupendous tasks. The purifying of New York and London, the evangelization of the world in this generation: how do these affect us? Do they quicken the pulse or do they slacken it? Do we loosen or tighten our purse-strings? Do we shrink from the sacrifice with the spirit of murmuring, or do we leap to it with a heart aflame with love for the Lord our God?

WEDNESDAY, October 15. Numbers 14: 26-32. "Doubtless ye shall not come into the land." Such was the fate of the murmurers. Their complaining unfitted them for inheritance. And that is ever the nemesis of the complaining spirit: murmuring wastes the powers of the soul and unfits it for promotion. Complaining is as destructive to spiritual power as rust is to steel. A murmur is an enemy and it does an enemy's work. It eats away the heart of our powers as the white ant eats away the pith of great trees.

When, therefore, the evil one can engender a spirit of complaint in the soul he can leave us alone. He knows that murmuring is as wasteful as consumption, and that it will render us incompetent for exploits. Murmurers are never heroes, for they are never serene and self-possessed. They never "take the kingdom of heaven by force" because they never "greet the unseen with a cheer." Their murmurings drag them backward: they are victims of retrospect rather than children of hope. So does murmuring disqualify us for inheritance.

THURSDAY, October 16. Ezekiel 20: 10-20. "Their heart went after their idols." Our affection lingers about our treasure. Our love follows the thing we value most. The thing we are most concerned about is our idol. It may be money. It may be fame. It may be the admiration of our fellows. It may be ease rather than duty, a quiet life rather than a chivalrous one. It may be Egypt rather than Canaan, Babylon rather than the new Jerusalem. What do we value most? That is our idol. And our heart goes after the idol. "Where the treasure is there will the heart be also."

And so life is determined by its sets of values. If we could see one another's value-lists we should be able to estimate the quality of our lives. We could spot the treasure and thus infer the character. But blessed be God! we can revise our values. By the grace of God we can put the first things first. We can tear usurping idols from their thrones, and we can set our minds on things that are above. The most momentous moment in life is when we sweep all minor sovereignties away, and have only one throne, and on that throne Him whose name is King of kings and Lord of lords.

FRIDAY, October 17. Daniel 9: 13-19. "We do not present our supplications before thee for our righteousness but for thy great mercies." That is the plea that brings the miracle of grace. If we go into God's holy presence to parade our merits the heavens will be as brass. But if we go to plead his mercies the heavens will distil blessings like the gentlest rain. The Pharisee made his prayer an exhibition of his deserts, and there was no response; the poor publican exhibited his needs, and heaven came down to meet and greet him.

It is only frivolity that can make a show before God. Even on the human plane it is only very thoughtless amateurs who can parade themselves before the great masters of their heart. But to go before the great white throne and "show off" our garments, to stand in the "burning bliss," before which angels veil their faces, and boast of our integrity, can only mean that we are spiritually benumbed and insensitive. The realm of grace is reached by the way of humility. Pride never "sits in heavenly places in Christ Jesus." If we claim a seat at His table we shall find there is none appointed. If we beg one we shall find it waiting for us.

SATURDAY, October 18. Joshua 14: 6-15. Caleb wholly followed the Lord his God, and long afterwards Hebron was given unto him for an inheritance. Fidelity to the Lord may not bring us material inheritance, but it will always bring us enrichment and enlargement of life. Fidelity always inherits the kingdom, and it surrounds itself with increasing spiritual possessions. Every act of obedience extends our sovereignty, every moral conquest adds to our sway. "Because thou hast been faithful over a few things I will make thee ruler over many things." And in the soul of the faithful that rulership is a constantly increasing dominion.

And thus, in the spiritual world we do not wait for our kingdom; it is continually coming to us. Every hour of homage to the Lord the landmarks are set further back, and we have "a goodly heritage." We gain our own crown by crowning him; when we are humble his gentleness makes us great. Even now we may sit with him on his throne, and share his power, and his joy, and his peace. "Blessed are the poor in spirit, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven."

t we yield to, everywhere and always, as surely ake Ontario fills with the overhanging waters ake Erie. The boy Jesus grew with the life of mother that he obeyed. The man Jesus grew n the life of the heavenly Father whom he yed. There is where we win our equipment. obedience does not get it. We have to look up h a steady eye that is full of surrender in order t we may see the high lights.

he principle is a universal one. If we yield to ighteous statute loyally, we win the meaning of nd are broadened to the reach of it. If we feed n a truth hungeringly we find the succulonce t is in it, and are nourished and made intellecly and morally fat by it. If a child stands ard his parents in an attitude abidingly and ectionately filial, he grows toward their staturo ough the conveyance to him of their containings reby made over to him. The close presence of human greatness works in us reproducingly when we reverently await the touch of its baptism. And still highor on the scale of discipline, if we draw nigh to God he will draw nigh to us and be as much to us in the way of inward replenishment, onlargement and power, as we are close to him in the way of love and loyalty. As said before, if we want power we can have it; the world is set as full of conveyance and splendid inspirations as our streets are set full of lights and the firmament full of stars.

Only one word more. It is not optional with us to grow or not to grow to the measure of our opportunities. For there is work for us. There is large work for us and we are here to do it, and we cannot do it beyond the scope of our competencies. To be environed with the opportunity of growth in grace, wisdom, influence and power and then to fool with that opportunity is sin. Neglect is wickedness. You remember what became of the man who kept his opportunities wrapped in a napkin.

And this pertains to all classes; men and women; rich and poor; brilliant and ordinary; and that is why so many people are ordinary: because they think only about filling their stomachs with bread, covering their backs with velvet and broadcloth, filling their pockets with gold, and keeping their soul so underfed that they are not distinctly conscious of possessing one: ambling through life with no tremendous sense of what life means and no keener appreciation of its opportunities of acquiring character and power, and exercising character and power, than does a dumb beast trotting through the halls of a university grasp the enormous significance of what the institution imparts.

May the Lord bless to us, man, woman and child, Christian and un-Christian, pew and pulpit, the stern but superb truth that has been this morning delivered to us.

THE SULZER IMPEACHMENT TRIAL

WILLIAM SULZER, the first governor of New York State to be impeached, faced trial on September 18 at the bar of the special court of impeachment. This court, over which Chief Justice Edgar M. Cullen of the Court of Appeals of New York presides, is composed of the judges of the Court of Appeals and the Senate of New York State.

At its brief opening session the High Court of Impeachment busied itself with purely preliminary matters. It organized as a court. Its members took an oath to try and determine truly and on the evidence alone the charges presented against the governor. It appointed a committee to formulate rules to govern its proceedings. Then it adjourned until ten A.M. the following day. The opening session lasted less than an hour, and fully half of that time was occupied in swearing in the members.

On the following morning the court dealt the first blow to the defense by refusing to entertain challenges interposed on behalf of Mr. Sulzer against several members of the Senate. The challenges were made on the ground of bias. Senator Wagner, it was declared, was an interested party, inasmuch as the removal from office of Mr. Sulzer would make Lieutenant Governor Martin H. Glynn governor, whereupon Mr. Wagner, as temporary president of the Senate, automatically would become lieutenant governor. Three other Senators were challenged on the ground that they were members of the Frawley committee, and as such had subscribed to a report virtually pronouncing Mr. Sulzer guilty of the charges he is now called upon to answer before the High Court of Impeachment. When the argument on the motion to di the four Senators had been concluded, Chief Justice Cullen of the C Appeals, as president of the High Court of Impeachment, made his i felt in a manner to clinch the conviction that he would be the dominar in this trial. An adjournment was made until the following Monday.

THE PIECE IN THE PAPER

BY HERVEY SPENCE

A Story Complete in This Issue

IT TOLD all about it in the paper. Mr. Valtwo read it out loud. I heard him. He read it just after supper when I was taking the things off the supper table. 'Twas about a man who was so lonesome he just couldn't stand it any longer, so he tried to kill himself. He almost did it, too, but some people found him and took him to a hospital. The piece told about the note he wrote, too—about him having no one in the world who cared whether he lived or died. The people found the note in his pocket.

Mrs. Valtwo was undressing baby Pauline for bed, and she laughed and hugged the baby up tight, and said she didn't believe it, because every one had some one to love them. Marybelle was playing with her paper dolls—the ones that are like really truly ladies—and she went over and climbed on her father's lap. He hugged her close to him, and kissed her right where her pretty curls part over her forehead, and said how glad he was that he had a little girl to love him. Then he held her in his arms and rocked her and looked into the fire; and Mrs. Valtwo rocked Pauline and sang "Go to sleep, my baby." They all had each other to love. But that poor man that the paper told about!

I'm awful lonesome, too—and no one loves me, either. As I cleared off the table I kept looking at Marybelle in her father's lap, and I kept thinking of the poor man in the hospital, and the lump in my throat kept getting bigger and bigger and hurt like anything. My eyes smarted and got all blurry. I was so sorry for that man and me! Before I knew what had happened, smash! went two plates down on the floor!

Mrs. Valtwo quit singing. Even with the blur before my eyes, I could see the little tight look that always comes around her mouth when I make her mad. She never does like me, but sometimes she just can't bear me; then her voice gets—gets gritty. It makes me shiver all up and down my backbone, as I do when I'm afraid. I shivered as I stooped to pick up the broken plates. There were so many pieces, and my hands are pretty small, and my eyes kept being so blurry that I cut my fingers on the broken edges of the china—and it just seemed as if I hurt all over me—inside and out!

I don't belong in the Valtwo home. I don't belong anywhere. I'm just an orphan. The Orphan's Home and Valtwo's are the only places I've ever lived. When I lived at the Home I helped take care of the children smaller than I am. About a year ago Mrs. Valtwo came and got me. She said she'd give me my keep and clothes and send me to school if I'd help take care of her baby; so the matron let me go.

School started a long time ago, but I didn't. Mrs. Valtwo says I'm so slow that I never get the baby's clothes and the dishes washed; but I could get those things done if I didn't have to peel vegetables, and scrub the porches, and clean the grates. I'm pretty little, too. Minding the baby takes a good deal of time. But the work's nothing. I like to see how white I can wash baby Pauline's things, and how nice I can do the dishes, and how thin I can peel the potatoes, and all that. But to see fathers kiss their little girls, and call them pretty-sweet names, and just love them like anything—that's what makes me lonesome. I could love a father awful hard!

Inside of me something tells just exactly how that man felt, that the piece in the paper told about! Maybe he saw some little girl run and skip to meet her father, and maybe he saw how the father picked her up and hugged her tight, and then maybe he saw how the little girl kissed him and then laughed like a piano was inside her playing dance music. Haven't I seen Marybelle run to meet her father, and hasn't my heart just jumped up close to my throat, and then—and then dropped back down again? It sure does hurt when your heart d ps back that way, just as if there isn't quite room f r it.

After I got the dishes washed, I went to the n ing-room door and listened. Yes, they had gone the living-room. I wanted the paper with that p in it about the man who didn't have any one to e him. I found the paper by the grate on the f r, and took it back to the kitchen with me. Aft I looked a long time I found the piece. The man sick, the piece said, at St. Luke's Hospital.

St. Luke's Hospital! Why, that's not ! Wouldn't I like to go and do something for h ? Just wouldn't I! But what could a little girl e me do? If only I were pretty! A pretty little might just go to see him, and he'd be glad to e her soft curls, and pink cheeks, and blue eyes. y hair is as "straight as an Indian's." Mrs. Val o says, and she says my eyes are as big as an o eyes in my thin white face. No sick and lonely would want to look at that kind of little girl.

If only my hands were smooth like Marybell ! Then I might soothe him some by rubbing his ing head. I might sit beside him and hold his h . But my hands are red and rough. The other Mrs. Valtwo had on a pretty silk dress. I rub it just to see how nice it felt, and the rough pl on my hands pulled the threads until they came in loops. Mrs. Valtwo's face got awful red. she said: "Please keep your hands where they long, and that's not on my gown." Her v sounded gritty and made me feel like the cold w was blowing on my bare body. Then she sent m the basement to wash some of baby Pauline's cloth

I cut the piece out of the paper, and took it to with me, and put it under my pillow. I couldn't to sleep. The wheels on the street cars, turning corner sounded to me like some one groaning pain. A strong wind was blowing. The branch

A HEROINE OF THE CROSS

BY WILLARD PRICE

A MISSIONARY was describing most vividly the condition of the cannibals in New Zealand. One little girl, sitting well toward the front of the audience, was completely absorbed in the thrilling story. Her eyes were wide, and her face shone with appreciation or contorted with childish sympathy as the missionary went on to tell of the great need of these poor people for the influence of Christianity. The little auditor was Clementina Rowe, who afterwards became Mrs. Adoniram Butler.

It was more than eighty years ago. And now word comes from New Center, Mass., that "Mother Butler," at the age of ninety-three, has passed on. She leaves behind her a series of achievements in foreign mission fields unexcelled by any other woman.

Mr. and Mrs. Butler were the first missionaries sent to India by the Board of Foreign Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church. When they went to India almost sixty years ago there was not a native Methodist in India. Now there are nearly 200,000!

A little home school was started by Mrs. Butler. She visited the women of the community and invited their daughters to her school. At first the Hindu women received her with scant courtesy. "What do you want?" one mother demanded.

"I want your little girls and boys," replied the missionary, "to train them to be good."

"Are you married?"

"Yes."

"Then," said the cautious woman, "what do you want of my children?"

But she soon gained their confidence, as she has ever won the hearts of all who have come within the influence of her radiant, loving personality.

The terrible Sepoy Rebellion broke out a few weeks after the missionaries had established themselves in their home at Bareilly. Then came flight to the mountains and years of wandering through Indian jungles and tiger-infested forests as homeless and hunted fugitives.

During the mutiny, a daughter, Julia, joined the family. She was named "The Mutiny Baby."

In all these journeyings many, many nights were spent in a "house and home" that consisted of a little tent eight feet square. At four or five o'clock in the afternoon the pilgrims would choose a camping-place. One night the camp was set in a lonely valley beside a mountain stream. A goat, which had been brought along to serve the little "Mutiny Baby," was left fastened as usual to the peg at the tent door. During the night the fire which had been burning in front of the tent unfortunately went out. The sleepers were suddenly startled into wakefulness by a roar and a yell of agony, and, jerking open the tent door, they found that the wild beasts had carried off the poor goat bodily and were already out of sight with it!

The entire cost of fitting up the first Methodist church in India was $4.36. An old sheephouse at Bareilly Tal was converted into a chapel. A few tools and nails and some whitewash effected the transformation. Dr. Butler himself wielded the whitewash brush. When the first Sunday congregation gathered, every one was delighted. The natives came in warily and went about quizzically touching the white walls with their fingers, smiling and nodding to each other. Every one agreed that it looked "almost like a church."

After a few months of vigorous work, the "Sheephouse Chapel" gave place to a new chapel costing $2,500. Then the work spread rapidly. One new mission followed another in succession. Dr. Butler became district superintendent and went up and down the valley of the Ganges, establishing new stations, which forged their way into success under his influence.

THE "SHEEPHOUSE CHAPEL"

BAREILLY THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, ONE OF THE HUNDREDS OF SPLENDID CHRISTIAN INSTITUTIONS WHICH NOW DOT INDIA

"Perhaps one of the most remarkable experiences in the life of Mrs. Butler took place when, soon after the fall of Delhi, she sat with Dr. Butler upon the famous crystal throne in the audience chamber of the great Moguls and witnessed the trial of Mohammed Suraj-oo-deen Shah Gezee, Emperor of Delhi, the last of the Moguls. The cruel tyrant was there sentenced to banishment in Burma.

"While sitting on that throne Dr. Butler took out paper and pencil and wrote the notable appeal called 'The Throne of the Great Mogul.' In it he pleaded for the support of the orphans who would be left as a result of all these months of warfare. 'If you take them, you will think of them,' he wrote. 'If you pay for them, you will pray for them.' A hearty response was made to this appeal."

Then came poor health to handicap his efforts, and in 1865 he and his wife returned to America. But "Mother Butler" was not ready for even so well earned a rest. She at once set out to enlist the interest of other American women in foreign missions. To her is due in large measure the credit for the splendidly efficient Women's Foreign Missionary Society of her church. Later she and her husband returned to work in India, but not before they had left the indelible stamp of their personalities on the opposite side of the world by the establishment of Methodist missionary work in Mexico.

In 1906 Mrs. Butler again visited her beloved India, this time to attend the India Jubilee. One hundred and fifty thousand native Christians hailed her as the "Empress of Indian Missions." How different this reception was from the first! When the sweet-faced old lady entered the mammoth tent at the opening service of the jubilee, the great company sprang to its feet and burst into the triumphant native hymn, "Jai Prabu Yesu!" (Victory to Jesus!)

"This is wonderful!" whispered Dr. S. Earl Taylor, who was beside Mrs. Butler, "The Mother of Missions."

Her eyes shone with tears as she whispered back: "To you it is wonderful. To me it is a miracle. I cannot help thinking of the day, fifty years ago, when Dr. Butler and I first landed in Calcutta. Everything we saw and heard seemed to tell us of darkness and paganism. We found that day the multitudes tripping through the streets after the image of the heathen goddess of war, shouting 'Victory to Kali!' And to think that now, only fifty years later, there are so many hundreds of thousands in India whose hearts sing 'Victory to Jesus!' It is one of God's miracles!"

Hundreds of girls who could trace their Christian training back to the work which this woman had started so long ago, saluted her and pressed her hands to their lips. A great chorus of them sang to her a hymn written by one of the missionaries especially for this occasion.

In writing of this occasion, Bishop Oldham said: "The impression was indescribable, and the look of glowing gratification on Mother Butler's face was like a vision of those who stand transfigured before the eternal glory."

"THE MOTHER OF MISSIONS"

THE DREAM OF THE BOY ACROSS THE SEA

THE two-color reproduction which forms this week's cover of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD was made from a photograph taken by Mr. Rudolf Eickemeyer, of Seven Oaks, Yonkers, N. Y. Mr. Eickemeyer said, in talking of this picture: "Those in search of the quaint and picturesque in the rural life of America find modern methods improving and spreading so rapidly that the continual strife to keep at the head they are forced every year to go farther and farther afield to find interesting subjects for the camera. In this mad rush for the new there is an almost total lack of veneration for the old, and relics are lost and destroyed and customs disappear without leaving a reliable record behind. Patriotic societies are gradually awakening us to the fact that important relics of our struggles during the Indian, the Revolutionary and the Mexican Wars have been destroyed. It is largely due to these historical societies and to the enthusiasm of private collectors that public sentiment has been aroused concerning these things and the result that many historical records and relics are now being preserved for the benefit of future generations.

"The South for years was rich hunting ground for the lover of the picturesque, but changes both numerous and rapid have occurred there in recent years. The old negro types of the cotton fields are no more. The log cabins, the pine groves, even the stately plantation mansions, recalling the flowery days 'befo' de wah,' are passing away. Fortunately for those who enjoy seeing life as it is lived where there is a real attachment to the soil, the French section of Canada is left us. Here along the lower St. Lawrence River one may find conditions exactly as they were a century ago. Here the 'one-horse shay,' the pride of colonial days, is making its last stand. In the fields women may be seen cutting grain with sickles, than which there is no implement more primitive. The people of the hamlets live and work as did their great-grandparents. Picture to yourself a place where spinning is still an everyday task! I have sat in these simple homes watching deft fingers at the spinning wheels and listening to their whirring sound that is like the hum of bees.

"It was in one of these old interiors that I photographed Grand'mère Trudeau. She sits looking from her cabin across the river, thinking of a son at sea."

Her dim eyes gaze through the window wide,
O'er the broad St. Lawrence foam,
And her sad thoughts bide with the wind and tide,
Near the boy who is far from home.
And the tiny boat that he loved to sail
Lies close to her wrinkled hand;
And her pleadings rise to the angry skies—
That her son may come safe to land.

For a mother's heart is an anguished heart,
When the billows are rough and white;
When the north winds start like a poisoned dart,
And the clouds have shut out the light,
And she prays to the Lord of the stormy sea
That safe in His gentle hand
He will bring her son—her dearest one—
To the safe untroubled land.

The Distinguishing Mark

"HIS name shall be in their foreheads." In some way or other, at that time, the fact that one belongs to Jesus will be clearly marked on his countenance. But there are marks even now that tell the story. There ought to be something about the life and character of every follower of Christ which distinguishes him from those who are not. It was said of the persecutors of Peter and John that "they took knowledge of them that they had been with Jesus." Do people get that knowledge who observe your life? Of course they know it now, because you say so. But suppose you were dumb? Would they know it then?

A Christian ought to be known by his kindness. Other people are kind, but there is some distinctive mark about the kindness of Christianity. Christians are kind, not for the sake of a reward, here or hereafter, but because they really care for the other person. The real Christian prefers others' happiness to his own, and even if he does not say so, there is something in his service that reminds one of Jesus, makes one feel that he is doing the service in memory of Christ and for love of him.

A Christian must be forgiving. That is a part of kindness, and particularly a part of Christian kindness. One of Jesus' sternest parables was about the servant who, after having been forgiven an enormous debt, went from his master's presence and demanded full payment of a trifling debt owed him by an indigent fellow servant. Every Christian has been forgiven much. If he is a real Christian, he will forgive much.

A Christian must be self-sacrificing. Jesus had very much to say about self-denial. Riches are dangerous to Christian individuals, to Christian churches and organizations. The real Christian, no matter how great his possessions or his income, keeps on giving and serving till he feels the sacrifice.

A Christian must be humble. That is almost the chief distinguishing mark in the New Testament picture of a Christian. He has given up his own way once for all. Now he wants God to have his way, and his neighbor to have his, unless it clashes with what he believes to be the way of God. He may be bold in courage, as Peter and John were, but he is not proud.

The Christian is found among other Christians. He loves the brethren. This is one of the chief ways in which he himself knows that he has "passed from death unto life." He is faithful to the house of God. He is truly worshipful, reverent, recognizing God in all the affairs and details of life.

A Christian ought to be happy. Joy is in his heart, for he knows that God loves him, has pardoned him, will keep and save him.

All this, even if we were dumb. But we have our tongues. Let us add then to these silent marks the glad testimony of our mouths, for "with the heart man believeth unto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation." The name of Jesus is being written on our foreheads; it should be, every day, upon our lips.

Lastly, the Christian has a passion for souls. Loving God intensely and loving others earnestly, he wants to win by his life and by his lips all whom he can reach to the love and the salvation of the Christ whom he has found.

The World's Oldest University

THAT man has been a seeker after knowledge from time immemorial is now so well understood that the discovery among the ruins of Nippur, in ancient Babylonia, of tablets proving the existence of a college or temple of learning over 5,000 years ago causes little surprise among investigators in the Orient. This newly-found temple—which, it is thought, may have been the earliest institution for the exposition of the ancient liturgical system which in later years spread throughout Babylonia and Assyria and influenced the religious thought and forms and ceremonials of other lands—has been revealed in a series of tablets which were collected in three successive explorations. Professor S. H. Langdon of Oxford, England, a recognized authority on Assyriology, who investigated the collection for the University of Pennsylvania, has ascertained from the tablets that priests conducted this temple college as early as 3200 B.C., and that it existed about a thousand years. It was a great university, a center of learning and the first of its kind of which the world has any record. The professor believes that a great religious order existed at Nippur, and that the discoveries made and to be made will throw a flood of light on the origin of religious orders. When the tablets yield up their secrets, the inquiring minds of the present day will know more of the religious beliefs and ordinances of that far-off time, and we may be enabled to trace their influence on the creeds of those civilizations that were transformed at the beginning of the Christian era—especially the creeds of early Greece and Rome.

A Memorable Tribute

IT WAS no ordinary tribute which New York paid to Mayor Gaynor when hundreds of thousands assembled at his funeral on September 22. Scarcely in a generation has a demonstration so vast and impressive been witnessed in the metropolis. Popular as he was, few could have suspected that the late mayor had such a firm hold on the confidence and esteem of the people. All classes were represented in the mile-long line of mourners and in the patient, waiting multitudes, aggregating hundreds of thousands, who crowded sidewalk and curb. This great spectacle had a twofold meaning: it expressed the popular appreciation of Mayor Gaynor's personal character, and it had a patriotic and political purpose also. Always a lover of the common people, he had been their especial champion in the battles against bossism and corruption. That he was well equipped for such warfare by his intimate knowledge of the methods of boss rule and of the baseness of the average political machine, was no detriment to his reputation, nor did it lessen the esteem in which the people held him. That very knowledge stood him in good stead while fighting their battles. They understood the value of such equipment and they pinned their faith on the spare, stubborn man with his pugnacious ways and his ofttimes curt address, knowing that back of all his eccentricities were personal incorruptibility and fidelity to their interests. He was one of the few public men New York has ever known who were capable of coping with the politicians and of fighting them with their own weapons. He held liberal views concerning the rights of the common people and waxed tenacious in opposing any abridgment of those rights. This attitude he stoutly maintained in the face of criticism, and for every dissentient it stirred up, it won him a thousand adherents among the humble folk. His consideration extended to the toilers on the farm or in the factory, the school children, the helpless and the unfortunate. He was never ashamed of having sprung from the soil. And those for whom he worked the most and fought the hardest were not forgetful at the end.

A Strange Coincidence

THE announcement of the new story, "JESUS IS HERE!" by Pastor Ch[arles] Sheldon, has brought us a flood of lette[rs] readers eager with anticipation concerning [it], who are particularly interested in that pa[per] Pastor Sheldon's letter in which he refer[s to] inspiration that seemed to guide his pen. O[ur] ers will remember that passage: "I did [not] writing for two months and seemed driven [by] night to go on. As I look back upon that [time] sometimes have a strange feeling that s[ome] else is the author—and I sometimes fel[t] writing in my study late at night, as thou[gh] one else were in the room."

These lines recall the strange inspirat[ion] unusual circumstances attending the co[m]p and writing of the chapter on The Crucif[ixion] General Lew Wallace's Ben Hur. Gener[al] Wa lace is said to have told a friend that he w[rote] chapter all at one sitting, by candlelight [in] abandoned monastery, feeling sure that [no] stood beside him. In the morning, what [he] written seemed the work of a stranger. Ir[re]mental respects the two cases offer a paral[lel]. the other hand, many readers are intereste[d in] probable spiritual effect of such a sto[ry]. W quote the following received from a Phila[del]phia friend:

Dear Christian Herald:

On opening my paper this morning, almost the first [thing] which my eye lighted was the announcement of Pastor [Sheldon's] new story. That such a notice should appear in my [favorite] journal is to me almost a miracle, for long have I w[ondered] prayed that some way might be found to bring to the h[earts and] consciences of the people of this generation the great t[ruth that] Jesus is to come again, though "the day and the hou[r no man] knoweth." Nothing could be more pleasing to God [than] everywhere than a story on this transcendent theme [from] Sheldon, for I know that in his consecrated hands, and [with a] deep knowledge of spiritual things, the whole subjec[t will be] made luminous and convincing. I am impatient to r[ead] he has written, and shall promise you, within my ow[n circle] many very appreciative readers.

There is to-day in this land a great multitude of g[ood] and women who are looking forward hopefully, prayer[fully] confidently for the signs of His appearing. The c[hurch] needs him, and nothing save his personal presence wi[ll ac]plish those changes that must take place. If Pastor succeeds in strengthening the faith of the waiting C[hurch] in opening the eyes of the spiritually indifferent, and [in] ing the churches to a sense of the importance of this g[reat] beautiful article of the Christian faith, he will merit th[e love] of all. May God bless his effort and may he also b[less] CHRISTIAN HERALD which is to publish it to the world.

Slavery Under Our Flag

IT IS a new and startling revelation to the [A]can people to be told that slavery can exist [un]the Stars and Stripes. Yet that this is th[e fact] seems to be convincingly proved by the disc[losures] recently made by Dean Worcester, the ex-sec[retary] of the interior for the Philippines, and the c[umula]rative evidence submitted to our government [by] H. Phipps, auditor of the Philippine admi[nistra]tion. It is a relic of the old Spanish rule a[nd] which has till now been successfully con[cealed]. According to the statements presented, it is [a] tom long established and still prevailing in [many] parts of the islands for native families amo[unting] uncivilized tribes to sell their children. Pric[es] said to range from thirty to two hundred [dollars]. Peonage exists throughout the archipelag[o]. many natives of the poorer class are said [to be] held in bondage as domestic servants. The[ir chil]dren of such peons are regarded as slaves and [are dealt] with as property. Since the advent of Am[erican] rule these conditions are said to have been s[o skil]fully hidden that they were not even sus[pected] until recently. The whole subject is now [being] thoroughly investigated and official action w[ill be] taken to put an end to the traffic. Senator [Borah] of Idaho is preparing a measure to be submit[ted to] Congress with a view to putting an end fore[ver to] Filipino slavery.

Long Island Railroad Crash

TWO fast electric steel-car Long Island trains collided head-on at Third Avenue and Eighteenth Street, College Point, Long Island, on September 22. Three men in ge of the trains were killed, another is ex- d to die, and forty others were injured. The ent was caused by a mistake of the operator Whitestone Junction. The crash occurred at rve and the crew of neither train could see the till within one hundred yards of each other, approaching at the rate of eighty-five miles an . Only the presence on the train for Manhat- of a dozen policemen on their way to Mayor or's funeral prevented a number of fatalities. men from College Point chopped madly at the kage to extricate the men who were pinned r a mass of steel. They heard the voice of r, motorman on the train out from New York, ed under the wreckage of his cab, appealing to for help: "Hurry up, boys! I am still alive. le!" he pleaded. They tore away feverishly e cab that held him, as the motorman groaned begged them to hurry. Though they could their arms about his body, his rescuers could udge him. Every twist of the bars only added to his torture, he coolly and bravely urged on. His cries grew fainter fainter till they entirely ed in fifteen minutes, and when got him out at the end of hour they found him dead. lein, the engineer on the other , was killed instantly, as was luctor Boerckel on his way to Pennsylvania Terminal to out his train. It is the opin- of the railroad officers and of public that if the cars had been wood instead of steel, in- d of three precious lives sacri- l, there would have been forty more. The president of the l says that since the electrifica- of the road only steel cars e been purchased, and that 60 cent. of the 475 cars are of l, and that ninety more will be red next year. He declares this is the first death by wreck road has had in several years. roads will all have to adopt l cars for the better protection human life and for economic ons also. The poor fellow who e the wrong signal is under ar- on the charge of homicide. v fearful the responsibility of e charged with moral and reli- s watchtowers, and how hor- e the wreck when there is are to give the proper warning of danger. The het strongly refers to such failure.

t if the watchman see the sword come, and blow not the pet, and the people be not warned; if the sword come, and any person from among them, he is taken away in his ity; but his blood will I require at the watchman's hand. k. 33: 6.)

Brothers Lost Forty Years

R. F. C. WALDMAN of Sydney, Australia, who was stopping at a leading hotel in New k City on a world-girdling tour, sat down at the ner table and began his meal. A page passed ough the dining-room saying, "Call for Mr. ldman." He took the telegram, sure it was nt for him. The contents and initial revealed mistake. He followed the page out, however, find the Waldman it was meant for. The two ok hands, went a little into their history, and nd they were long-lost brothers. And the old fell into each other's arms and wept like chil- n. More than forty years ago they had left lin two orphan boys, and embarked in a sailing- sel to seek their fortunes. The ship was cked off the coast of Australia, and the crew passengers were forced to put off in the boats. brothers became separated and never saw each er again until their meeting at the hotel. A ling-vessel bound for England picked up the t with Samuel, the younger, in it, and he went k to Berlin, where he remained. Franz, the er brother, was in the boat that reached Aus- lia, where he remained. Each thought the other had been lost. This reunion suggests the one on the other side of the river when families long scattered will be gathered together again. Christ suggests the family idea in his description of heaven:

In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. (John 14: 2.)

Aeroplane "Loops the Loop"

PEGOUD, the airman who a few weeks ago performed the astonishing feat of flying upside down, went even further at Buc the morning of September 20 by "looping the loop," that is, completing a perfect upright circle in the air. After rising to a height of 2,500 feet, he began a headlong dive, or, rather, a fall toward the earth of about 1,000 feet. Then he turned the machine on its back and planed upside down, but instead of righting himself directly from this position, he allowed the impetus of the descent of 1,000 feet to carry him on and up again toward the sky. Still in an inverted position, on and up he went, until for one moment the monoplane was upright in the air, standing on its tail. The momentum of the machine took him on in safety until, a fraction of a second later, he was right side up again on the top of the aerial circle. The "loop" had been "looped" without the help of the engine for the climb and by sheer force of gravity alone. This feat suggests two thoughts—one the marvelous progress made in the mastery of the air, the other the fearful risk the operator takes in the accomplishment of that mastery. While we share the world's pride in this invention of safety in aerial navigation, we hold our breath for fear the next cable will inform us that the daring and successful aviator has fallen to his death. Faith navigates the spiritual firmament with its many perils in an aeroplane propelled by divine energy and love. Of such navigators it is said:

They shall mount up with wings as eagles. (Isa. 40: 31.)

THE LONG ISLAND RAILROAD WRECK AT COLLEGE POINT, LONG ISLAND

Four Prospective Brides Killed

BY a cablegram from Budapest it was learned that on the day preceding the one set for their marriage, four peasant girls were picking wild flowers near Nagyvoied or Nagy-Varad to decorate the church for the quadruple wedding when a bolt of lightning struck the retreat into which they had fled, killing them all. Their bodies were found by their parents and the young men to whom they were betrothed. We come into this world with a cry and we leave it with a groan. And all the journey we make with Time from the cradle to the grave is through a vale of tears. But this earth is not our home, only the path over which we pass on our way to it. The wives and husbands, the fathers and mothers, the brothers and sisters, the sons and daughters and loved ones who have been taken away by poisons, diseases, or tragic accident, have gone into the other life, which is as real as this. The four innocent peasant girls were faithful followers of Christ, and the bolt of lightning only opened to them the gates of the flower gardens and palaces above, and enabled them to realize the truth of their Master's words:

I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also. (John 14: 2, 3.)

Ouimet Wins Golf Championship

FRANCIS OUIMET, an American youth only twenty years of age, won in the recent open golf championship at the Country Club of Brookline, Mass., defeating, among others, Harry Vardon and Edward Ray, two of the greatest exponents of golf the world has ever known. In fifty-three years only two amateurs, John Ball and Harrold Hilton, won the British open championship. Hilton won when he was twenty-three, and Ball when he was twenty-seven. The solitary man who gained it at as early an age as Ouimet was Tom Morris, Jr., who was four times victor in the sixties. Ouimet's totals for the three days' play before the final match with Vardon and Ray, 152, 151, 153 strokes respectively, showed his machine-like accuracy and that his victory was no accident. The British are good sportsmen and good losers. The English press is practically unanimous in its praise of the new boy golf champion. The London Mail says: "Golfers at this moment are engaged, all the world over, in a single, simultaneous and irrepressible act. They are taking off their hats to Ouimet with a flourish of profound respect. The contest will live in the history of the game as long as it is played." The London Standard says: "Our accredited champions have been handsomely beaten by a young American amateur, who, though of French-Canadian extraction, is by birth and bringing-up a citizen of the republic. We must join with his vanquished adversaries in offering hearty congratulations to the victor whose well-earned success is so much to his credit." Golf is an out-of-door sport of a high order, which acts as a tonic for body and mind. We have to have play as well as work for the health of body, mind, or soul. The boy champion calculated so exactly with his mind, and executed so unerringly with his nerve and muscle in the game, as to attract the notice of the world. He is the type of the army of splendid young men which is coming into the forefront of the callings of life and into loyal activity and responsibility in the church, to whom the apostle said:

I have written unto you, young men, because ye are strong, and the word of God abideth in you, and ye have overcome the wicked one. (I John 2: 14.)

Fossil Mammal in Cave

THE world of science is being agitated over the discovery the other day of the petrified skeleton of a gigantic prehistoric mammal on the farm of Theodore Bullard, a nephew of President Emeritus Eliot of Harvard College, three miles from Orrs Mills, Me. One-half of the skull, weighing five hundred pounds and measuring six feet long and three feet high, required two horses to remove it from the cave. A request came from Harvard not to take the skeleton out till it could be done so as to preserve it intact. Mr. Bullard says he is certain the skeleton is that of a Triceratops, a huge three-horned monster measuring twenty-five feet long and ten and a half feet high, with twice the bulk of an elephant, and belonging to an age thousands of years before man came upon the stage. The earth is a tomb for the bodies of the dead. It was long ago said by the psalmist that the man who abideth not in honor is like the beasts that perish. (Ps. 49: 12.)

A WEEK IN THE WORLD'S NEWS

Bananas Escape the Tax

SOMETHING very like a personal victory for President Wilson was won recently in the Tariff Conference Committee when the Senate amendment subjecting bananas to an impost of one-tenth of one per cent. per pound was stricken out of the new tariff bill. This clause was introduced into the bill in the Senate for the sole purpose of producing revenue. Immediately upon its publication a storm of protest arose as the claim was made that the banana, both on account of its cheapness and its high nutritive value, was "the poor man's fruit." President Wilson sympathized with this point of view and strongly urged the free entry of bananas. This is now assured. The rates on lemons, limes, grapefruit and similar fruits are slightly reduced by the new law. The duty on potatoes is retained, while that on wood pulp is stricken out. Further details of the bill are still under consideration.

Mystery Plays in Missions Exhibit

THE world-wide missionary work of the Anglican Church, and in particular the missionary activities of the Protestant Episcopal Church of America, will be shown in a missionary exposition entitled, "Everywhere," which is to be held during the triennial General Conference of the Protestant Episcopal Church, opening October 8 for a session of three weeks at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, on Morningside Heights. The missionary exposition, recalling similar expositions held recently in Boston, Baltimore and Chicago, derives its name from the missionary prayer in the Book of Common Prayer of the Episcopal Church, "that all men everywhere may seek after Thee and find thee."

A large building of corrugated metal has already been constructed on the northwest corner of the cathedral grounds to house the exposition. The hall is eighty feet by thirty feet, and within it have been set aside six sections for scenes typical of China, Japan, the Philippine Islands, Alaska, and the Latin-American countries, as well as scenes representing the habitations of some of the North American Indians.

The scenery for the Japanese, Chinese and other exhibits is furnished by the Missionary Education Movement, while the missionary work conducted in foreign countries other than these is to be shown by means of charts, models and curios. The lives and customs of different foreign lands will be reproduced in short plays, or "demonstrations," in which about 350 young women from parishes in New York City and from neighboring parishes are to take part.

The exposition building will be opened with prayers at 10 o'clock in the morning. There will be demonstrations and addresses from 11 until 1 and from 2 until 4 o'clock. The hour from 4 to 5 o'clock in the afternoon will be for story-telling, and from 5 to 6 o'clock will be the hour for the presentation of mystery plays. The hour for story-telling is to be given over to the stewardesses and the missionaries, who will take up the different exhibits and collections from foreign countries and explain their significance. For the production of the mystery plays a special stage has been erected and movable seats provided so that the settings can be arranged with expedition.

THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES' CURRENCY BILL COMMITTEE

FOR several weeks special committees of the House of Representatives and of the Senate have been engaged in Washington in hearing testimony and considering recommendations for the amendment of the Owen-Glass Currency Bill before its enactment. This bill is considered of equal importance with the tariff revision bill which has occupied the attention of the legislators for many months. The members of the committee photographed are, from left to right, top row: James F. Burke, of Pennsylvania; Charles A. Lindbergh, of Minnesota; George R. Smith, of Minnesota; Edmund Platt, of New York; Otis T. Wingo, of Arkansas; William G. Brown, of West Virginia; Charles A. Korbly, of Indiana; Claude U. Stone, of Illinois; Harry H. Seldomridge, of Colorado; Charles D. Hammer, clerk of committee. Bottom row: Frank E. Guernsey, of Maine; J. Willard Ragsdale, of South Carolina; Emmett Wilson, of Florida; Carter Glass (chairman), of Virginia; Michael F. Phelan, of Massachusetts; Claude Weaver, of Oklahoma; Robert J. Bulkley, of Ohio.

Huerta Out of Presidential Race

A DESPATCH from Mexico City states that Federico Gamboa, minister of foreign affairs, has been nominated for the presidency of Mexico by the Catholic Party convention and that Señor Gamboa has publicly announced his acceptance. General Eugenio Rascon was nominated for the vice-presidency. Both of these candidates are regarded as men of high standing.

General Rascon is well liked by the army. He was minister of war under President Diaz for many years, and is now post commander in Mexico City. He recently acted as military governor of the States of Yucatan and Coahuila, and it is believed he will be able to obtain the support of the army leaders.

The Catholic Party, although supporting the present administration morally and financially, it is explained, realized the futility of endeavoring to continue General Huerta in office in face of the opposition on the part of the United States, and the consequent inability of the government to borrow money. That attitude was indicated plainly to General Huerta, who was brought to realize its consistency, and he finally sanctioned the proposed nominations, and gave assurance of his support of the ticket. He said he would not be the candidate of any other party or faction.

The Farmers and the Meat Crisis

RESPONSIBILITY for averting a future meat famine was put up to small farmers by speakers at the eighth annual convention of the American Meat Packers' Association in Chicago on September 22. Among the remedies suggested for the growing scarcity of meat were: "Every small farmer should raise at least two beef steers a year to offset the decreased production of the Western ranches. The remaining ranges should be cut up in farms to put all farmers on an equal footing. New England, with its bountiful springs and prevailing shade, should be developed as a beef producing country." In the executive report it was stated that we are facing conditions in the production of meat products which would have been thought impossible ten years ago. The shortage of livestock, which has been impressed upon us for several years, has been intensified during the last year. Demand exceeds the supply of meat food products to such an extent that we have abnormally high prices. Among other causes for the shortage of meat, the report pointed out, were the loss of many animals through preventable diseases and "the unthinking slaughter of cows and especially heifer calves."

Plans for a Negro Exposition

PLANS for the exposition in celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the emancipation proclamation by negroes of the United States and representatives from Haiti, Santo Domingo and Liberia had been completed by the commission of negroes appointed last May by William Sulzer. The $25,000 appropriated by the State legislature, as well as large gifts from wealthy negroes, have been spent by the commission in the furtherance of its work. One million visitors are expected when the exposition opens in New York on October 22.

The purpose of the exposition is to show the industrial, educational and religious progress of the negro race since its history began, in a general way and in particular to demonstrate the progress of the negroes in the United States since Lincoln's proclamation fifty years ago. Exhibits in books, a spectacular pageant, addresses by prominent negroes, and other features will be employed to emphasize negro progress and prosperity.

Legislature Halts to Expel Gunmen

ON SEPTEMBER 24 and 25 the lower house of the Legislature of the State of Tennessee presented the rather unique spectacle of an American sovereign State legislative body controlled practically by a mob. The trouble was precipitated by the adjournment of the session by the speaker against the wishes of the majority of the House. The speaker declared that gunmen were attempting to pick him off from the galleries. On the 25th the corridors of the State House at Nashville were packed with uniformed police, and it was stated that practically every man in the assemblage, both spectator and legislator, was armed. Some of the members of the House refused to proceed with business unless the corridors and galleries were cleared of all armed men. The entire building was searched and all men who had not real business in the capitol were expelled. Tennessee's perennial troubles have arisen over the introduction into the legislature of three liquor enforcement bills designed to strengthen the State prohibition laws. They prohibit the shipment of liquor into the State or within the borders of the State, and provide for action in criminal or civil courts to declare saloons public nuisances upon petition of ten taxpayers. All three of these bills passed the State Senate by a close vote, but at the time of writing are the subject of heated discussion and threatened violence in the State House of Representatives.

General Booth's Tour of Inspection

SALVATION ARMY officers and leaders to the number of four thousand are to meet in New York in November to greet General Bramwell Booth, the new world's head of the Salvation Army. It is to be the largest congress of Salvation Army workers ever held in America, and will be surpassed only by a world congress that is to be held in London next May. General Booth is to land at Quebec on November 19, go at once to Montreal, and thence to Chicago, where a mass meeting is to be held. The congress will open in New York on November 23, and continue until the following Sunday. There will be a street parade and a mass meeting in the Lyric Theater. General Booth's visit to America will be made in connection with a round-the-world tour of inspection of the Salvation Army posts.

Mission School a Spoil of War

A VIENNA cablegram brings the news that the Greek authorities have taken possession of the American mission schools at Koritza, Albania, in which one hundred Albanian girls were under tuition. Rev. P. T. Kennedy, an American, was in charge of the schools, assisted by his wife. The British consul at Monastir has made a vigorous protest in behalf of the Americans. The case is likely to raise an important diplomatic question between Greece and the United States as to the status of American institutions in Albania. The Koritza schools are under supervision of the American Congregational Board.

The Late Mayor Gaynor's Will

WHEN the will of Mayor Gaynor was formally opened in the Surrogate's Court in Brooklyn yesterday preparatory to being offered for probate, it was found that Mr. Gaynor, in disposing of an estate believed to be worth between $1,000,000 and $1,500,000, had left the bulk of his property to his widow and five of his children. Mrs. Gaynor receives the Brooklyn home at 20 Eighth Avenue, together with the income for life from 500 shares of the preferred stock of the Royal Baking Powder Company. The mayor's sister, Miss Mary E. Gaynor, who lives in Utica, N. Y., receives the house he owned in that city and the income of 115 shares of the preferred stock of the Royal Baking Powder Company for life. Mrs. W. Seward Webb and Mrs. Harry K. Vingut, daughters, are each to receive $1,000, and the residue of the estate is placed with the trustee, the Kings County Trust Company, trusts being established for the two sons, Rufus and Norman, and three daughters, Helen, Marion and Ruth.

PANDORA'S BOX

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER, JR.

ONCE upon a time, according to the Greek fables, there was a young lady named Pandora. She was beautiful and charming and in every way perfect—even her name meant "the all-gifted." The earth was young then, and people were happy as children are, because they were care-free. They did not know the meaning of the word "trouble." But one day the expressman left a box at Pandora's house. It was a heavy, expensive-looking affair, and it was unlocked—but (and the "but" was a very large one) instructions came with the box—instructions that said: "Do not open this chest."

Pandora was, first of all, a woman; and a woman's chief characteristic (so say the critics) is her curiosity. So before many days had elapsed Pandora opened the box; but instead of the silver and gold and jewels that she had hoped to find, a swarm of venomous-winged troubles flew out upon the unsuspecting children of the earth.

Now, I am going to open a box for you—not a Pandora's box, but a perfectly good chest, filled with presents, and surprises, and excitement, and money. Are you getting excited about the box?

My box is called the Money-Makers' Club—and I am going to ask you right off if you don't want to belong to it. But then that is a foolish question. Of course you do! Everybody needs money, and even if you don't need it for yourself, you can do good with it helping others. It is a mighty nice club—and you, each one of you, can help to make it the best club in this wide world. Will you be one of the helpers?

A girl wrote to me not long ago. She said a great many of the everyday things that ever so many of the girls tell me, but she ended up differently. She wrote:

"I wish that we—all of your pen-and-ink friends—could be drawn closer together in some sort of an organization or club. We could get so much fun and so much help out of it! We could have charter members, and pins, and all sorts of things. Why, millions of girls would join!"

That is one of the things that the Money Makers' Club expects to do.

And another time I received a letter from a missionary; and the letter said:

"We enjoy reading THE CHRISTIAN HERALD ever so much. It brings hope, and happiness, and heaven very near to our home. I wish that everybody could read it—there are millions of people who would love it."

And this is another thing that the Money-Makers' Club is going to do.

Now, I shall tell you the third reason—perhaps you will think that it is the most important reason of all. I have had dozens of letters like this one:

"I wish I had some way of making money near home. There are so very few things that one can do that are not hard and tiresome. If you could only start something to help us out—all of the girls who want money—millions of people would be interested."

And this is another one of the things that the Money-Makers' Club is going to do.

I want all my chums, my pen-and-ink chums, to be members of the club. And I want all of the girls who have never written to me to join it. And I even want the people who don't like me the least little bit to have a place. For it would be utter cruelty to shut anybody out of such a wonderful society.

The Money-Makers' Club is for the benefit of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD girls—and when I say girls I do not mean to set an age limit. For the silver-haired girl of seventy is just as welcome as the tiny kiddie of seven. Because one of the nicest things about our club is that there is plenty of room for everybody, and plenty of surprises for everybody; just as there were plenty of troubles in Pandora's box.

Are you interested, girls dear, in our Money-Makers' Club? Please be interested, because I'm always doubtful about the blasée kind of young person who raises her eyebrows and tips her nose when even a perfectly good plan like this is suggested to her. I want your eyes to be wide open and shining, and your lips parted just a bit, and your minds filled to overflowing with guesses and suppositions. Because, girls, if you don't feel interested, and perhaps just a bit excited, you are not going to keep up your end of the club.

We have published a booklet about the club. A little booklet that is attractive enough and interesting enough to please even the girls who do not care about clubs. It will be sent to any one who writes, and to any address that is given, whether or not the person is a CHRISTIAN HERALD subscriber. Do write soon, girls, and find out all about our plans for your happiness.

In the fable, you remember, Pandora opened the box and the troubles swarmed out—disagreeable winged monsters, that spread over the earth, bringing jealousy, and toothaches, and hatred, and ever so many other things. And as they traveled from country to country stinging people, and making kind souls unhappy, and hurting sensitive feelings, they increased in size and strength and in number.

Girls, after our box has been opened (and you must help to open it), we want our powers—which are powers of happiness—to spread. We want the little winged messengers of hope and help and friendship to spread through cities and States and nations, and we want them to increase (as Pandora's troubles did) in size, and in strength, and in number.

Girls, we are giving you the Money-Makers' Club. Do with it what you will, for it is yours. But I know that I have no need to worry, for I love my girls, and I am proud of them, and I trust them to make a success of our treasure box.

Questions and Answers

Bible Student, Lena, Manitoba. 1. Can you give me any light on how God's "unconditional promises" to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob have failed in his own chosen people, Israel? 2. Is there any other nation to-day in possession of the promises God made to Israel? Some think the Anglo-Saxon race is receiving what God promised to the Jews.

1. There seems to be no reason for thinking that God's promises to the Jews will not be literally fulfilled. The Scriptures are so plain about this, right up to the latest books of the New Testament, that it is most reasonable to expect that in time the promises of the restoration of the Jews to Palestine and their prosperity and happiness as a race will be fulfilled. 2. Any effort to mark another race as the successor of the Jews and the inheritor of their promises would be fanciful and unwarranted. In a spiritual sense, as Paul points out clearly in the third chapter of Galatians, the Gentile believers become children of Abraham and so the heirs of the promises of blessing made to his descendants; but the old promises to the "chosen people" still stand, and will some day be fulfilled.

J. L., Ensley, Ala. 1. According to De Thou 30,000 were slain in the massacre of St. Bartholomew's Day. Sully, however, estimates the number at 60,000. 2. St. Patrick's birthplace is disputed, some writers claiming that he was born in Ireland and others in France. Rev. Joseph Sanderson, D.D., LL.D., in his Life of St. Patrick, quotes from Patrick's so-called Confession, which says that he was the son of Calpornius, a deacon who dwelt in Bannavem Taberniæ, which scholars now agree in locating at or near Dumbarton on Clyde.

Mrs. M. Q., Corn Island, Nicaragua, C. A. Thomas à Kempis, author of the Imitation of Christ, was one of the forerunners of the Reformation of the sixteenth century. After taking vows in 1406 his whole after life was spent in the seclusion of a convent. He lived to an extreme old age and had a high reputation for sanctity and learning. Though a mystic and the author of a book, Imitation of Christ, in which, according to Dean Milman (Latin Christianity) "is gathered and concentrated all that is elevating, passionate, profoundly pious in all the older mystics," he was in no sense a spiritualist in the modern interpretation of the term, as your letter suggests.

Lauretta, Troy, N. Y. The Syrians are believed to be the descendants of Aram, the youngest son of Shem. To-day, the remnant of this once powerful nation is estimated at less than 2,000,000. Among them are Mohammedans, Jews, Christians, Druses, etc., the Mohammedans largely predominating. There have been Christian missions in Syria since 1823, when two American missionaries, Bird and Grenfell, began work there. Beirut is the chief missionary center of Bible Christianity in Bible lands. The proficiency of the Syrian youth in the schools, seminaries and colleges proves them to be the equals of any students in the Orient.

B. B. B., Mosside, Alberta, Canada. What is the distance from us to the nearest fixed star, and what is its name? Is anything known of its size, or how long it takes it to revolve? How is distance to a fixed star determined?

Several methods are employed by astronomers to measure celestial distances, all of which are mathematical and difficult to clearly explain except to one having some knowledge of the higher mathematics. The distance to the fixed stars has never been accurately determined. There are several stars in our northern heavens whose distance from us is approximately the same. No accurate measurements have been made of the size of remote stars. It is clearly known that they are suns, the centers of systems much like our own, and that the magnitude of many of them is immense. Stars like Sirius, Andromeda and many other suns in the Northern Constellation are so large that our own sun is a mere baby in comparison.

THE WORLD'S YOUTH*

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

THE story of the Land of Promise really begins with God's promise to Abraham that the land of Canaan should be the possession of his children's children, who would multiply into a great nation that should bless the world. (Gen. 13: 15; 17: 8.) There were great difficulties in believing that, for Abraham had no child and was already an old man. But "Abraham believed God, and it was counted to him for righteousness." The promise that the Hebrew descendants of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob should possess the Land of Promise was repeated to Moses when the Jews were a race of slaves (Ex. 23: 31), and the difficulties in believing the promise were far greater than at the time of to-day's lesson, but Moses believed that God was able to overcome all obstacles and led his people forward to the land for which they had a "deed" from God.

And now, at last, they are at the boundary of their Land of Promise. The fact that the people wanted to have spies sent ahead to investigate before they marched in was cowardice disguising as desire for knowledge, but it was an indication enough they were not yet ready for conquest, and so our patient God accepted their request and ordered Moses to send through the land twelve spies, one from each tribe, every one a prince." In the annals of courage there are no greater heroes than the spies who have ventured alone, or in small groups, into the very heart of a hostile country, with their lives at stake every moment. In front of the City Hall of New York stands the statue of Nathan Hale, the heroic spy of the American Revolution, who, being captured by the British, said before he was shot, "My only regret is that I have only one life to give for my country." The British have shown like honor to the spy, Major André, a "prince" on the other side in the same war.

The spies went into Canaan, doubtless traveling mostly at night, and hiding in caves and thickets by day, on to Beersheba, where the faith of all should have been strengthened by memories of Abraham, who dug wells there, and whom God had kept safely in that same land of many dangers; on to Hebron, still more fraught with memories of Abraham, of whose protection and prosperity under God in that very region they had heard so often from their Hebrew parents in childhood. He had met the mighty Hittites, and God had made them friendly. (Gen. 25.) Nor had the Amalekites or the Ammonites or the Jebusites or the Canaanites harmed either Abraham or Isaac or Jacob when they dwelt as single households in this same land. This all the spies knew well. It should have been to them an indication of God's watch-care that thoy themselves got back safely from their perilous spying tour of the land.

The day they came back there must have been great excitement in the vast camp of the Hebrews, whose tents stretched far and wide about the central tent of God, the Tabernacle, above which rose the pillar of cloud by day and of fire by night that proclaimed the presence of God. With a great shout of hope the multitude saw the spies approaching, some laden with figs and pomegranates, two of them with a bunch of grapes hanging from a pole on their shoulders, weighing at least the twenty pounds that is sometimes found on a single branch in that same hillside of Eschol to-day.

How quickly a crowd in all ages changes from joy to sorrow, from hope to despair, even from love to hate! Ten of the spies, professedly "leaders" of ten of the tribes, but like many "leading men" to-day, leading only backward, declared that though the land flowed with "milk and honey," it abounded in walled cities and "giants," in whose sight they felt as "grasshoppers," and they said that it would be useless for the Israelites to fight against such numerous and mighty foes. That was the majority report. But Caleb and Joshua (Num. 14: 6-10) made a minority report which failed then but won later, for God was with the minority, as he often has been.

The ten cowards saw walled cities and giants, but failed to see God towering above them both. They wickedly depreciated themselves as "grasshoppers," when God would have made them giants through faith. Depreciating ourselves when we are working for God and with God is not humility but depreciation of God himself. They forgot the song, fitted to be the war-song of entrance to Canaan, that they had sung in leaving Egypt: "All the inhabitants of the land shall melt away; thy right hand is glorious in power."

After praising the land, the ten cowards turned to depreciating it to justify their unbelief, as Esau had done with his birthright when he was about to sell it. They said, "It is a land that eateth up the inhabitants"; but the two brave spies answered, "They shall be bread for us," for they counted God in their reckoning. Looking on human factors only, the ten spies were right in saying, "We are not able," but they should have said, "God is able to make all grace abound, that ye having all sufficiency may abound unto every good work."

It is doubtful if the giants of Palestine were giants in any other sense than the Russians would have seemed giants to tho "little brown men" of Japan had they been cowards seeking an excuse for not fighting. At any rate Caleb and Joshua, who alone were spared of the adults of that generation till the conquest of Canaan occurred, found no serious trouble in conquering these very "Nephilim" when they took possession of the Promised Land. (Joshua 15: 14.)

On this World's Day of Prayer for Sunday schools, we may well pray that its teachers and classes, and especially its boys at the period of hero worship, may get the heroism of faith that will make them brave about things worth while; brave not alone to rescue others from drowning or from fire, when their act will bring applause, but brave in the harder tests of daily duty, which will bring only sneers or perhaps no notice at all.

To-day we look out on our Land of Promise, the youth of the world, about five hundred million in all —one-third of the world's population. Off against that host, the Sunday school army of twenty-eight millions seems as feeble as the Israelites facing the hosts of Canaan. But in God's name "we are well able to overcome it," and the World's Sunday School Convention at Zürich, looking out on this Land of Promise, heard only a hopeful report from the "spies" it had sent out, the missionary "commissions" which in its behalf had explored the world. They did not overlook the obstacles. Stronger than walled cities they found the superstitions, the customs, the prejudices of false religions, but they did not forget what God had done for and through brave missionaries since Abraham went out from a land of idolatry to build a godly nation among hostile heathen tribes. And besides, these strategic Sunday school leaders have discovered that "the line of least resistance" for world conquest is the saving of the children through Sunday schools. Children are substantially alike the world over, and the Sunday school's method of social groups and glad throngs and happy songs appeals to children everywhere. And in heathen lands, as among "the heathen at home," many parents who will not attend church will readily consent that their children shall go to Sunday school. Once there, they are easily reached with the truth.

Prejudices and superstitions are acquired qualities. The child's mind everywhere is open. Let us all, then, have a part in conquering this Land of Promise, the youth of the world, not only by prayer and by missionary gifts for those far away, but by going from this lesson we have learned to make it a lesson we have lived by

* INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON for Sunday, October 19, 1913. The Report of the Spies. Num. 13: 1-3; 25-33. GOLDEN TEXT: "If God be for us, who is against us?" Rom. 8: 31, R. V.

OUR SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS' ROUND TABLE

—THE FOLLOWING REPORT will answer in part a question that has come from Lancaster, Ohio, "How can we secure and hold members for the Sunday school?" We found Germany greatly aroused about the condition of the boys after confirmation at fourteen years of age, when most of them are turned loose from the class associations both of church and school, that had helped them from childhood. From confirmation to enlistment for one or two years in the army the boy has had scarcely any supervision, with the result that juvenile vice and crime have become alarming from the standpoint of social as well as individual welfare. The government has accordingly appropriated six hundred thousand dollars to establish athletic clubs and to bring other wholesome secular influences to bear upon these boys, and efforts are being made to keep a larger number under educational influences beyond fourteen. Religious leaders of Germany are seeking to bring moral and spiritual forces to bear on the problem through the Y. M. C. A., but the writer has urged that this can not take the place of work for the boys in the church itself. Boys of fourteen years are released from confirmation classes and Sunday school at that age, when religious association with boys of their own age would be in close accord with their own "gang spirit." Not being organized inside the church, they are driven by their own instincts to organize elsewhere, often to their own injury and with resulting alienation from the church. The writer has therefore suggested in the interest of the boys of the churches, of the nation and of the world, that confirmation classes, to which nearly all boys of thirteen belong, even the sons of infidels, because confirmation certificates in Continental countries are almost like citizenship papers, shall be organized just before or after confirmation into self-governing Bible classes, electing their own president, secretary and treasurer—the teaching to be done by some "big brother," the class to be really a boys' club, with week-day meets for athletic, social and altruistic purposes, managed by their own committees. Many churches of European origin in the United States, we hope, will help this movement by correspondence or by adopting this plan themselves.

This boys' class could for a while become a boy scout patrol, and when that was outgrown it might become a branch of some other big movement, but all the while it would remain a boys' organized Bible class until it had become a men's Bible class, and these classes, with corresponding classes of girls and women, would form a part of the senior department of the Sunday schools.

In Europe Sunday schools have hitherto been almost exclusively devoted to work for children, and have lacked also the help and inspiration of the world-wide international lessons. It would appear to boys to be a part of a great world movement, as well as to find vent for a boy's instincts of heroism, altruism, association, religious decision, although Sunday school work for boys would suffer in Europe even more than in the United States from the call of Sunday pleasures. Some day, statesmen may discover that churches can not be expected to furnish the moral element in God's citizenship unless they are protected in that work for one day by enforcement of the longest article in the fundamental law of civilization—that the Sabbath shall be a day of quiet rest and opportunity for worship.

SLAVERY IN THE PHILIPPINES

THAT children are sold to slavery in the Philippines; that boys and girls, the sons and daughters of savage families, are disposed of at prices ranging from $60 to $100 a head, and that over a very large part of our Asiatic colony slavery is regarded as a right and practiced openly and without any attempt at interference, is the startling news which comos to us from authoritative sources. First, the charge of slavery and peonage was made by Dean C. Worcester, a member of the Philippine Commission. Now it has been confirmed by a special report on the subject received by the War Department from Honorable William H. Phipps, government auditor in the Philippines. The secretary of war will order a full investigation of these charges. It is expected that the investigation will be conducted by Governor-General Harrison, and that prosecutions will follow close on the heels of any convictions that may be secured.

Moanwhile Congress will take such action as may be nocessary to wipe out slavery in the islands. Senator W. E. Borah of Idaho will introduce a bill to that effect. He says: "I intend to introduce in the Senate a bill which will aim to abolish slavery in every form. This government should not tolerate slavery anywhere. Thus far the matter has been left almost entirely to the Philippine authorities. It is probable that no action will be takon at the extra session, but I will press the matter at the regular session. The revelations in the Worcester report call for drastic legislation."

In his report Mr. Phipps says: "The almost universal statement made to me by persons asked to investigate was that slavery in some form existed. Peonage is the most extensive form of slavery practiced here. Another form is the barter and sale of one human being to another, who holds such person in absolute subjugation, and the latter performs duties and labor without compensation further than scanty clothing and, in many instances, indifferent food."

One instance of alleged slavery was reported by J. A. Stiver, district auditor of San Fernando, in Pampanga, who wrote: "Mr. José de Leon, of Bacolor, Pampagna, has just acquired a Negrito boy. The boy was given to Mr. De Leon by a man from Guagua, Pampanga. That man got the boy from some ono else for thirty posos. The boy was captured wild in the hills and has not yet been domesticated. For this reason he had to be penned up in his present owner's house."

On March 7 last O. G. Marsh of the Provincial Audit Division said: "While in the municipality of Cagayan de Misamis, I observed that leading persons of the municipality, that is, the 'principal' or 'ilustrado' class, kept house and body servants and farm laborers of very low intelligence and apparently of an inforior tribe, presumably Montescos, Bukidnons and Negritos. These dependent persons were, as a rule, poorly clothed and appeared to be completely under the domination and subjection of their masters. I was shown the 'whipping post' on the hacienda of a person who was reputed to be a large slaveholder.

"In the province of Occidental Negros, conditions are much different from those in the province of Misamis, and a kind of servitude predominates that is a form of peonage. There is a wealthy class who aro mostly sugar planters and there is the poor laboring class. This class is largely dependent upon the wealthy class for employment."

John W. Hunter, acting chief district auditor, on March 14 last wrote to Mr. Phipps as follows: "I have known of several instances where children were purchased from non-Christian tribes and believe that a census of the servants of the well-to-do class of Filipinos in this section will show that a large number of them are actually owned. There is a considerable traffic in girls. I personally have had offers of this kind, and it is a generally known fact that a large percentage of the Chinese who have Filipino wives, or 'queridas,' actually bought them at a stipulated price.

"A recent instance in which I was offered boys and girls for twenty, thirty and forty pesos was in August of last year at Cebu. Several men and women offered to sell me boys and girls at the prices stated. I inquired into the cause of this and was told that the people were suffering for lack of food, that parents were unable to provide food for their children and were, therefore, trying to dispose of them."

getting some one to-day to promise to join the Sunday school next Sunday—better still, if we can each get some one to-day to become a true Christian. And the way to begin, even for older people, Jesus taught, is to "become as a little child." That very feeling of human weakness which made the ten spies say they were no match for their foes would have been a favorable one if only it had been accompanied by a confidence that their weakness should become completeness in God's greater strength.

The Bible is full of assurances that though we are "not able," "God is able to save," "able to subdue," "able to keep," "able to succor," "able to present you faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy." (Heb. 7: 25; Phil. 3: 2; Eph. 3: 10; Jude 24.)

When Israel had accepted the majority report of the spies, which implied that God was not strong enough to carry them to victory, God took them at their word and said that none of that generation, save the two spies whose faith in God cast out fear, should ever enter the Land of Promise. Then the people, too late, decided to go in at once, and did so, without God, only to be driven back by their foes. There is no greater tragedy than that of lost opportunities—opportunities to be and do.

It is hard to believe and act upon the promise implied in the Lord's Prayer, that God's will is to be "done on earth as it is in heaven," which can mean nothing less than the evangelizing of the heathen world and the Christianizing of Christondom. Let us go forth to this foreign and home missionary task with such a battle song as the hymn of John Hay on "God's Will Be Done":

Not in dumb resignation we lift our hands on high;
Not like the nerveless fatalist, content to do and die.
Our faith springs, like the eagle's, who soars to meet the sun,
And cries exulting unto thee, "O Lord, thy will be done."

Thy will! It bids the weak be strong; It bids the strong be just;
No lips to fawn, no hand to beg, no brow to seek the dust.
Whenever man oppresses men beneath the liberal sun,
O Lord, be there; thine arm made bare, thy righteous will be done.

ON THE TOP OF THE PILE

Mr Charles G. Pollard, of Yarmouth, N. S., Canada, writes: "THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is a paper that has done and is doing a mighty work for Christianity, for truth and justice, for the uplifting of the downtrodden, and for making this world a better place to live in and for a preparation to enjoy the world to come. For this reason, I am proud to have it appear on the top of the pile of reading matter on the living-room table."

Two-Year Corns

Can be Ended in Two Days

Your oldest corn—pared and doctored since you can remember—can be forever removed in this simple way.

Apply a little Blue-jay plaster. It is done in a jiffy, and the pain stops instantly.

Then that wonderful wax—the B & B wax—gently undermines the corn. In two days it loosens and comes out. No pain, no soreness, no inconvenience. You simply forget the corn.

A million corns a month are removed in that way.

And they never come back. New corns may come if you continue tight shoes, but the old ones are gone completely.

All this is due to a chemist's invention, which everyone should know.

A In the pleture is the soft B & B wax. It loosens the corn.
B protects the corn, stopping the pain at once.
C wraps around the toe. It is narrowed to be comfortable.
D Is rubber adhesive to fasten the plaster on.

SUCCESSFUL EGG FARMING

200 Eggs A Year Per Hen

HOW TO GET THEM

THE eighth edition of the book "200 Eggs a Year Per Hen" is now ready. Revised, enlarged, and in part re-written; 96 pages. Contains among other things the method of feeding by which Mr. S. D. Fox of Wolfboro, N.H., won the prize of $100 in gold offered by the manufacturers of a well-known condition powder for best egg record during the winter months. Simple as a, b, c,—and yet we guarantee it to start hens to laying earlier and to induce them to lay more eggs than any other method under the sun. The book also contains a recipe for egg food and tonic used by Mr. Fox, which brought him in ona winter day 68 eggs from 72 hens; and for five days in succession from the same flock 64 eggs a day. Mr. E. F. Chamberlain, of Wolfboro, N.H., says: "By following the methods outlined in your book I obtained 1,496 eggs from 91 R. I. Reds in the month of January, 1902." From 14 pullets picked at random out of a farmer's flock the author got 2,999 eggs in one year—an average of over 214 eggs apiece. It has been my ambition in writing "200 Eggs a Year Per Hen" to make it the standard book on egg production and profits in poultry. Tells all there is to know, and tells it in a plain, common-sense way.

THE SEVEN CHURCHES OF ASIA

amphitheater. I estimated that together they would seat from fifty to seventy thousand people. The stadium where the athletic games took place was also an enormous affair whose outlines are yet plainly visible. Many of the seats of the stadium are also still in place, and on pacing its length I found it to be at least half as long again as the magnificent stadium in Athens, which seats 90,000 people. Probably not less than 130,000 people could find seats in this mighty arena, and yet Laodicea was not a world metropolis. Though prosperous and populous, it was still a small city as compared with the great capitals of antiquity.

Do not these great theaters and this mighty stadium give us at least one clue to the degeneration of Laodicea, and the severity of the message which the Spirit sent to the angel of its church in Revelation 3? It was evidently a pleasure-loving city, whose places of amusement provided seats at one time for all the inhabitants of the city and the surrounding country. They would not have been built on this immense scale were they not well patronized. The theaters of a city tell of its character, as well as its churches.

The only relief which the traveler finds in visiting Laodicea he gains from the mighty mountains of God which surround it. Snow-clad hills 8,000 and 10,000 feet high keep guard over the city to the south. In no other part of Asia Minor did we see more magnificent mountains.

It was not a missionary city like Philadelphia; it did not enter the open door which was placed before it; it seems to have done little or nothing to civilize the rude tribes of the uplands, though the road to them led past its very doors. It was content to make money and to care for its own interests. In the reign of Nero it was shaken by a tremendous earthquake and partially destroyed, but it was too proud to receive aid from the government or from the neighboring cities as other municipalities had done under like circumstances. It took care of its own destitute people and managed its own affairs, apparently neither borrowing from nor lending to others.

And yet, so far as we know, it was not an unusually wicked city. It was not famed for its licentiousness or its roguery, as were some of the other cities of the Roman Empire. It had a good name in the commercial world. It paid its bills and set a good example of law and order; but it missed the highest aims. It apparently had no great ideals. Money-making and money-spending satisfied it. They were content to let well enough alone and to seek not first the kingdom of God and his righteousness but their own ease and comfort and wealth.

Because of this came to them the scathing rebuke of the Revelator, and because of this the very name of their city has become a reproach and a by-word throughout the world. A "Laodicean" is one of the meanest types of mankind. He is neither cold nor hot; he has lost his enthusiasm; he has no great purpose except to be comfortable, and so he causes the man of fine moral purpose to spew him out of his mouth. The seventeenth verse of the third chapter of Revelation describes the attitude of the Laodiceans. "I am rich," they say, "and increased with goods and have need of nothing." But the Spirit said to them: "Thou art wretched and miserable and poor and blind and naked." Physical repletion and moral emptiness, material wealth and spiritual poverty; that was the character of Laodicea. Could modern conditions or the dangers of an ease-loving civilization, the very dangers which to-day most beset the Christians of Great Britain and America, be better depicted than in the story of Laodicea?

Surely the Laodiceans were chastened in the years that followed. Though their love had grown cold and their zeal feeble, yet the Master says, "Behold I stand at the door and knock": there is still a chance for the church of this open door of Laodicea to open the door of its heart to him that he might "come in and sup." There was still a chance for them to "repent" and to "overcome" and to "sit with him on his throne."

Many a tribulation came to the city in later years; earthquake shock and fire and siege; and for long it held out against the Mohammedans as did its sister city Philadelphia, though not so long nor so courageously as did that valiant town. We read of another city in the same region, Eumeneia by name, which endured great persecution. In its days of prosperity it was much like Laodicea itself. The Christians accepted the Greek culture, accommodating themselves to the life of the times, apparently in no very heroic spirit; but when the persecutions came in the early part of the fourth century, the last great Christian persecution, the people all gathered in the church, contrary to the imperial edict. A battalion of Roman soldiers surrounded the church. They offered to spare the lives of the Christians if they would recant, but not one accepted the proposal. Every one clung to his faith, and all were burned with the church in which they had taken refuge.

May we not also hope that in the neighboring city of Laodicea, as in Eumeneia, the lukewarm Christians, aroused by the message of the Revelator, rebuked by his stinging reproaches, chastened by misfortune, repented, and renewed their zeal, opened the door for his entrance, and finally were among those who overcame the lukewarmness of the past, the disadvantages of an easy prosperity, and at last sat down with him in his throne, because they had heard and heeded what the Spirit said unto the churches.

ONLY A TRAMP

ONLY a tramp! in the glare and heat
Of the summer sun, in the dusty street.

Only a tramp! with a dingy pack,
And a threadbare coat on his weary back.

Only a tramp! and soiled and brown,
He made his way through the busy town.

Only a tramp! and wealth and pride
Looked, and passed on the other side.

And childhood paused in its merry play,
And shrank from the passing form away.

"Only a tramp!" the housewife said,
As she turned away from his plea for bread.

"Only a tramp!" but he felt the smart
Of the taunting words in his human heart;

And bitterly sighing he turned again
To his heartless journey and life of pain.

But there where the railroad meets the street,
Was stayed the tide of passing feet;

And horror palsied the bravest limb,
And eyes with fruitless tears were dim,

For a truant baby boy had strayed
To the railway track, and calmly played

Between the rails, with the pebbles white,
Piling them up in the sweet sunlight;

And the fast express was thundering down
At fearful speed to the busy town.

Fruitless the driver's skill to stay
The flying train on its headlong way;

Fruitless the shrill alarm to fright
The little one from his pebbles white.

But out from the crossing of the street
Dashes a man with flying feet;

Each silent watcher held his breath
In that fearful race for life or death;

Till the truant babe was safely thrown
Beyond the rails, as the train swept on.

The child was safe, but rods away
Bleeding and lifeless the rescuer lay.

Only a tramp! but forever new
Is our love of manhood brave and true:

And the mother, that night, who fondly pressed
The living child to her grateful breast,

Will ne'er forget, as the seasons roll,
That hungry tramp, with a hero's soul!

Damascus, O. JESSE EDGERTON.

THE PIECE IN THE PAPER

of the tree just outside my window knocked and pounded against the glass. The street light at the corner shone through the tree into my little room and made queer shadows. Sometimes a real tall shadow would look like a father coming home at night, and then a short little shadow would make me think of a little girl running to meet him. Poor man in St. Luke's Hospital! After a while I went to sleep and I dreamed a lot about fathers and little girls—fathers and little girls that kept getting lost from each other.

Then I woke up wide awake—so wide awake that it didn't seem a bit as though I'd been asleep. The big shadows bent and swayed above my head like a father bending over to kiss his little girl. I wished it were day. All at once something popped into my head! It came so quickly that it almost took my breath away. I laid very quiet until I got used to the thought. And then it seemed funny that I hadn't thought of it right at first. Why, it was as plain as a, b, c.

Pretty soon I sat up in bed. Then I got up and put on my clothes. I'd be ready to go just as soon as it was day. I wished that I had a pretty dress. I've only got the clothes I had at the Home. Mrs. Valtwo said they'd do very well a while longer. If my hair weren't so straight! All of a sudden I remembered some kid curlers that Mrs. Valtwo had thrown into the trash basket that very afternoon. I'd curl my hair—that's what I'd do. So I made my hair sopping wet, so it would curl nicely, and wrapped it around the curlers as I'd seen Mrs. Valtwo do Marybelle's. They pulled so that I felt as if I couldn't shut my eyes if I were to try. But I didn't care if they did pull and feel funny, if my hair were curled like Marybelle's.

I sat down by the window to wait for daylight. It was cold. I put a bed-quilt around my shoulders. After a while the street lamp went out. I was glad, because the shadows made me lonesome. I guess I went to sleep, for the next thing I knew the milk wagons were rattling over the crossings, and the paper boy threw the News on the porch so hard it made me jump. My legs were as stiff as sticks. I was shivery. My arms were covered with gooseflesh, and my teeth chattered. But I didn't care, there was such a glad, singing feeling in my heart.

It was pretty light by this time—kind of gray light. What time, I wondered, do hospitals let visitors in—for I wanted to go to St. Luke's just as soon as ever I could get in. I washed my face, and took the curlers from my hair. It wan't curled a bit. It was just wet and stringy. I began to get sorry all over, but the glad in my heart was so big that it crowded the sorry feeling all away.

Anyway, I could mako my cheeks pretty and pink like Marybelle's. The wall-paper in my room is covered with red flowers. I knew it faded, because when the rain blows in around the window, it leaves red streaks. So I wet a towel, and dabbed it up and down on the flowers, and then rubbed that on my cheeks. I haven't a looking-glass, so I went and looked in one over the mantel in the dining-room. It didn't look right, so I washed it all off and combed back my hair nice and smooth. I was so glad that I was going to the hospital that I didn't mind so much about not being pretty.

I made up my bed and left the room nice and clean. Then I went into the kitchen and fixed the oat-meal and the coffee ready to make, and slipped around on tiptoe in the dining-room and set the table for breakfast.

I'd have to leave a note telling where I was going. I wouldn't write it to Mrs. Valtwo, because she'd never understand. The lines around her mouth would get tighter and tighter, and her eyes would look glittery, like the cat's eyes do when she catches a bird. Mr. Valtwo would understand better, for he's a father. Marybelle, though, is the one I'm going to tell, for she's a little girl with a father.

So I wrote Marybelle a note and told her all about it—all about what I thought in the night, and what a glad it put into my heart. I told her about me going to the hospital and everything. And then I tore that note up into little pieces. I just couldn't bear to tell any one yet. So I wrote:

Dear Marybelle: Good-bye. I'm going away. I gave the kitty its milk and cleaned Dickie's cage.

"ELIZABETH."

At the Home they called me Lizzie. So did Mrs. Valtwo. But my name's Elizabeth, and I'm never going to be called Lizzie any more.

After I wrote the note I went on my tiptoes down the walk and out of the side gate. The streets looked funny and gray and bare. I didn't see any one only some men with tin dinner pails. Everything was still. I ran all the way to the hospital. The sole on one of my shoes was loose, and it flippoty-flopped so loud and funny. It sounded as if I were walking on both sides of the street at the same time.

When I got to the door of the hospital I was all shaky. My heart was beating so hard against my side, and my throat was all dry and throbbing. My cheeks burned and my eyes felt stretched wide open. Did hospitals have bells, I wondered. I was looking for one when a nice gentleman with a big stomach and a pink face and white hair opened the door. I knew right away he was a doctor. He called me "Big Eyes," and asked what I wanted so early, and his voice was big and full of laugh.

He was nice, but I couldn't tell him. What was the sick man's name? The piece in the paper told, but I couldn't think of it.

The doctor laughed and said: "Don't look so scared. I don't eat little girls with such big eyes before breakfast."

And he looked so funny that I laughed. Then the sick man's name popped into my head, and I told the doctor that I wanted to see Mr. Seymond.

The doctor opened his eyes wide and said "What!" so quick and sharp that it made me jump. He told me to step inside and he'd call a nurse. He pressed a button and a pretty lady came; she had on a blue dress and a white cap and apron that had just been washed and ironed. She smiled like she was glad about something, and her eyes made me feel warm and —and friendly.

The doctor laughed again when the nurse came, and said: "Here's a little girl who wants to see that fellow who hasn't any one to love him!"

Then he looked at the nurse as if he were telling her something funny and wanted her to laugh. But she didn't laugh. She just looked hard at me, and her eyes made me think that maybe she knew how lonesome little girls without fathers feel. So I went up to her and took hold of her hand and told her that I loved the lonely man, and please might I see him right away?

She looked at the doctor, and he looked at her. Then she asked him what he thought about it.

The doctor nodded his head, and said: "It's the very thing! Go and tell him. He's all right—he's just lost his nerve for the time being." Then he put his hand under my chin and looked down into my face. All the laugh went out of his eyes. He said something about the old story of a little child leading some one, and then turned and ran down the steps. The nurse asked me to sit down until she

Old-Time Health, Eating Grape-Nuts.

"I had been sick for 10 years with dyspepsia and a lot of complications," wrote an Ark. woman.

"An operation was advised, change of climate was suggested, but not one seemed to know just what was the matter. I was in bed three days in the week and got so thin I weighed only 89 lbs. No food seemed to agree with me.

"I told my husband I was going to try some kind of predigested food to see if I could keep from this feeling of continued hunger.

"Grape-Nuts and cream was the food I got and nothing has seemed to satisfy me like it. I never feel hungry, but have a natural appetite. Have had no nervous spells since I began this food, and have taken no medicine.

"I have gained so much strength that I now do all my housework and feel well and strong. My weight has increased 8 lbs. in 8 weeks and I shall always eat Grape-Nuts as it is far pleasanter than taking medicines." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. told Mr. Seymond. She went away, and pretty soon she came back.

She took me down a long hall. Everything was white and clean and shiny, just like dishes that have been washed in soap and water and rinsed and then rubbed and rubbed.

We kept coming to doors and passing them. Pretty soon we would be at the door! I was pretty excited, I guess. I pulled at the nurse's dress. She stopped and looked down at me. "Please," I told her, "tell me just before we get to him, so's I can get my breath good." She reached down and took my hand in her nice warm one, and didn't say anything, but I felt as if she'd said everything I wanted her to.

We passed another door, and I stopped and pulled at her hand again. "Please," I said, "don't go in with me, 'cause I'm used to taking care of babies and I won't bother him!"

She laughed nice and gurgly, just like pouring water out of a bottle, and squeezed my hand. When we got to a door at the end of the hall, she told me to go in, and if I wanted her, Mr. Seymond would ring. Then she went away.

I began to get scared all over again and my heart went thumpity-thump! When I opened that door I'd see him! My heart jumped away up, and then it just stopped, and something inside me got very still. Then—then I turned the door-knob very softly and went in.

I didn't see anything at first, 'cause my head felt as if it were whirling around fast. Pretty soon, though, I knew I was in a small white room. And there, on a narrow white bed, under white, white covers, lay a man.

I tiptoed over very softly and kind of wobbly. My knees felt wiggly, just as they once did when I was sick for a long time in the Home.

He was looking straight at me. His eyes were very big and his face was white. He looked solemn and—and sorry. There wasn't any glad in his eyes. He didn't know why I'd come! The lump came back into my throat, and my eyes smarted like anything. He put out his hand and I put my hand in it. His was so soft and so white that I was ashamed of mine, all rough and red, with its cut fingers.

He said—and his voice sounded just like I thought it would, only there wasn't a bit of glad in it—he said the nurse had told him I was coming in and that he was glad to see me, but that he guessed I'd made a mistake—that he didn't know any little girl that loved him. He said that I must be looking for some one else. And then he smiled. He smiled just like the sun comes out on a cold, cloudy day, and a little veil cloud drags right across the face of it.

All the still had gone away now, and I was awful excited. Just kind of goosefleshy all over—that kind of creepy excitement—not the nice kind that warms you up all over.

I tried to tell him, and my voice wouldn't go. He patted my hand, and kept looking at me. Pretty soon I told him, kind of whispery, that I was just looking for him, and I gave him the piece I'd cut out of the paper.

He took it, and his hand shook like anything. He read it. Then he cleared his throat as if he had a bad cold, and looked hard at me, but didn't say anything.

"Isn't that you?" I asked, pointing to the piece.

He nodded.

"Then—then don't you see! When—when I read that I knew just how you felt. Then, when I went to bed I put the piece under my pillow and went to sleep. And all at once I—I just knew about you—and about—about me." He just kept on looking at me as if he were asking me a question with his eyes.

Once I had a chill and I just shook

LIQUID GRANITE

Makes Floors Hard as Stone—Bright as Gold

Nothing adds such a touch of completeness and tone to a room as a well-finished floor.

Berry Brothers' Liquid Granite imparts to floors a smoothness and lustre that delights the eye. It brings out and protects the beauty of natural woods.

Liquid Granite is also ideal for use on linoleum and oilcloth.

So tough and elastic is Liquid Granite that, although wood treated with it may dent under a blow, the finish will not crack. Nor is Liquid Granite affected by water. Wash it as much as you please. It won't turn white.

These splendid qualities in Liquid Granite are the result of our 55 years' experience in varnish making. This same practical knowledge and skill also insures the superiority of the other well-known Berry Brothers' products, such as Luxeberry White Enamel, Luxeberry Wood Finish, and Luxeberry Spar Varnish.

Sold by leading dealers everywhere. Ask for our "Homebuilders' Booklet" or write us direct.

Wanted—Successful Farmers

In the San Joaquin Valley, California. This great valley in the heart of California yet has room for over half a million men who will farm its fertile acres in the way they should be farmed. There is no room for the failure—no place for the man who can not succeed where he is. But there is a wonderful opportunity for the man who has the success habit.

Here is a climate that will grow all the products of the temperate zone, and many of those of the tropical. You have no long cold winters. Every day can be profitably spent in out-of-door work. Here is a soil which under irrigation is of surpassing richness. Here is ample water and all conditions of pleasant living in a well-settled land.

We will tell you of the opportunities in general. We will search out for you just the kind of a location you are seeking. It might take you weeks or months and many miles of travel to find the spot that our knowledge of local conditions will direct you to at once.

After you have found the spot we will send to you a man who knows this country thoroughly, and if you wish he will tell you the methods and crop rotations which are most successful here.

All this service is free. It is part of the effort the Santa Fe is making to let people know of the advantages along its lines. The railroad has no land to sell and no interest to serve but your ultimate success here.

What the San Joaquin Valley is, and what others are doing here, is told in our two books, which are free and yours for the asking. Then if you are interested enough to ask further questions, you will find me eager to answer.

all over—and I guess I had another chill, for I was all cold and I shook so's I couldn't keep still.

"As soon's I knew you didn't have any one at all to love you," I told him, "I knew right away how you felt. Wait—I'll tell you how it is, and you'll see if I don't know. When you see some little girl run and skip to meet her father, don't a big lump come up into your throat, and don't it just ache and ache? And when he stoops down and takes her up in his arms, don't your heart beat slow and sick, and don't your eyes smart and burn? And—and then you wonder what's gone wrong—so much love and so many homes, and no love and no home for just you—and then the lump in your throat gets bigger and bigger. And sometimes don't you wonder what would happen if that lump were to fall down against your heart? Don't you wonder if it wouldn't break your heart?"

He just kept on looking at me. His eyes were awful big and awful sorry. His lips kind of pressed themselves against his teeth in a straight line.

He patted my hand and looked hard at my cut fingers. Most of the glad had gone out of my heart by this time. He didn't know why I'd come! It's funny something didn't tell him as it did me! I felt as if I'd better go. So I smoothed his bedclothes that didn't need smoothing, and straightened his pillow that didn't need straightening, and told him I guessed I'd be going now.

Then he held on to my hand tight—like he didn't want me to go—and said: "Tell me why you came to see me, won't you?"

It was hard to have to tell him, when I thought he'd know.

"I—I thought you'd know, just as I did. I—I thought you were my—father!" My voice sounded a long way off, and kind of jerky.

He didn't say anything, only he held my hand tighter.

"I didn't have any one to love me, and you—you didn't either. We—we might be just lost from each other. I might be your little girl and you—you might be my father. I was—I was pretty sure of it!"

He raised himself on his elbow. All of the sorry went out of his eyes and a warm light came into them.

"Sure! It's the surest thing that ever was!" and the same glad that was in his eyes jumped into his voice.

Anyway, I knew I'd made a mistake. I told him so. "For," I said, "if we've been lost and just got found, you'd have made the sign."

"The sign? What sign?" he asked, just like a nice, kindhearted man—but not a bit like a father.

"Oh, just the sign. If you don't make it yourself, there's no good my telling you," and the lump popped up into my throat, and my voice jerked and shook the tears loose that have always burned in my eyes and never fallen. I bit my lips and winked my eyes like anything to keep them back, too.

"Why, you poor little woman of a child!" His arm went around me just like a dear father's, and he patted me on the head as any father would. He didn't say anything for a while, and I just cried nice and comfortable. It felt good to let the tears loose.

Presently he raised my head and—and kissed me!

The tears dried up as quick as wink. I just jumped up and down and clapped my hands.

"That's the sign—that's the sign! You are my father—you are, you are!"

And that's all. Only we're not lonesome nor lost nor anything, only just glad all the time. And when he got well he took me to a big stone building and got a paper with a big gold stamp on it, all tied up with red tape. He says it's his sign that I'm his really truly little girl.

ANSWERED PRAYERS

THE editor of the Answered Prayer Column ought to have an opportunity, now and then, it would seem, of acknowledging some answers to his own prayers. He can hardly write a letter to himself, so he takes this way of telling the readers of this department that a few weeks ago God heard and answered prayer for the recovery of his little nephew. Others were praying, too. And there seemed to come the assurance that the baby would get well. So it was no surprise when the letter arrived which told of returning health. Indeed, the Mont-Lawn song is true: "Jesus loves the little children."

Here are two letters which tell about the healing of other little folks. A Reader from Golden City, Neb., writes: "I have been reading the Answered Prayer Column in your paper and it is such a help to me. I, too, can say I know that God hears and answers prayer. He restored my baby to health, and has also answered many other prayers for me." E. L. F., of West Alexander, Pa., writes: "I want the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to know how God has answered my prayers. I was very sick and asked him to be my Physician, and to spare my life so I could raise my children. He helped me and now my baby has been sick. I asked Jesus to lay his hand on her and heal her as he did the children when he was here on earth, and he did so. This is only two of the many times he has answered my prayers for me and helped me."

We like to have our readers remember that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD believes in doctors and in medicine, as it also believes in prayer. It is God who gives the physicians their skill, and it is God who gives the various herbs and drugs their healing power. The following letter is of very special interest because it is written by a Christian doctor. He writes:

"For your Answered Prayers department I wish to say that God graciously heard our prayers for the restoration to health of a beloved daughter. Verily, 'his mercy lasteth ever and his grace never faileth.' I am a physician and believe, of course, in medical measures in the treatment of disease, but I know that without the aid of the Great Physician not all the drugs in the world could accomplish anything in the way of a cure. 'Bless the Lord, who healeth all our diseases.'"

But it is not only in the healing from disease that God answers prayer. Everything that interests us interests him—and he will help us if our faith will let him. A Reader from Newark, Ohio, writes: "I have been having more peace and joy the last few days than I have had for a long time. God has answered my prayers. The way seemed so dark. I could not see how things could be righted without hurting the feelings of a dear friend, when suddenly at an unexpected moment all things were made right, and I feel like praising God all the time."

One of our older readers, Miss E. M. M., sends this cheerful letter from Nashville, Tenn.: "I wish to acknowledge God's goodness in answering many prayers recently, as well as many others during my long life of eighty-three years."

Acknowledgments of answers to prayers have also been received from:

NOTES ON THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR, EPWORTH LEAGUE AND BAPTIST YOUNG PEOPLE'S UNION TOPICS

The Best Year Yet*

THERE are several definite things that we can do which will make it absolutely certain that this will be the best year in our society's history. You do not believe that, do you? Yet if you will dig down a little deeper into your heart you will find you do believe it.

I do not mean of course that any one member can make this year the best in his society's history, though there is no doubt that each individual has undreamed-of powers for producing such results. But I mean that if the society itself, all its members or nearly all of them, should determine to make this the best year in its history, it could be done.

Will you do it? I think I can see your faces as you are eagerly saying: "Yes." Yes, you will do it, but there is still a little incredulity in your expression. You are not yet quite sure that it can be done, but you are willing to try, and you hope it may be true.

Well, then, let us have it the best year. See how simple it is. Nobody in the world can stop you from doing these things that will make it the best.

In the first place it can be the best year in your nearness to God. Did you ever really stop to consider that no person or no power in the world can prevent you from coming just as near to God as you want to? In the old days it was only the high priest who could go into the Holy of Holies, where God's manifest presence was. And he could go only once a year. But Jesus has made a way by which every one of us may proceed to the innermost heart of God. The writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews makes the great climax of his letter in these words: "Having, therefore, brethren, boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, by a new and living way, which he hath consecrated for us through the veil, that is to say, his flesh, and having a high priest over the house of God, let us draw near." And Paul, who may, indeed, have been the writer of those words, naming over, at the end of the eighth chapter of Romans, the mightiest things he could think of, exclaims that none of them "shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."

This may not be the best year in numbers, nor in money collected, nor in size of the study classes, but it can be the best year in the lives of any of you in getting acquainted with Christ and staying near to him. "Endeavor" is a good word, yet after all is it not true that what our societies need is not more endeavor but more prayer? The way to wealth, or to fame, or to great learning, or great material achievement may be closed to some of us, but the way to God lies wide open to everybody.

The wonderful results of the "Haystack Meeting," where four college students, seeking shelter from a shower, laid the foundations of the great modern forward missionary movement, prove what can be accomplished by a few people—they may be very young people—who will draw near to God in prayer. So make this the best prayer year in your society's history.

Then make it the best faith year. As nobody can stop your getting near to God, so nobody can stop your trusting him. We sing lustily every little while:

> Faith is the victory
> That overcomes the world.

But how much of the world is being overcome by our faith? Faith is the natural result of much prayer. The more you talk with God the more you will form the habit of believing him. And a few faithful souls who really expect great things from God will change the complexion and atmosphere of any society, or church, or town.

This can be the best year in sacrifice. You may not have so much to give as you had last year, or you may not have so much time and strength to use for the society's work. But with whatever time and strength and money are at your disposal, you can make greater sacrifice. And the amount of sacrifice made counts vastly more than the amount of money or strength or time expended. In these days of big things and big deeds we are apt to forget the story of the widow and her two mites, and to pass over the earnest things Jesus said about self-denial and cross-bearing. Can't we turn the screws a little tighter this year? Do not make the sacrifice for its own sake, nor for the good it will do you. Make it for Jesus' sake and for the sake of those for whom he died.

Prayer—faith—sacrifice — wonderful things, yet within the reach of all. You can have more of them this year than you have ever had before, and that will make this the best year of all.

"How to Make This the Best Year in Our Society's History." Christian Endeavor and B. Y. P. U. Topic for Sunday, October 19, 1913. Phil. 3: 7-15. (Used by The Pastor.)

Attractive Home Religion*

WHAT are the things that make an attractive character? We may get a better start for our study of graces by beginning with faults. You have seen people who were disagreeable in their homes. What was the matter with them? There have been nights when you have been ashamed of your home conduct during the day. What had you done that you were ashamed of?

How well you know the unpleasant list! But let us put them down again that we may face them frankly. Selfishness, wilfulness, impatience, unreasonableness, harshness, unwillingness to forgive, shirking, fault-finding, unfairness, partiality—these are some of the bitter things that spoil our homes.

The way to be attractive is just as plain as the way to be unattractive, though it may not be so easy. Let us put down that other list. See how fragrant the very words are. They are like a breath from heaven. They represent soul flowers that every one of us may have growing within, and they will make fragrant homes. Unselfishness, submission, patience, reasonableness, gentleness, forgiveness, industry, charity, fairness.

Where can I find these graces that will make my religious life attractive to the people of my home circle? They are all gifts of Jesus, gifts of the Spirit. They are priceless, yet they are mine for the asking. Is it not worth while? Jesus died that we might have them, and so be like himself. Our lives must be samples of his life, and they can be and will be such when we let his life, in all its fulness, into our hearts to take the place of the old life of self and sin.

*"Making Religion Attractive in Our Homes." Epworth League Topic for Sunday, October 19, 1913. Col. 3: 12-17; Eph. 5: 18-21; 1 Peter 3: 8, 9.

The advantages of using Ivory Soap for washing dishes are threefold:

1st. Dish-washing with Ivory Soap does not make the hands red, rough and sore. On the contrary, they remain white, smooth and soft.

2nd. After washing with Ivory Soap, the dishes are clean in the best sense of the word; that is, the soap itself is of such high quality, so clean if you please, that no plate, no cup, not one piece could be cleaner.

3rd. Because of Ivory's freedom from alkali and all strong chemicals, the delicate tints on fine china are not injured, a consideration appreciated especially by those who have pieces with gold decorations.

This Full-size Dollar Bottle of Petro Quinine is Yours Absolutely Free of Charge

PETRO QUININE is a hair saver—it is not a perfume. It is about ninety-six per cent. pure petroleum—some quinine is added.

It is not necessary to talk of the beneficial effect of petroleum on the hair—you know it, and any physician will confirm your knowledge. The objections to its odor, its greasiness and general uncleanly appearance are the only things that have prevented the very general use of petroleum as a hair tonic.

PETRO QUININE eliminates all the undesirable qualities of petroleum—PETRO QUININE is crude petroleum refined to a degree that eliminates the objectionable odor—eliminates the greasiness—eliminates the uncleanly appearance, but retains all the qualities that are beneficial to the hair. PETRO QUININE is a clear, clean liquid that will not stain or leave a grease spot.

Why This Liberal Offer on Petro Quinine is Made to You

It has always been the custom for hair tonic manufacturers to present the proof of the merit of their product by printing a long list of commendatory letters. Sometimes these letters are proof and sometimes they are not. In any event, any manufacturer can get commendatory letters.

Knowing the merit of PETRO QUININE by tests, we believe that you are the best judge of its value for yourself. What may help another may be of no benefit to you. We want you to learn for yourself just what PETRO QUININE is and what it will do—we can't ask you to invest your money on our say-so. If you know PETRO QUININE will benefit your hair you'll invest your money willingly enough.

So we make you a present of a full-sized $1.00 bottle—no strings, no red tape, but an absolutely bona fide present to you. We would like you to tell us just what you think of it, but we leave that to you.

Questions and Answers

A Reader, Ithaca, N. Y. "Eight years or so ago I was baptized and joined the church. But I do not feel that I have ever fully tasted the sweetness of the old, old story of Jesus and his love. How can I learn the truth and become a deep-minded Christian? My desire is very true, but I cannot feel right in my heart till I understand how. I have a little boy of six and a little girl of two. I want them to come into the light as soon as they are old enough. I know I must pray and read the Bible, but there must be something more."

Yes, indeed, dear friend, there is something more, but it is a very simple and easy thing. It is so simple and so easy that many people miss it. They seem to think it is impossible that so much joy can come from such a simple thing. That thing is to trust God. Doubt and unbelief shut out all the glory and peace of salvation; faith lets them in. But before you can trust God you must be certain that you need him. Only sinners need him, those who are appalled by the enormity of their failings and faults as seen in the light of him to whom sin is impossible. Only he who has been frightened by the lightnings of divine wrath and who has been stunned by the accompanying terrifying thunders of "thou shalt!" "thou shalt not" of Mount Sinai, can fully appreciate the certainty that the lightning has spent its force on the cross and the rumblings of anger have been stilled on Calvary, never more to harm those who flee there in childlike helplessness. They trust the Father who so loved them that he gave his only begotten Son to be that Brother and Friend who constantly holds out welcoming strong arms while he soothingly assures, "Fear not, I will comfort thee." You speak of your little children. Think how miserable and unhappy they would be if they were all the time wondering whether or not you loved them; if when they had asked you to forgive them for doing something that displeased you and you had assured them that you did forgive them, they should wonder whether or not you meant it, and should keep coming to you again and again asking forgiveness for the same offense. Theirs would be a very unhappy childhood; so you are unhappy because you do not utterly trust the love of your father God.

What more can he say than to you he hath said,
To you who for refuge to Jesus have fled?

H. S., Rogn, Neb. 1. The Greek word translated "heresies" in Gal. 5: 20 means either an opinion or a party. As used in the New Testament it stands for an opinion "varying from the true exposition of the Christian faith" (as in II Peter 2: 1), or a body of men following mistaken or blameworthy ideas, or, as a combination of these two meanings, "dissensions." This latter definition "dissensions" is the rendering given by Thayer in this passage. The American revision translates the word "parties," leaving, however, the expression "heresies" as the marginal reading. The three last words of the verse, "strife," "seditions," "heresies," are, in the American revision, "factions, divisions, parties." 2. The organization you mention is recognized as one of the denominations of evangelical Christians. It is not likely that even its own members would actually claim that theirs is the only true church.

O. A., Morristown, N. J. In Gen. 6: 14 Noah is told to make an ark of "gopher" wood. There are various conjectures as to what kind of wood this was. Bochart holds that it was a wood found only in Egypt. Dietrich believes it was a heavy resinous growth. Gesenius affirms that it was pine, fir, or cedar, and Rochart says cypress. Clemens Alexandrinus declare it to have been a kind of a Median wood of Arabian growth and black color. A majority hold to the opinion that cypress was meant, on account of its enduring qualities.

Mrs. B. A. P., Marcus, Iowa. The first three chapters of I Corinthians contain the argument that all human wisdom and power are ruinous and contemptible in comparison with the power and wisdom of God. The passage you inquire about (I Cor. 2: 9, 10) marks the climax of the argument, and is one of Paul's exalted flights of thought and language. He is exhorting the Christian to a right use of Bible in his spiritual possessions. The possessions and powers of other men are not worth being proud of. But everything in the universe belongs in a sense to the Christian because it belongs to Christ. This does not of course mean that any man would have a right to claim the possessions of another in the name of Christ. But the treasures of riches are in Christ. Christ is the Creator and Ruler of everything, and since the Christian is the heir of Christ he has a share in all the power and wisdom and richness of God. This chapter also contains Paul's urging against divisions; followers of the various teachers formed different groups in the Corinthian Church. The apostle wanted to get their minds up above all these human matters to the infinite source of all wisdom. It is a plea for Christian unity as well as for a spiritual and heavenly, a bold and buoyant frame of mind.

Dr. H. A. Becker of the Central American Mission, Jalapa, Guatemala, writes: "Through the kindness of friends we have received regularly THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, which is always welcome. My heart has rejoiced at noting your interest in the distressed and afflicted in all the world. I therefore have been led to suggest a simple and practical idea designed to bring out and develop the Christian love which is in the hearts of many of your readers. It is simply that the information given daily by the newspapers as to the needs of the people be used to further the cause of Christ, by leading the readers to seek out those who are suffering and to offer them the consolation of Christ and to help them temporarily as far as possible. Your great paper could do a grand and noble work by culminating your readers to visit personally those who are in need and to aid them and especially to point them to the Rest-Giver and Pastour of Souls. Thus they would imitate Him, 'who went about doing good' and 'who has given us an example, that we should follow in his steps.'" The good missionary's well-meant suggestion is already in practical operation in very many communities, where church societies, charitable organizations and benevolent-minded individuals are watchful of every opportunity to do Christian work in a quiet and unostentatious way and without publicity. Doubtless many of their cases come to them through the daily press. We ourselves have long been convinced that there is a great army of God's people in our own land who are ready at the call of need or the signal of suffering to render instant service. May God bless them for it and may their numbers multiply.

F. M. B., Brockton, Mass., writes, apropos of the recent paragraph in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD concerning a diary covering a period of fifty-nine years: "I have kept a diary, beginning January 1, 1855, which is closely second to that of Mr. Henry Hallinger. When a child, a friend gave me a diary. Some one of the family remarked, 'She will keep it a little while and then forget about it.' That nettled me, and I resolved I would show them I could keep it for the whole year. My mother told me what I must first write about. Of course, with the passing years, I noted things of greater importance, and have never missed a day. My diary has figured in a will case involving several millions, and has furnished conclusive data in another suit, also verifying various d... occurrences of interest about the city."

THE RELIEF OF BULGARIA

HOW THE RELIEF FUNDS FORWARDED ON BEHALF OF THE CHRISTIAN HERALD SUBSCRIBERS WERE USED FOR THE SUCCOR OF THE NEEDY. THE PROBLEM OF THE CHILDREN

BY MRS. ZORISTA D. FURNAJIEFF

T IS a great privilege for me to come to the United States, and I take the first opportunity to express Bulgaria's deep gratitude to the American people for all that they have done for her in the past. I especially came to speak on behalf of the many thousands of poor, suffering people ho have been benefited and kept alive by the beautiful work of THE IRISTIAN HERALD. Being on the CHRISTIAN HERALD Com-ttee at Sofia and having in charge one of the city sections which CHRISTIAN HERALD relief was distributed, I have me in contact with the suffering, hunger and sorrow of e people during the past year. Your readers have ised a living monument in my land, by keeping the ople alive and saving them from untold sorrow. So ny of the poor, hungry, suffering mothers, worn care and anxiety, would say to me: "If it were t for the flour you have given us we would have ed," and then with tears they would express their anks to God for raising up such kind Christian iends for them. In Sofia alone, at least 1,500 milies have been kept by THE CHRISTIAN ERALD flour. A mother with nine children was omed to misery and death if it were not for the ur, which was the only food that family had. In ct, most of the people have had nothing else for nths but bread. It was not alone in Sofia that e CHRISTIAN HERALD flour and money has supplied e needs of many. Distribution was also made in e Serez district, Philippopolis district and in Adria-ple. Your help has covered places in Bulgaria, acedonia and Thrace. It has helped mostly the Bulgarian d Turkish population, although many Greeks, Servians, ws and other people have been benefited by it, as there was no stinction made between nationalities or religions. The only thing ken into consideration was their helpless condition. The CHRISTIAN ERALD Relief Committee at Sofia used many of the pastors in the fferent cities as its agents to distribute help in their districts. The easurer of the committee went to the Serez district and distributed money to any suffering ones. The missionaries, also, have taken an active part in this ork. Mrs. Marsh, of Philippopolis, has been distributing bread daily to ndreds of hungry people who wait at her doors. Mr. Holoway, who is on the mmittee, took five hundred sacks of the CHRISTIAN HERALD flour to Koo-anovo, a city in Servia, where the flour was distributed to the poor. It was , also, who went to Adrianople immediately after its fall, and distributed lp to the many sick and suffering people of that city. In Samokov also, some the CHRISTIAN HERALD money has been used by the missionaries to meet the eeds of the poor.

After the second war, the CHRISTIAN HERALD money was used to help acedonian refugees. We have over 100,000 refugees who have fled from eir homes without taking the needed clothing and covering. Mrs. Kasuroff, member of the Sofia committee, with the help of several other ladies, bought aterial with the CHRISTIAN HERALD money and has formed a sewing school, which gives an opportunity to poor women to earn daily twenty cents by their work, and thus help their families. The clothes that they sew are used for the refugees. Hundreds of these poor, homeless Servian refugees have thus been helped by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, many with food and clothing. The misery is not at an end. The same people, among them widows and orphans and homeless refugees, are needing yet their daily bread. The outcome of the war has left us in far more desperate condition than any could have ever foreseen. About 30,000 of our best and strongest men have been either killed or crippled for life, so that, instead of being a help to their families, they are a burden. Hundreds of helpless orphans are in despair as to their future. Bread, shelter, clothing, fuel, education—these are their needs. Who is to meet it? Our hands have been full during these past months. But what will the winter be? The very thought of the sorrow that is awaiting these poor people appals us and drives us almost to despair as to means and ways to help them. As we look back at the past and consider the present, and think of the future, we see that our only hope for the future welfare of our nation lies mainly in our living capital—that is, our children. However, look at their present condition. Hundreds of them are left orphans, or so poor that they are doomed to hunger, neglect, ignorance, unless we find ways and means to shelter them in orphanages, to save them from starvation, to see to their proper education and training, to fit them as worthy future citizens. Unless we can come to their mental and spiritual rescue now, we shall yet have to witness in the future one of our greatest losses. In this orphan work is deeply interested our noble Queen Eleanor. She has been a true mother to our people, and has shared with us the suffering and pain. Daily she is seen in her nurse's uniform going from hospital to hospital, encouraging, sympathizing, even helping bind the wounds of our sick soldiers. On her heart is laid the burden of the future of our orphans and our great hope is that this, the heaviest of her and our anxieties, will be met and shared to a great extent by the kind-hearted, generous people of America.

In the course of an audience which Queen Eleanor granted the representatives of the CHRISTIAN HERALD Relief Committee last winter, she referred to the problem of the war orphans. "I have the care and welfare of these children for whom everything remains to be done," she said, "very much at heart, and my prayer is that we may be able to save them from the depths of poverty and the consequent retarded development. We shall need the kindly co-operation of all good friends of the unfortunate on behalf of the thousands of orphaned children. The work will be an immense one, but a blessed one."

Since our self-sacrificing queen said these heartfelt words, Bulgaria has experienced still greater and unexpected losses. New campaigns have been fought for every single child of whom Queen Eleanor spoke, there are now almost a score. Leaving from the consideration all thought of Bulgaria's future, we must think of these homeless, fatherless, and, in many instances, motherless children, who are so desperately poor.

The readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will be interested to learn of a project to buy a house, which has been rented for several years past by a Mr. Barumoff, who has kept a few orphans there, putting in all his own pay as a printer. He himself is an orphan, and having known and passed through experiences of hardship and loneliness, he has devoted his life to the little ones who are left as he was. The CHRISTIAN HERALD Committee, having perfect trust in Mr. Barumoff, has had in mind to help him buy the place, to remodel the house, and fit it for a larger orphanage, where we could send some of the orphans to be cared for by the CHRISTIAN HERALD funds. His work so far has been done by faith, and we are sure that whatever good can be done for that orphanage will prove a great blessing to many little ones. The place is valued at 8,000 francs, or $1,300. We believe that the CHRISTIAN HERALD readers will be deeply interested in the work of Mr. Barumoff and will support him in doing a far grander work than he has been able to do in the past by putting into his hands the means of sheltering many an orphan in these present times.

A few months ago victorious Bulgaria won the sympathy and applause of all Europe and America. Now it is left all alone to struggle for its very life. Whether she brought upon herself this disaster, or whether it was caused by the jealousy and treachery of her allies, I shall not undertake to prove, but will leave it for the impartial historian to bring to light and to record.

CARRYING AWAY FLOUR DISTRIBUTED BY CHRISTIAN HERALD RELIEF COMMITTEE

MRS. FURNAJIEFF

Meanwhile, we beg the Christian people of Amer retain their sympathy for Bulgaria, not believin many false reports against her in the papers. they can hear her side and the official internat investigation.

Being myelf a Bulgarian, and having witnesse great misery and sufferings of my people, I c but plead their cause. Bulgaria will ever be gra to the Christian people of the world for all they done for her in the past; and in her present pre needs she again turns to Christendom for sym and help.
